Mr. PARRISH. I was thinking that the same Congress, or practically the same Congress, would be here at the expira-tion of the two years, and if they knew that they had to come back to this Congress and make another application they might hurry up some.

Mr. BARBOUR. There may be a few changes in the House during the next two years. [Laughter.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

Mr. BARBOUR. I will. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Did the bill of 1912 confer on these persons the same legal right that you would reaffirm in this bill?

Mr. BARBOUR. The Secretary of the Interior discusses that bill in a letter which is set forth in the report. I do not recall whether they are the same or not. I notice that he says the present bill is identical in terms with the act of April 11 1916, except as to the limitation of the time during which the entries are suspended."

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Beginning on line 9, page 2, the

the said entrymen are unable to procure water to irrigate the said lands above described through no fault of theirs, after using due diligence, or the legal questions as to their right to divert or impound water for the irrigation of said lands are still pending and undetermined by said May 1, 1923, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized—

And so forth.

Have not the legal rights been determined? They began in 1912 and before that, and here is the suggestion that the legal rights may not be determined until 1923. That would be 11 years after the first bill; what is the matter with the legal

Mr. SWING. If the gentleman will yield, the Colorado River, from which these entrymen must get their water, is not only an interstate stream but an international stream, and while we have been active in this matter of trying to settle the water rights, it has been 12 years since there has been a government in Mexico with which our Government could negotiate any treaty. There is a shadow of controversy or a claim on the part of the Mexican land of a right to some of this water. International law as expounded by Judge Harmon in the Rio Grande case denies that right, but as long as there is some such contention the rights are not settled.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Judson Harmon was a member of the Cabinet of President Grover Cleveland, who ceased to be President on the 4th of March, 1897. A long time elapsed between 1897 and the time when the trouble began in Mexico. During all that period Diaz was President, at the head of a responsible Government.

Mr. SWING. The opinion of Judson Harmon was in relation to the Rio Grande, but, notwithstanding the opinion, the United States proceeded to grant a part of the water of that river, rising on American soil, to Mexican lands. Our Government may take the same course with regard to the Colorado River, but personally I hope not.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the Government of the United States as long ago as 1912 by act of Congress, confirmed twice since that time, to give these people the right in this water, have not their legal rights been determined? Congress gave them

Mr. SWING. Yes; the right to the land. Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And is not the water included

Mr. SWING. The former acts did not include the water rights.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. When did the water rights first become involved, in 1916?

Mr. SWING. I do not think any of the bills undertook to change the rights in or to the waters of the Colorado River. might say that under these acts, as heretofore passed, settlers put up money and went to considerable expense making an investigation themselves. At first they thought that they could finance the construction of the irrigation system themselves, but it was found that it was too big a project for these settlers or any other settlers at that place to handle. Mr. Davis, of the Reclamation Service, is out there to-day making a final report; his preliminary report is already printed and is a House docu-

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That will not settle the legal rights.

Mr. SWING. No; but the situation is slightly different to-day from what it was before. They proceeded under the time given them by the preceding acts of Congress to make surveys at their own expense. In addition to the $20,000 that the Government put up under the Kinkaid bill of last Congress the various localities interested put up $75,000 in addition to that and the Government is now expending the same mapping out this lower Colorado River project, which will include a federation of the agricultural interests, of flood control and protection and of the power interests. Even the city of Los Angeles, 200 miles away, wants to contribute to the project in return for a share of the power.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The words in line 13 are:

If the rights are still pending and undetermined by May 1, 1923, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to grant a further extension of two years.

Has litigation been begun? Mr. SWING. Not litigation.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How are legal questions "pendunless an issue has been raised in some court?

Mr. SWING. This entire phraseology was adopted from the 1916 law so as not to raise any new questions, we thought. That phraseology was put in at that time because of the exist-ence of contentions by Mexican lands to an international water right.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Water in the Colorado River? Mr. SWING. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, there is a case now before the Supreme Court, which has been there for several years, involving the water of the Colorado

Mr. BARBOUR. And if the gentleman from Wisconsin will permit, I will say that so far as I am concerned I do not think there is any legal question as to the right to use the water of the Colorado River.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I do not see how there can be if the Congress of the United States by law has conferred that right.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not think there is any question. They have not conferred that right on Mexico. The water originates in the United States, and as long as it is flowing within our boundaries I do not think there is any question but that it is our water; but there are people who contend that as the river goes down into Mexico and the natural flow of the river carries the water into Mexico the Mexicans have some legal rights.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. They do not have any legal right at all until it gets to Mexico. This is all land wholly within the borders of the United States, and on a stream which at that point is also within the United States.

Mr. BARBOUR. I agree with the gentleman.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And Congress gives them the right to take it. Then, in 1923, how will there be any legal rights "still pending"? There is no litigation about these rights now.

Mr. BARBOUR. I do not think there are any legal rights, but if somebody took the case into court, contending that because the Colorado River flows through Mexico, Mexico is entitled to the flow of the water as it leaves the boundaries of the United States uninterfered with-if somebody undertakes to establish such rights in courts, then very likely in 1923 there will be legal questions pending.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And then the Secretary of the Interior can give them two years more?

Mr. BARBOUR. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is not inserted for the purpose of insuring an extension of time, is it?

Mr. BARBOUR. Oh, it is not limited entirely to the legal questions. It says:

If the said entrymen are unable to procure water to irrigate the said lands above described, through no fault of theirs, after using due dili-gence, or the legal questions as to their right to divert, etc., are still pending.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no desert-land entry heretofore made in good faith under the public-land laws for lands in townships 4 and 5 south, range 15 east; townships 4 and 5 south, range 16 east; townships 4, 5, and 6 south, range 17 east; townships 5, 6, and 7 south, range 18 east; townships 6 and 7 south, range 19 east; townships 6 and 7 south, range 20 east; townships 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 south, range 21 east; townships 5, 6, and sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 south, range 21 east; township 7 south, range 22 east; township 5 south, range 23 east, San Bernardino meridian, in Riverside County, State of California, shall be canceled prior to May 1, 1923, because of failure on the part of the entrymen to make any annual or final proof falling due upon any such entry prior to said date. The requirements of law as to annual assessments and final proof shall become operative from said date as though no suspension had been made. If the said entrymen are unable to procure water to irrigate the said lands above described through no fault of theirs, after using due diligence, or the legal questions as to their right to divert or impound water for the irrigation of said lands are still pending and undetermined by said May 1, 1923, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to grant a further extension for an additional period of not exceeding two years.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BARBOUR, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

RELIEF OF EX-SERVICE MEN ON NORTH PLATTE IRRIGATION PROJECT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 594) for the relief of certain ex-service men whose rights to make entries on the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, were defeated by intervening claims.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is the bill very long?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May we not have the bill reported?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the ex-service men qualified to make entry under the homestead laws, who were successful at the drawing held March 5, 1920, for farm units on the North Platte irrigation project, Fort Laramie unit, Nebraska-Wyoming, and to whom approved water-rental applications were duly issued, but who were prevented from making homestead entries for the lands covered by such applications because of the reinstatement of certain conflicting homestead entries, shall each have a preferred right of entry under the homestead laws at the next opening of lands under said project, for not less than 30 days before the date set for the opening of such lands to other entry: Provided, That this act shall not be considered as entitling any person to make another homestead entry who shall have received the benefits of the homestead laws since being prevented, as aforesaid, from exercising the right acquired at the said drawing on March 5, 1920.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think I can state the facts with regard to this case very briefly. A year ago last March, I think it was, there was an opening of public lands on what is known as the North Platte reclamation project, in eastern Wyoming. Several thousand acres which had been reached with the canals and were ready for entry and cultivation were opened in accordance with law. Under the law as it now stands, exservice men have preference rights in those openings, and there are so many ex-service men seeking those opportunities that the lands go exclusively to ex-service men. In this particular case I think there were some 85 tracts of from 40 to 80 acres each opened to entry. Those who sought to make entry were required to make a payment in advance to the officials of the Land Office of 5 per cent of the construction cost, amounting in this case to from $250 to $400. There were many applicants, and among the applicants there were, I think, eight men who, after their entries had been received and after they had gone on the land, were confronted by persons claiming that they had prior homestead rights to these lands, that they had made entry years before, and that they had not fully abandoned. In the case of all but two of those contests the ex-service men won. They proved that these parties had, as a matter of fact, no valid existing right. In the case of two of these men, however, the former homesteader was successful in establishing his right to the land, so he made the payment and became the settler, and that left these two men without any claims. They had remained in the locality for some time; they had, in fact, gone upon the lands and put some improvements upon them, all of which, of course, they lost when the former claimant had his claim sus-

All this bill does is to provide that when the next opening of lands on that project shall occur-and that will be some time next fall-these two ex-service men may be allowed to make entry without taking the chance, as other comers wouldthey would not in the drawing draw numbers that would authorize them to make locations.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MONDELL. Yes.
Mr. WALSH. How did it happen that these applications for reinstatement were not known at the time this land was thrown open?

Mr. MONDELL. At one time, quite a good many years ago, considerable amount of this land had been entered under the homestead law. The major portion of it was abandoned. It seems that in the two cases referred to the former entryman was able to establish before the Land Office the fact that he had not legally abandoned his rights, and that he still had a right which he could enforce. Possibly the land officers or the Reclamation Service should have known of that, but one familiar with the conditions can readily understand that at the time the opening was planned these men might not have been actually upon the land and still have a right that they could have enforced.

Mr. SINNOTT. If the gentleman will yield, the Secretary of the Interior states that the local land office inadvertently failed to notify the project manager.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; I know that he states that.

Mr. MONDELL. There were quite a good many old claims there. I do not know that it was anyone's fault, because in many of those cases nothing but a contest will establish the fact of whether an old entry made quite a number of years ago has been actually abandoned.

Mr. WALSH. But a little payment on the part of these two ex-soldiers would probably result in a withdrawal of this whole claim. Is not that what it was instituted for?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not know but what they would have been able to buy these people off. Mr. WALSH. That is why they made application for reinstatement.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I would not say that; the application for reinstatement may have been made in good faith

Mr. WALSH. Coming right out of a clear sky just before or after the passage of this legislation.

Mr. MONDELL. They were able to reestablish their rights, and they are now living on the land, making their payments, and it leaves those two men without any land. They are still living in the vicinity. It so happens, I will say to my friend, that last fall, in coming through that section engaged in the landable work of doing some fence repairing, I chanced to meet one of these gentlemen and saw from a distance the areas they had filed upon.

Mr. WALSH. That is not the spot where the gentleman met with the accident by falling off the hay wagon?

Mr. MONDELL. No; that is not that occasion. There was no injury done at this particular time.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I withdraw the reservation, The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

LOAN OF COTS AND BLANKETS, OHIO STATE ENCAMPMENT.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was H. J. Res. 106, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan cots and blankets for the use of the Grand Army of the Republic at the Ohio State encampment, to be held at Greenville, Ohio. in June, 1921.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if this matter has been referred to the War Department for report?

Mr. CABLE. Yes, sir; and the Secretary of War wrote a letter to the committee saying that he had no objection to the loan of these cots and blankets.

Mr. WALSH. Is this the usual form in which these loans have been made?

Mr. CABLE. It is, Mr. WALSH. This joint resolution is drawn in the usual form?

Mr. CABLE. It is drawn in the usual form and provides for bond and no expense to the Government.

Mr. WALSH. My impression was in making these loans they made them either to the local post or to the departments in the various States. This seems to be the executive committee of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. CABLE. Well, the intent is to loan them to this particular post. Of course, this is a State encampment, and it goes to the Grand Army of the Republic; but the executive committee of the particular post is to take care of the bond and protects the Government, and that is the reason the bill is drawn in that manner.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair bears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to loan to the executive committee of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Greenville, Ohio, having in charge the arrangements for the State encampment of said order, to be held in Greenville, Ohio, in June, 1921, such blankets and cots as may be required at said meeting: Provided, That ne expense shall be caused the United States Government by the delivery and return of such property, the same to be delivered to said executive committee at Greenville, Ohio, at such time prior to the date of such meeting as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of War and the chairman of said executive committee: Provided further, That the Secretary of War shall, before delivering such property, take from the said chairman of said executive committee a good and sufficient bond for the safe return of said property in good order and condition, the whole transaction to be without expense to the Government of the United States of America.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Is legislation necessary for this purpose?

Mr. CABLE. Yes, sir. In the Sixty-sixth Congress there were three or four of these bills passed. It was necessary to have legislation to get cots and blankets but not tents.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I know that a number of bills like this has been passed continually, and I had the idea rather that the War Department has had authority without legislation.

Mr. CABLE. No; the law provides for the loan of tents but nothing else.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Only tents?

Mr. CABLE. Yes, sir.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Cable, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

GRANT OF PUBLIC LANDS TO CONVERSE COUNTY, WYO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2428) granting certain lands to Converse County, Wyo., for a public park.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that the only really meritorious suggestion that the Secretary of War made as an amendment to this bill the committee carefully avoided including in the measure, namely, that Converse County, in the grand and noble State of Wyoming, should pay a dollar and a quarter an acre for these 3,088 acres I would like some explanation as to why we should of land. make this gift to this county, which probably is famous in the annals of that State, and certainly will be after this legislation

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts did not address his remarks to me; but if I may be al-

Mr. WALSH. I thought I would bring a reply from the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. Very briefly. In the old days of the frontier there was a very celebrated frontier post, known as Fort Fetterman, guarding the middle reaches of the North Platte, and some distance from that post in the hills a small area of very rough territory, covered with scrub pine to some extent, was set aside as a post wood reserve. It was the practice in the early days, if there was any timber in the vicinity of a frontier post, to set aside a small tract and reserve it for the purpose of furnishing logs, rails, and firewood for the post. In due time, with the growth and development of the country, the passing of the savage and of the pony express. Fort Fetterman was abandoned and the wood reserve was restored, in accordance with the law made and provided for such purpose, to entry and settlement. The wood reserve was not, however, of a character appealing to the settler and home maker. It was rough, rocky, and contained very little good timber. What timber there had been was upon the slope of the canyon, and had been denuded for the use and benefit of Fort Fetterman.

And so while settlers irrigated the valleys all about, and towns of considerable size and importance were established in the vicinity, and the community became prosperous and well settled, most of the area of the former wood reserve along Box Elder Canyon still remained public land. The Box Elder Canyon is exceedingly picturesque, the sides are highly colored, owing to the action of the air on the sandstone, containing a considerable amount of iron, which forms the walls of the canyon. The bottom of this very picturesque canyon is a narrow valley, and in the course of time the people of the surrounding region acquired the habit of going into the Box Elder Canyon, establishing camps there, and using it as a picnic ground. It has been so used for quite a number of years. The people of Converse County, and of the city of Glenrock, particularly, some miles away, have made much use of the valley for camping and picnic purposes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. What do you

What do you mean by a "city" in Wyoming?

Mr. BLANTON. I think, Mr. Speaker, this is so important a matter that we ought to have a quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. I will be very brief. They desire to take ad use this canyon valley for park purposes. The attitude of and use this canyon valley for park purposes. the Interior Department seems to be that, though the lands have no value, and settlers might have long since taken the land in 320 or 640 acre areas without payment or price, but have not seen fit to do so, inasmuch as there is an old custom that when we part with public lands we generally receive at least a stipend of $1.25 per acre, we should in this case also. This is what I desire particularly to call to the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh]. There is a law "under which areas attractive by reason of their scenic beauty may be set aside as national monuments." Whereupon the Federal Government proceeds more or less rapidly, less rapidly generally, to the care and development of these areas at Federal expense. And some said, "Why not make this a national monument?" The answer to that is that we already have quite too many national monuments which the Federal Government is called upon to care for and protect. Here is a small area of land of no value for agricultural purposes, attractive for its unusual scenic beauty, within reachable distance of quite a number of communities that desire to use it for park purposes. have not large sums to invest. They are willing to build roads and to improve the property, but they do not think they ought to pay $1.25 an acre for the land, and in that I agree with them.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MONDELL. If I have the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object to this colloquy

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] reserved the right to object.

Mr. WALSH. Are those two communities prosperous and picturesque?

Mr. MONDELL. The communities are reasonably prosperous and the canyon is picturesque.

Mr. WALSH. I notice that the town council—

Mr. MONDELL. Of Glenrock? Mr. WALSH. Yes; of Glenrock, and the Glenrock Community Club have both resoluted upon this subject?

Mr. MONDELL. They have.

Mr. WALSH. And voted unanimously to assist in every way to support and improve and keep up the park in case it is set aside for park purposes?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes, sir. The gentleman will note that this a transfer in trust for park purposes only and reserving to the Government all minerals that may be found. It is not a title in fee. It is a transfer in trust for specific purposes, and depending entirely upon the maintenance of the park for the use of the public.
Mr. KNUTSON.

Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. We have, by the way, a little park down in Oklahoma that we have been trying to get rid of for the last few years, trying to give it to the State of Oklahoma. It costs us from $7,500 to $8,000 a year to care and provide for it. No one down there wants it. They are perfectly willing to load it on the Federal Government, and under the law this area could be taken and made a national monument, and in the course of time, I suppose, we would appropriate for its care. I do not think we ought to do that.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield. Mr. BLANTON. Is not that about the first piece of real property that the gentleman has ever heard of Oklahoma turning down?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I think the Oklahomans realize that so long as they may utilize the property and Uncle Sam pay the keep, that is a very satisfactory arrangement.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not so much blame the Oklahomans, except that they ought to take the park as a matter of State

Mr. KNUTSON. What is the probable value of this tract of land?

Mr. MONDELL. It has been lying there since the beginning of time, subject to homestead entry, in tracts of 320 or 640 acres for some years without any payment whatever, and no one has cared to take it. If the gentleman can form any opinion as to its value from those facts, he ought to be informed.

Mr. KNUTSON. In view of the fact that the gentleman has added another word to our vocabulary, the word "reachable," I think the land has already been paid for, and I suggest the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] withdraw his observed.

Miss ROBERTSON. Can you tell me the name of the park you referred to?

Mr. MONDELL. In Oklahoma?

Miss ROBERTSON. Yes.
Mr. MONDELL. That is Platt National Park.

Miss ROBERTSON. Does the gentleman know how it was named?

I do not know how it came to be named. Mr. MONDELL.

Miss ROBERTSON. Does the gentleman know who was one of the best friends, if not the very best, the Indians of Oklahoma ever had?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, one of the very best is the lady who is now speaking [applause]; and, I think, probably the best.

Miss ROBERTSON. No. I speak of former Senator Platt, of Connecticut, and we have felt that it was of far more than a local interest that Senator Platt should be thus honored. If we had had what we thought was fitting for him, it would have been something far better and far nobler, for he was the friend of all who needed help, not only in the United States, among the Indians, but he gave his life practically for the We felt there should be a wonderful monument to Senator Platt, our friend, and it has been to me a dear ambition that I might help in making this one more worthy. [Applause,]

Mr. MONDELL. Many of us remember Senator Platt and honor and revere his memory, and in what I said I did not intend to criticize the people of Oklahoma. I was rather calling attention to the fact that they have a satisfactory situation, as they view it, in the present status of that park and benefit by it. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. May I call the attention of the gentleman to the statement of the Secretary, that it has been the policy of Congress in grants of this character to require payment for the land conveyed at the rate of $1.25 per acre?

Mr. MONDELL. The general practice of Congress, when we sell land to individuals, the land having no great value, has been to charge the minimum price, $1.25 an acre. That was the price that preemptors paid, and that is the price for which the Government has parted with land that had no considerable value. But this is not a sale of land to individuals. It is a transfer of lands in trust to a community for a public purpose, and in making that transfer to a community for a specific public purpose, relieving the Treasury of the possibility of expenditure in the future, I think the Government may very well waive the payment which is required where sale is made in fee to an individual, the individual expecting to secure some benefit thereby.

I do not think this is without precedent. My recollection is that in some cases we have transferred tracts of land either for parks or for the protection of the water supply of cities or towns without charge.

Mr. BLANTON. I would state to the gentleman that I would feel less inclined to object to the bill if the gentleman knows of any great future contingency in Wyoming depending upon the immediate passage of this bill, affecting his own interests or otherwise?

Mr. MONDELL. None whatever. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, that my interests will be affected one way or another by the passage of this bill. It is a matter that we have had before the Congress for some time, and I think a worthy measure.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose the gentleman would have no objection to an amendment to the bill providing that this cannon shall in the future be known as "Mondell Canyon"? [Laugh-

Mr. MONDELL. "The gentleman" would certainly object to that, because no request has come from the people interested to have that done. While I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for the suggestion, I think it would be much better to have it recorded "Box Elder Canyon."

Mr. WALSH. It might be named for Senator Mondell. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk rend as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public lands within the areas hereinafter described be, and the same are hereby, granted and conveyed to Converse County, Wyo., in trust, for the purposes of a public park, reserving, however, to the United States all oil, coal, and other mineral deposits within said lands and the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same, to wit: Lots 3 to 6, inclusive, and lots 12 to 19, inclusive, in section 6; lots 1 to 16, inclusive, in section 7; lots 1 to 12, inclusive, in section 18; and lots 1 to 4, inclusive, and the east half of the northwest quarter and the east half of the southwest quarter in section 19, in township 32 north, range 74 west, and all of sections 1, 12, 13, and 24, in township 32 north, range 75 west, of the sixth principal meridian; but nothing herein contained shall in anywise affect any claim or title heretofore acquired or asserted to any of the lands herein described.

Sec. 2. That the grant herein is made upon the express condition that within 30 days of the receipt of any request therefor from the Secretary of the Interior, the county clerk shall submit to the said Secretary of the Interior a report as to the use made of the land herein granted the county during the preceding period named in such request, showing compliance with the terms and conditions stated in this act; and that in the event of his fallure to so report, or in the event of a showing in such report to the Secretary of the Interior that the terms of the grant have not been complied with, the grant shall be held to be forested and the Attorney General of the United States shall institute suit in the proper court for the recovery of said lands.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Page 1, beginning with line 8, strike out the word "lots" and all of lines 9, 10, and 11, and on page 2, all of lines 1 to 5, inclusive, and the words "of the sixth principal meridian," on line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Lots 12 to 19, inclusive, in section 6; lots 1 to 16, inclusive, in section 7: lots 2, 3, 4, 7, 9, 10, 11, and 12, in section 18; the northeast quarter northwest quarter of section 19, township 32 north, range 74 west; lots 5, 6, and 7, the south half northwest quarter, northwest quarter southeast quarter, and southwest quarter of section 1; lots 1 to 15, inclusive, and the west half northwest quarter of section 1; lots 1 to 19, inclusive, of section 13; lots 1 to 8, inclusive, lots 11 to 15, inclusive, and lots 17 to 20, inclusive, of section 24, township 32 north, range 75 west, sixth principal meridian, containing approximately 3,088.26 acres."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to sec-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. WALSH. Add, at the end of the section, "This grant is made on the payment of $1.25 per acre."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Amendment offered by Mr. Walsit: Page 2, line 22, at the end of the line, add "This grant is made on the payment of $1.25 per acre."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in offering that amendment I simply desire to state that it is in accord with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, who has stated that in grants of this character-and I assume that he means grants of land to communities for park or recreational purposes—they pay the nominal price of $1.25 per acre; and I think we ought to see that this $3,860 should be paid between these two communities and be permitted to go into the Treasury.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the amendment. I would take the view in this matter that the land is practically worthless. It will never be occupied by settlers, and it can never be sold for anything in the world except the oil and mineral rights, which it probably does not possess and which are reserved under this bill, if any should be found. This park will be used by this little community and the public, and I do not see any reason why you should not give the grant to them without the payment of money. It is a burden on these little towns out West to build the roads to these parks. and as years go along thousands of people are coming in from near-by States and from States as far as Massachusetts in their cars and flivvers; and inasmuch as the communities are keeping those parks open for the benefit of the people traveling West, it seems unfair to ask that this little town, which I have no interest in and which I never heard of in the world before, and I dare say the gentleman from Massachusetts never heard of in his life before, should pay cash for this ground. These people want to open up that little park for the public and make it impossible for some tourist-promoting grafter to file on a part of it and set up a gate in front of it and charge people for entering. I think it would be an imposition on the people to charge $1.25 an acre for this land that is probably not worth 30 cents, and therefore I think we ought to let that land be opened, and we ought to give it to them as the bill is written.

Other States and communities have come to Congress asking that similar tracts be set aside as national parks or national monuments which necessitates an annual appropriation for their care and maintenance. In a case like this, the same purpose is served as in that of a national monument, the tract is thrown open for the use of the public, becomes a camping ground and recreation place for thousands of traveling tourists, as well as for outings of near-by folks and the local community takes care of the roads, trails, and maintenance. It is good business for Congress to encourage this sort of public spirit on the part of local communities. It is a good thing for the public generally to have these parks set aside and kept open for their use. when a community will assume the burdens of development and perpetual care of the park, surely Congress ought not to quibble about the payment of the paltry sum suggested in this case. I hope the House will vote against the amendment offered by my provident friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the amend-ent. I think that the language in the letter of the Secretary is probably a little broader than he intended to have it. do not recall having before the committee since I have been a member of the committee a grant exactly similar to this. is true it has usually been the policy of the department to require the payment of $1.25 an acre, but that policy rather obtains where a fee simple title passes to the grantee. There is no fee simple title passed under this bill. As the gentleman from Wyoming stated this morning, it is merely a grant in trust for a public purpose, which public purpose might be and is performed in a great many States by the Government through the instrumentality of a national park or a national monument. Now, inasmuch as the grant is for a public purpose, why burden this little community by making it pay $3,000 or $4,000 for this rocky canyon. That money can be expended for road work or for putting the trails into better condition or on some plan of beautifying and making the canyon more accessible to the. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 10 ayes and 55 noes.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Sinnorr, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SUBMARINE CABLES.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I have been authorized and directed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to ask unanimous consent for the privilege of filing a report on the bill S. 535, to prevent the unauthorized landing of submarine cables in the United States, and amendments thereto, as late as midnight to-morrow night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to file a report on the bill S. 535 as late as midnight to-morrow night. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if it is the plan to have consideration of this bill on Wednesday?

Mr. WINSLOW. I am not able to state that as a positive fact. One reason is that we will have to see what the action of the House is on that day, and also will have to confer with the Committee on Rules, which opportunity we have not yet had.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It might come up on Calendar Wednesday without a rule; I do not know where the call rests.

The SPEAKER. The call rests with the Committee on Banking and Currency, and second with the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think if the committee desires to call up the bill on Wednesday, they will have an opportunity to do so under the Calendar Wednesday rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman from Wyoming if it is thought that the House will adjourn over to-morrow.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. MONDELL. It is my intention to ask that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn over until Wednesday, due to the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is ill, and it is impossible to report out the deficiency bill. Mr. Speaker, I will ask unanimous consent now that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until Wednesday. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Winslow]?

There was no objection.

EXECUTION OF PENSION PAPERS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill H. R. 5585, relating to execution of pension papers in foreign countries.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman in charge of the measure to give us some explanation of why we should extend this privilege or authority.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, during the war and in fact at the present time we are represented in the Central Powers in Europe by the Spanish Government. The representatives of the Spanish Government who are representing this country have taken depositions and acknowledgment of papers in pension claims, which can not be recognized under existing law, and the Secretary of the Interior has recommended to the Pension Committee the passage of this measure. I will say for the benefit of the House that on March 3 last there was approved an act relating to patents which is almost identical with this act.

There seems to be need for this legislation. It has been reported out unanimously by the Pension Committee after due

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all applications for pension and affidavits made for use in connection with applications for pension filed since August 1, 1914, or hereafter to be filed, in which the oath was executed or shall hereafter be executed before or authenticated by a consular officer, or other representative qualified to administer oaths, of a Government acting in the interest of the Government of the United States, shall have the same force and effect as if said oath had been executed by the applicant before a consular officer of the United States.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I asked for time to call the attention of the House to the following: In the Washington Times for Thursday, May 12, there is a heading "War Risk hit by the committee." It mentions the report of the Parker investigators, wherein they criticize the War Risk Bureau and state that its positions in most cases are filled by those who have had very little experience. They call attention to the fact that out of 16,000 employees in the department 5,000 to 8,000 should handle this work. The report alleges that inactive, inefficient employees are kept there through political reasons.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Does the article say that there are 16,000 em-

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; but you understand I am not repeating this as a fact, because I do not know. I am only reporting what I see in the paper.

Mr. BEGG. I think the facts are that there are less than 8.000.

Mr. BLANTON. The Times says that the report of the investigators shows there are more than 16,000 in the Department of War Risk, where from five to eight thousand, including department heads, should handle the work. However, regardless of the Times's criticism, there is room for criticism there. I am not criticizing this department because it is under the present administration. I criticized it even when under the former administration.

I carried some soldier correspondence down there the other day to the new director which surprised him. It referred to the case of an ex-service man who is out in a certain western hospital. He had written that he had not been able to get his compensation for some time. I sent that letter to the department, saying that he was in this hospital, and wanting to know why the compensation was not allowed. The man was in needy circumstances.

The department said that they had called for a medical report but they had not been able to get it. I called up the health service, under whose charge it was at that time, in April. They showed that they had sent two different medical reports to the War Risk Bureau. I had their statement showing when these were received by the War Risk Bureau. Then I wrote a letter asking why this compensation should not be allowed and sent on because of these reports. They wrote back and said they could not get a medical report and that they had lost track of the man; that they could not find him; that he was lost; that one check which had been sent to him had been furned back and had been canceled, and that they could not do a thing until they could find the man and could get a medical report, and with that letter was attached the soldier's letter giving all of the information wanted. When I took that whole correspondence down to the director it convinced him of the fact that many of the employees who handle these cases merely glance at the letters they receive and answer them without reading them closely or going to the records in the case.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman state how long it took.

Will the gentleman state how long it took Mr. SINNOTT.

him to get an answer to his letter to the department?

Mr. BLANTON. From three days to two weeks, in different cases. The point I am trying to make now is a point which I have made here on the floor a number of times within the last eight months, and that is this: Down there in that big War Risk Building they have three different files for each ex-service man, each one of them kept on a different floor. You can write a letter down there to-day concerning one of your constituents who is in needy circumstances, who may be bedridden, who may have a wife and little children and be absolutely dependent upon the compensation that should go to them and the insurance that he should get under his policy. Yet two days after that, or next week, you can go down there and sometimes it will take 10 clerks a half day to look up your letter. It may be in one file on one floor or it may be in another on a different floor. You will have to go from one floor to the other to get together the component parts of that file. In my belief there should be just one file kept for each ex-service man, and kept in one place, and then they can find out exactly the record of the case, because then every letter that goes there will go in that particular file and not be scattered.

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. McSWAIN. I want to say as an ex-service man, as a man who has in his district a Public Health Service, No. 126, where tubercular ex-service men are treated, that I have had a great deal of experience personally with the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. On the third day that the present director became a director I applied to him in person to send a man to my district to see these men in the Public Health Service hospital who were said to be dying.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas

has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from South Caro-

Mr. McSWAIN. I said to the director: "I want you to cut the red tape and send sourebody in person to look these men in the eye and pass upon their cases, because somebody must take the responsibility of passing upon their cases, and even a subordinate upon the ground can pass upon them better than the highest paid official in Washington can do by mail.

Mr. McSWAIN. He not only sent one man at my request, but he sent two men, and the American Legion post in my town is greatly delighted with the work that these two men are rendering. I believe that so far as Col. Forbes can do, from my slight personal business with him, he is prepared to cut out the red tape and to go to the heart of the matter. I feel that I ought to say this in justice to him. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I would state in justice to Col. Forbes that I believe he is doing everything humanly possible that any one man can do; but one man can not look after and attend to nearly a million cases down there. It takes the cooperation of every single employee in his department. They must put some personal interest in it. They must have some interest themselves in the work that they are doing if our ex-service men are going to get the proper relief.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.
Mr. BLANTON. Yes.
Mr. MADDEN. It is said by everyone who has had experience in these cases—that there has been marked improvement in the service since Col. Forbes took charge.

Mr. BLANTON. I think there has been marked improvement to the extent that my colleague stated—if you go down there personally, he will act for you immediately. I went down there Friday evening to get him to make an order that every single tubercular patient that is in Hospital No. 25, at Houston, Tex., should be sent away from there immediately to western hospitals. He took that matter up by telegram and ordered men sent out who had been trying to get out for months. He will act promptly when you call on him personally, but the trouble is that there are thousands and thousands and thousands of cases down there that have never come under his personal supervision.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Has the gentleman's experience led him to a conclusion that would make him think that the delay in these cases is because of the Public Health Service and the War Risk Bureau failing to function properly?

Mr. BLANTON. The particular matter of health reports has lately been transferred from the Public Health Service to the direct supervision of the director himself,

Mr. BEGG. I understand that, but prior to this time?

Mr. BLANTON. My idea is from a close investigation of this matter that the employees themselves as a general rule-of course there are exceptions—have not that intimate personal interest in the matter that they should have—not the feeling they ought to have for the welfare of the men and their dependent families, who are entitled to the very best of service.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. DOWELL. Col. Forbes has not been in control of the office but a few days. Does not the gentleman believe that if there are employees there who do not attend to their business that there will be vacancies there in a short time if he carries on the work he has started?

Mr. BLANTON. I doubt it very seriously, because just what this paper says is true. It was true before you came into power and it is true now. There are twice as many employees in every single department of this Government to-day than ought to be there, and they are there largely for political reasons. They were there for political reasons when we were in power and they are still there now for political reasons when you Republicans are in power, and the reason there are still a great many inefficients is that if they are discharged they will come to you and say, "I have been discharged; go and get me my job;" and you go back and get a job for them, and you find it in one department or another.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If my colleague will yield, in justice to Col. Forbes, let me say this to my colleague: An order was issued, I think, by his predecessor sending these tubercular ex-soldiers from El Paso and Fort Baird to other places where the climate was not as high and where these men objected to going, and Col. Forbes rescinded the order and said they could stay at El Paso.

Mr. BLANTON. He certainly did. He rescinded the order theretofore made. But that is another case. I was referring to the general order transferring all tubercular patients from Houston to western hospitals.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again ex-

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Knutson, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair finds the last two bills that are on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent have not been there for three days, but inasmuch as we have finished the call of the calendar, if anyone desires to ask unanimous consent to consider either one of those bills the Chair will recognize him.

HOMESTEAD CREDIT TO WIDOWS.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House now consider the bill H. R. 70 on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report?

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 70) to allow credit for husbands' multary service in case of homestead entries by widows, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish the gentleman from Idaho would explain what this bill does and why it was not included in previous legislation?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed, I will say, by the last House, and it provides that there shall be extended to the widows of the recent war and those who saw service on the Mexican border the same rights that have been extended under the law to the widows of Civil War veterans and Spanish-American veterans, with the further provision at the end of the paragraph as to children of entrywomen that when the mother dies during the infancy of the child it may be assumed that the requirements of the law have been complied with, and patent shall issue. That is merely as to minority.

Mr. WALSH. That is the new aspect of legislation?
Mr. FRENCH. That is the new aspect of the legislation. I will say that it is based upon the experience of the department in cases that had arisen under the law touching Civil War widows and widows of the Spanish-American War.

Mr. WALSH. How many pending cases are there that this might apply to?

Mr. FRENCH. Oh, there is no way of knowing that. The law at present does not provide that the widows of the recent war and the soldier's in service on the Mexican border may take entry at all; so, of course, manifestly there are no widows who have attempted to acquire land under the law. The widows of veterans of the Civil War and Spanish War have had this right for years, but not so the widows of the recent war and of soldiers who served on the Mexican border.

Mr. WALSH. Did not we pass some legislation extending the time for the completion of their entries for men who entered the service?

Mr. FRENCH. That was as to men, but the bill the House passed as to widows failed in the other body.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the case of the death of any person who would be entitled to a homestead under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 25, 1919 (Public, No. 273), entitled "An act to extend the provisions of the homestead laws touching credit for period of enlistment to the soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States, who have served or will have served with the Mexican border operations or during the war between the United States and Germany and their allies," his widow, if unmarried and otherwise qualified, may make entry of public lands under the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States and shall be entitled to all the benefits enumerated in said act, subject to the provisions and requirements as to settlement, residence, and improvement therein contained: Provided, That in the event of the death of such homestead entrywoman prior to perfection of title, leaving only a minor child or children, patent shall issue to the said minor child or children upon proof of death and of the minority of the child or children without further showing or compliance with law.

The committee amendment was read as follows:

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. Page 2, line 2, strike out "their" and insert "her.'

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. French, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DRAINAGE WATER FROM RIO GRANDE PROJECT, NEW MEXICO-TEXAS.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill H. R. 4596.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4596) to provide for the disposal of certain waste and drainage water from the Rio Grande project, New Mexico-Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, of course the bill is not what the title now indicates.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The bill has been amended by a committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH. It has been amended so as to dispose of waters which are or may become available later on. I would like to reserve the right to object to hear a statement from the gentleman.

Mr. HUDSPETH. This bill, I will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh], provides for the sale of certain waters in the lower part of the Texas-New Mexico Rio Grande project. There is a system of drainage that has been almost completed up and down the valley. These ditches run quite a considerable amount of water. Certain farmers having no contract rights to the water have been using it, and this bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior can charge for the use of the water, but it does not obligate him to furnish any certain amount, and he may cease it at any time that he thinks the project may need the entire supply. It is to convert the surplus water into a revenue that will go into the project.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman will note that the committee has recommended striking out the words "waste and drainage." Does the gentleman object to substituting the word "surplus"?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would not; but the majority of the committee thought that it should not be done, because they thought it might take the control of the waters out from under the United States Government. And you will see from the letter that that is the contention of the Secretary of the Interior also.

Mr. SINNOTT. The committee did not want to give the interpretation that this water was waste and drainage water and subject to the laws of the State.

Mr. HUDSPETH. They thought it might take it from the United States and turn it over to the State, which we do not It is surplus water that is being used and not paid for.

Mr. WALSH. You are going to run into a controversy, just the same, with the language of the bill.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not think so, under the laws of Texas. Mr. WALSH. How about the laws of New Mexico?

Mr. HUDSPETH. This is altogether in Texas, the lower art of the project. It is not contemplated to cover any of part of the project. the waters in New Mexico.

I notice the words "New Mexico" are affixed Mr. WALSH. in the bill with the word "Texas."

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is known as the Texas-New Mexico project, and this is the part that is altogether in Texas.

Mr. WALSH. I thought it was the Rio Grande reclamation project.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It is what is commonly known in that country as the Elephant Butte, or Texas-New Mexico project. Mr. WALSH. Does the Secretary of the Interior think that this might involve some question by using the words "waste" or "drainage" or "surplus"?

Mr. HUDSPETH. He suggests in his letter, which is in the report, I will state to the gentleman, striking out the words "waste and drainage." The committee had already made that suggestion, and I agreed to it.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to considering the bill. The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The hair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill, Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

bill (H. R. 4596) to provide for the disposal of certain waste and drainage water from the Rio Grande project, New Mexico-Texas.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and empowered to dispose of the waste and drainage waters which are or may become available at or near the lower end of the Rio Grande reclamation project, New Mexico-Texas, which was constructed under the provision of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., p. 388), on the best terms obtainable without incurring any obligation for delivery of any specific quantity of water at any future time.

SEC. 2. That the proceeds of the disposal of said waters shall be ered into the reclamation fund to the credit of the Rio Grande

Also the following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 4, strike out the words "waste and drainage."
Page 1, line 10, at the end of the line, strike out "at," and on page 2, line 1, strike out the words "any future time" and insert "or for failure at any time to deliver any water because of the enlargement of the project, change of plan, or any other reason whatsover."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended to read as follows: "A bill to provide for the disposal of certain water from the Rio Grande project, New Mexico-Texas."

On motion of Mr. Hudspeth, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Clouse, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Wednesday, May 18, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

129. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation, in the sum of $3,200, for the improvement of the Billings, Mont., post-office building (H. Doc. No. 83); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

130. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to grant special allowances for maintenance to officers and enlisted men of the Navy and Marine Corps serving under unusual conditions; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

131. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill to provide for the Dental Corps of the Navy, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

132. A communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting contested-election case of Henry T. Rainey v. Guy L. Shaw, from the twentieth congressional district of Illinois (H. Doc. No. 84); to the Committee on Elections No. 2 and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows

Mr. BLAND of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2158) to provide for the monthly payment of pensions, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 69), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. VESTAL, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 4900) to fix standards for hampers, round-stave baskets, and splint baskets for fruits and vegetables, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 70), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WEBSTER, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 535) to prevent the unauthorized landing of submarine cables in the United States, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 71), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows

A bill (H. R. 4299) granting a pension to Mary A. Blair; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5701) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Hickman; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WALSH of Montana presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, as follows:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of senate joint resolution relating to the indorsement of the McFadden bill, to protect the gold monetary reserve of the United States by stimulating the gold production, enacted by the seventeenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana and approved by Joseph M. Dixon, governor of said State, on the 1st day of March, 1921.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

o the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

States in Congress assembled:

Whereas there is now pending before the Congress of the United States a bill known as the McFadden bill, H. R. 13201, which said bill has for its objects, among other things, the following:

1. To promote the production of gold and the development of the gold reserves of the United States, making such enterprise possible by overcoming and removing the existing impossible conditions as far as may be.

2. To enhance the production of gold for monetary purposes in the United States and increase the amount of gold which will remain in this country for such and other purposes, by producing a remedy for present conditions which have caused almost entire cessation in gold mining in the United States, resulting in a demonition, constituting a grave danger to the gold supply and narrowing the basis of the monetary standard at a time when civilization is most dependent upon the maintenance of such basis; and
Whereas the United States, together with the leading nations of the world, has adopted gold as the unit of monetary measurement, the standard medium of exchange; and

Whereas the gold-mining industry of the United States is lagging and the production shrinking, endangering the security of the monetary gold reserve, for the purpose of maintaining adequate protection for such reserve an urgent demand for an immediate remedy exists;

gold reserve, for the purpose of maintaining adequate protection for such reserve an urgent demand for an immediate remedy exists; and
Whereas the character of gold mining has in general changed from that of placer gravel and shallow rich quartz mining, with cheap labor, long hours, and cheap supplies, as was its character at the time the coinage value of gold was fixed, more than 100 years since, to that of deep, low-grade quartz mining, requiring expensive machinery and appliances, additional skilled labor, working short hours and the consumption of expensive oils and fuels, which, together with the present cost of labor, powder, steel, timbers, fuels, appliances, oils, and every other supply and material used in mining, have advanced the cost until the product of gold mines is rarely equal in value to its coinage value, and gold mining to-day is prohibitive, with a very few minor exceptions; and
Whereas the condition of the gold-mining industry in Montana and the entire western portion of the United States gives cause for the prompt and early enactment of the legislation proposed: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, That the Legislature of Montana memorialize the Congress of the United States for the adoption of said McFadden bill and the imperative need for its immediate enactment.

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana be requested to use all honorable means to secure the immediate enactment of the said McFadden bill into law; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this joint resolution be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senate and to the House of Representatives of the United States, and also that copies thereof be transmitted by the secretary of state to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of Montana, with the request that they use every effort within their power to bring about an accomplishment of the end and House joint memorial 11.

A memorial to the United States Senate and House of Representa-tives framed for the passage of legislation providing for the opening of the Belknap Indian Reservation and the allotment of the lands embraced therein.

o the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Whereas legislation is now pending before the Congress of the United Stats providing for the allotment of the Indian lands located within the Belknap Indian Reservation within the State of Montana, and for the opening up of said reservation to settlement; and Whereas the passage of such legislation would be vastly beneficial to the Indians resident upon said reservation, and to the inhabitants of the State of Montana, for the reason that it would definitely establish the tracts set aside for the Indians entitled to said lands, so that they might proceed to permanently improve and develop said lands; that it would likewise have a tendency to make the Indians resident upon said reservation, many of whom served this country as soldiers in the recent World War, more independent and self-reliant; Now, therefore, be it House joint resolution 1.

A resolution memorializing Congress for the passage of legislation authorizing the State of Montana to lease State lands for such periods and on such terms and conditions as provided by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United Etates in Congress assembled:

Whereas under the act of Congress approved February 22, 1889, entitled "An act to provide for the division of Dakota into two States and to enable the people of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, and Washington to form constitutions and State governments and to be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to such States, commonly known as the 'enabling act,'" the State of Montana is restrained from leasing State lands for periods of more than five years; and strained from leasing State lands for periods of more than five years; and Whereas for the purposes of properly developing the State lands and accomplishing for the State of Montana the greatest benefits from the leasing of the State lands granted to the State by the United States, particularly lands now considered as having real or potential value for stone, coal, cil, gas, other hydrocarbons, and other minerals, the said limitation of five-year leases contained in the enabling act is too brief and has resulted in failure of the State lands to be developed for said purposes on an equal footing with public and privately owned lands similarly situated: Now, therefore, be it be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the Senate concurring). That the Congress of the United States be, and is hereby, petitioned to enact suitable legislation amending the said enabling act and authorizing the State of Montana to lease her State lands for such periods of time and on such terms and conditions as may be from time to time provided by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana: Provided, however, That in the leasing of lands for agricultural and grazing purposes the duration of any lease shall not be for a longer period than five years; be it further Resolved. That copies of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of the State of Montana to the Senate of the United States, and that copies of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the House of Representatives of the United States, and that copies thereof be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senators and Representatives in Congress of the State of Montana.

House joint memorial 14.

Memorial to the Congress of the United States to enact such legislation as may be necessary to impose an import duty on chrome ore for the protection of producers of chrome ore within the United States.

protection of producers of chrome ore within the United States.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in the Congress of the United States of America: Four memorialists, the members of the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the Senate and House concurring), respectfully represent—

Whereas during the war between the United States and the Imperial German Government and her allies certain western mining States of the Union did develop and produce large quantities of chrome ore; and Whereas such production was at the request and for the benefit of the Government of the United States while so engaged in said war and so made possible by the price then prevailing upon such ores, due to the fact that foreign ores were not then being imported into the United States; and

Whereas since the cessation of hostilities such quantities of chrome ore have been, and are now, being imported into the United States at prices far below what domestic ore can be placed upon the market for; and

Whereas those mining enterprises in the Western States, including the State of Montana, have spent large sums of money in the development of chrome ore, and other like ores, and have been unable to operate their respective properties since the cessation of hostilities by reason of the large influx of foreign ores, and if such importation is to continue the domestic mining enterprises of chrome ores will be unable to compete with foreign producers, and large sums of money heretofore invested in the development of these mining enterprises will be lost to the American people; and
Whereas the only means of restoring such domestic mining enterprises to the profit of both the laborer and capital of the United States is to place a tariff on the importation of chrome ore into the United States, and in order to stimulate and keep alive such industry it is the judgment of this legislative assembly that a tariff should be assessed against all importations of chrome ore in such an amount as will enable the domestic producers of chrome ore to compete with foreign producers: Therefore be it

Mr. WALSH of Montana presented a joint memorial of the Legislature of Montana, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Montana, 88:

I, C. T. Stewart, secretary of state of the State of Montana, do hereby certify that the following is a true and correct copy of memorial concerning House bill 10925, known as the Sheppard-Towner bill, now pending congressional action, enacted by the seventeenth session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana and approved by Joseph M. Dixon, governor of said State, on the 5th day of March, 1921

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the great seal of said State.

Done at the city of Helena, the capital of said State, this 10th day of March, A. D. 1921.

House joint memorial 16.

Memorial concerning House bill 10925, known as the Sheppard-Towner bill, now pending congressional action.

the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the members of the Seventeenth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate and house concurring, respectfully represent:

fully represent:

Whereas it is the belief of this assembly that the deaths of 15,000 women who annually sacrifice their lives in childbearing in the United States constitute a serious reflection upon our humanitarianism and educational facilities; and Whereas approximately 150 mothers die each year in Montana from ignorance of natal hygiene or from inability to secure proper care and attention; and Whereas this number constitutes 2½ per cent of the total deaths in Montana, or 1 out of each 40, from all causes; and Whereas we believe that childbearing should not continue to be a journey into the valley of the shadow of death; and Whereas House bill 10925, known as the Sheppard-Towner bill, now pending congressional action, and designed to inaugurate a campaign for the education, protection, and relief of expectant mothers through a Federal central agency, and to offer Federal aid to States for localized campaigns, is proposed as a corrective measure: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we urge early enactment of this measure by Congress and its support by our own Representatives in that body,

Resolved further, That a copy of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and that copies thereof be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Montana Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALSH of Montana, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted a report as indicated:

A bill (S. 257) providing for an additional judge for the district of Montana (Rept. No. 57); and

A bill (S. 258) concerning actions on account of death or personal injury within places under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (8, 1183) to amend section 107 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as heretofore amended, reported it without amendment.

ROWENA S. BUMPHREY.

Mr. CALDER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 58, submitted by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Townsend], to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, considered, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Rowena S. Bumphrey, widow of Marvin H. Bumphrey, late a messenger in the employ of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. CALDER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 62, submitted by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Curis], to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

The amendment was, after the words "recess of the Senate," in line 9, to strike out the words "and at such time and place as it may deem necessary, the expenses of travel incident to the sessions of said committee or any subcommittee thereof to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-seventh Congress to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths; and to employ a stenographer at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject which may be pending before said committee, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate; and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ROBERT F. ROSE.

Mr. CALDER. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 64, submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Kenyon], to report it favorably, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, considered, and agreed to, as fol-

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Senate be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay out of the appropriation for expenses of inquiries and investigations, fiscal year 1921, contingent fund of the Senate, the sum of $30 to Robert F. Rose for reporting and transcribing a hearing held on January 13, 1921, for the Committee on the Philippines, United States Senate, on Senate bill 4785.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts (by request):

A bill (S. 1830) for the relief of the Consolidation Coastwise Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 1831) to amend section 237 of the Judicial Code;

A bill (S. 1832) to amend section 237 of the Judicial Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 1833) to provide for a uniform national bank currency; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

A bill (S. 1834) providing one German cannon or fieldpiece for the town of Vernal, Utah; to the Committee on Military

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 1835) to permit any national banking association to establish branches within the corporate limits of the city, town, or village in which it is located; and

A bill (S. 1836) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, and to amend section 5236 of the Revised Statutes; to the Committee on Banking and Currency

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 1837) to amend section 32 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

AMENDMENT TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KENYON submitted an amendment providing that no person owing allegiance to any country other than the United States of America shall be eligible to hold office as a member of the colonial councils of the Virgin Islands of the United States nor to hold any public office under the government of said islands, and that the income tax laws now in force in the United States of America and those which may hereafter be enacted shall be held to be likewise in force in the Virgin Islands, except that the proceeds of such taxes shall be paid into the treasuries of said islands, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL,

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment providing for the acquisition of a site and erection of a public building at Gastonia, N. C., intended to be proposed by him to the second de-ficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MARTHA THOMAS.

Mr. CALDER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 79) which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Martha Thomas, widow of George W. Thomas, late an employee of the Senate in the Senate garage, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H. R. 4803, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment is the amendment of the committee, on page 8, line 14, to strike out "$3,500,000" and insert "$4,500,000" in the item for transportation and recruiting, Bureau of Navigation. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before voting upon the amendment I desire to submit a few observations. Opposition to the pendbut in various parts of our country. There is a general feeling that Congress has not responded to the sentiment of the people, and is supporting a policy which strengthens the militarists of the land, and makes the reduction of armament by the naval powers of the world more difficult. We entered the war not only because of the aggressions of Germany and in vindication of the honor of our country but for the purpose, if possible, of ending war or lessening the probabilities of war. Senators and others have treated with cynicism or ridicule the statement made by President Wilson that we had in view the making of the world safe for democracy. And yet, if the world were not made safer from the horrors and evils of war, it failed in part, at least, in its purpose. We had no lust for conquest or desire for indemnities. We saw the world being destroyed by the red tide of war, and a civilization which was the fruit of centuries of growth and civilization threatened by a powerful foe. We battled to destroy militarism; the victory will not be complete if the hideous form of militarism still menaces the world.

Our country is not the apostle of force and imperialism; it is the exponent of freedom; it speaks for the rights of man and of men, and for these humanitarian principles which have guided those who sought justice in the world.

Mr. President, the overwhelming majority of the people of the world do not want war, and they would welcome any instrumentality, any movement that would mitigate the horrors of war, and, if possible, terminate war. They desire to address themselves to the processes of peace and to the achievement of those high purposes which will advance the moral and intellectual forces in the world. Is it possible that the Great War has taught us nothing, and that nations are to continue arming and preparing for conflicts-employing Governments only for warlike purposes? Is our legislation to be directed to war or to peace and the questions relating to social progress

Instead of talking peace and the means of establishing peace and securing the blessings flowing therefrom, we are devoting much of our time in the Senate and in the House to preparations for war. While some nations are sincerely striving to provide world peace and concord, others, or elements within them, are exhibiting the same materialistic and warlike spirit which it was hoped had been driven from the hearts of the people. But the people, the great inarticulate mass of the world, are trying to blot from their minds the scene of bloodshed and sorrow which the war produced, and to give their lives to the arts of peace, and to bring prosperity and happiness to the world. Shall we join the militarists and strengthen the movement to exalt the standard of a discredited and destroying creed?

I protest against this Nation becoming the military power of the world. We did not fight Germany in order to transfer from the Kaiser to the President the crown of military supremacy.

We have pride in the democratic victories won, in the industrial and economic conquests made, the social and political advancements secured, in the moral and spiritual progress which has made our country the foremost Nation of which history speaks.

There must be no departure from the ideals and splendid inspiration which have guided this Nation in the past.

We must aid the world, we must bind up the wounds of the people and turn their scarred and too often their resentful faces from the sordid and cruel things of life toward the beatific picture which the future presents to those who seek the truth and desire a divine providence to control the hearts and lives of men and nations.

But we are asked to support a military and naval policy which will impose a burden of more than $1,000,000,000 a year upon the American people.

We are now to embark upon a course which will cost this country annually more than it cost to meet all the expenses of the Government only a few years ago. The spirit of war is encouraged by these enormous appropriations demanded for the Army and the Navy.

Is it possible that we have learned no lessons from the war, and that we propose to spend more for armies and navies in the future than at any time in the past?

I do not want to be misunderstood. I am not asking for the demobilization of our entire Army, nor am I asking that we sink our Navy and construct no more warships. I am insisting that we seek to carry out in an international way what we have proclaimed our domestic or national policy to have been, namely, that of peace and amity with all nations. I am asking that before we become committed to a program that will require billions for naval expenditures that we seek in good ing measure has been urged not only on the floor of the Senate faith to procure an international convention which will call for international disarmament or a reduction and limitation of armament.

The signatories to the Versailles treaty indicated their desire to bring about world disarmament. Let us aid in accomplishing that manifested purpose, and not by force of our example constrain nations to return to the heavy task of preparation for war.

If we fail, if the great powers of the world will not join with us in restricting armaments, if they evince a purpose to return to the smoke and flames and horrors of the past, then it will be time enough for us to put aside the garments of peace and put on the mailed armor of war. I insist that we are the key to the situation. This Nation leads the world; its example will be followed. If our country speaks for peace, all America will join in the glorious symphony. Other nations desire to march with this Republic; they expect it to carry the banner of progress and to be the protagonist of the forces of justice.

How shall we respond? The proposition is to build the biggest Navy in the world, to tax the American people more than one billion dollars annually for our Army and Navy.

If after efforts have been made to secure an agreement with the naval powers of the world for a reduction of armament we fail, and they proceed to build navies and conscript armies, then we will take all necessary steps to defend our country and to meet any and all foes.

But the duty, the solemn and imperative duty, rests upon us to employ every honorable means to take the weapons of war from the hands of men and to place therein the blessed instru-

But the great powers of the world are praying that we join them in a conference for the purpose of formulating a plan to secure relief from the military burdens now afflicting the world.

Mr. President, I insist that the bill before us is expressive of the opinion of the General Naval Board and is a Navy Department measure rather than a progressive, scientific, and modern measure. It is the embodiment of an archaic policy and a disregard of the lessons and experiences of the war. The bill was prepared to carry out an old program—one desired in 1915—and is a slavish adherence to bureaucratic methods.

Bureaucracy is notoriously inefficient and irresponsive to liberal and progressive policies. If there is to be no agreement among nations for disarmament, then I favor a modern and efficient naval program.

We are called upon to carry out an antiquated naval policy, to spend hundreds of millions for capital ships without adequate provisions being made for a well-balanced Navy.

Speaking of the report of the General Board of the Navy, ostensibly dealing with the Borah resolution, but in reality defending the 1915-16 naval program, Admiral Sims says:

I think the report is very largely mistaken. It looks to me very much like a report the arguments of which are drawn up to prove what they originally believed. It looks to me like a document of that kind. As I stated informally a little while ago, so conservative are military people in their attitude toward new incidents that that is the first development we always have.

It is this report which we are called upon to indorse by this proposed bill.

I submitted to the Senate my views upon this report on the 24th of February last, and I then set forth some of my views upon the matters now before us. The report which I submitted is in part as follows:

"The committee's report seems to be founded upon the view of this distinguished admiral, and fails to take into account, as I view the case, conditions and factors existent in the world, which introduce meliorating currents and moral forces that compel a judgment at variance with that expressed by the board and the committee.

"This view seems to be that the war taught no lesson except that savagery and sanguinary struggles are eternal; that the moral forces in the world are too feeble to establish justice and usher in a reign of righteousness and peace; and that humanity is predestined to walk in the darkness to a tragic end.

"This view is a negation of the vital and progressive forces in the world, and forever condemns mankind to Sisyphean struggles. The report, in one aspect, proceeds upon the erroneous assumption that the resolution proposed to abandon battleships, and the majority of the committee proceeds upon the assumption that the question for determination is one primarily of the abandonment of the battleship, rather than supplementing that type of vessel by other craft operating in the air and in the sea. This misconception of the resolution has resulted in the fallure of the committee to respond to the question implied in the resolution. It is not the part of probity and good judgment to ignore the fact that the science of naval architecture and armament has been constantly progressing, and we may not even now say that the ultimate type in any arm of the service has been developed. The report of the General Board is a slavish adherence to the past and betrays a determination to regard with jealousy, if not disdain, the unmistakable lessons brought to our attention by the recent war and the scientific investigations more recently made by those who believe in the future of aeronautics and in the primacy of submarines and submersible types of vessels. It is bureaucratic and reflects bureaucratic influences and policies.

"Emphasis is laid upon the fact that the battleship is the basis of sea power; that it is paramount, and 'that nothing that occurred during the World War has served to change the opinion of the General Board as to the vital importance in war of the battleship.'

"In my opinion, the report of the General Board is the plea of an advocate in defense of a policy rather archaic in conception and at variance, in some respects at least, with facts and experiences developed at a later period.

"A careful review of this report leads to but one conclusion, that battleships constitute the principal unit of sea power, and that we must continue their construction in increasing numbers notwithstanding the enormous cost. It is admitted that if there is no agreement between nations to limit armaments, then, in addition to the Navy projected by the General Board, we must expend hundreds of millions of dollars for submarines and torpedo boats and the various forms of aircraft employed in naval warfare. It would seem from the report that the lessons of the war called only for greater expenditures for naval warfare,

"Giant dreadnaughts of more than 43,000 tons and costing tens of millions of dollars are to be built; but the board concedes they are impotent, or at least inadequate, without battle cruisers costing still more, and also various other types of surface craft, submarines, and airplanes.

"A one-plane navy, the report is compelled to admit, is incomplete, and it discusses torpedo-carrying aircraft and bombing planes and submarines, and concedes them a humble place as auxiliaries of the battleships, but as I have indicated does not ascribe to them that important place in naval warfare which the facts demonstrate that they occupy.

"I repeat, in my opinion the report of the General Board is reactionary not only in its consideration of the future of naval warfare, but in its complete disregard of all those social and moral factors which are powerfully operating in the world to-day.

"I have stated that the science of naval architecture is progressive and that a blind devotion to past types is fatal. On December 11, 1906, His Majesty's ship Dreadnaught was commissioned. It was the product of Lord Fisher's constructive genius and was hailed as the most powerful naval vessel in the world, though it carried only ten 12-inch guns and had a displacement of but 17,900 tons and a speed of 211 knots. This vessel became the type of the modern singlecaliber big-gun battleship. In our own Navy the battleships Connecticut, Georgia, New Jersey, Rhode Island, Louisiana, and Virginia, which were commissioned in 1906, and the Arkansas, Minnesota, Wyoming, and Vermont, which were commissioned in 1907; the New Hampshire, commissioned in 1908; and the Michigan and South Carolina, which were commissioned in 1910, were all mixed-caliber battleships, and upon the standard of the new dreadnaught type established by Great Britain in 1906 were obsolete vessels at the time they were commissioned. This is a direct example of the mistaken policy in pressing naval construction in ignorance of contemporary improvements in naval architecture and standard naval types.

"It was August 31, 1911, before the Utah, the first American dreadnaught, was commissioned. This was nearly five years after the commission of the first British dreadnaught. There are now eight of these dreadnaughts in commission, the Utah, Florida, Delaware, North Dakota, Wyoming, Arkansas, New York, and the Texas. The displacement of the Utah was 21,195 tons. Since then we have the superdreadnaught of 32,600 tons, and of these superdreadnaughts we now have in commission the New Mexico, Idaho, Nevada, Pennsylvania, and Tennessee.

"I do not agree with the General Board and the committee that the naval program of 1916 should be carried out, nor do I accept the view that a suspension, or at least a partial suspension, of that program would be unwise, or that efforts should not be made to bring about a reduction in armaments, not only in the United States, but throughout the world; and I submit a few reasons in support of my position.

"First, let me invite attention to the 1916 program. In 1915 the General Board of the Navy 'devised and recommended' a naval program; it was based upon the then existing types of naval vessels and the then existing theories of naval warfare. The board did not have the experience and lessons of the war; and the program was devoted to the creation of types of vessels then employed. This program was embodied in the act of August 29, 1916. The intervention of the war and the need of destroyers and submarine chasers to combat the submarine menace and to protect our battleships was so great that the entire construction capacity of the country was directed to the production of these fast craft, as a result of which the program of 1916 was held in abey-It is true that during and since the war considerable work has been done upon some of the ships provided by this program; but it is now proposed to proceed with the construction projected in 1915, regardless of its costs or the lessons of the war, and the Navy Department is exercising all possible pressure in order to consummate this purpose.

"The act of Congress of 1916 authorized the construction of 10 first-class battleships, at a cost not to exceed $11,500,000 each; 6 battle cruisers, at a cost not to exceed $16,500,000 each; 10 scout cruisers, at a cost not to exceed $5,000,000 each; 50 torpedo-boat destroyers, at a cost not to exceed $1,200,000 each; and 9 fleet submarines, 58 coast submarines, of which were to cost not exceeding $1,200,000 each and a residue not to exceed $700,000 each; 3 fuel ships, at a cost not to exceed $1,500,000 each; 1 repair ship, 1 transport, 1 hospital ship, at a cost not to exceed $2,350,000 each; 2 destroyer tenders, 1 fleet submarine tender, 2 ammunition ships, at a cost not to exceed $2,350,000 each; 2 gunboats, at a cost not to exceed $860,000.

"From the hearings before the Senate it developed that all the construction authorized by the acts just referred to has been undertaken, except that the contracts for 12 destroyers, 1 transport, and 6 seagoing submarines have not been let. Admiral Coontz testified that the bureau did not intend to build these, but desired authority to construct two airplane carriers at a cost of $58,000,000 in their stead.

"Though the act of 1916 authorized the construction of 10 battleships, there are 11 under construction, 1 having been previously authorized.

"The pertinent fact is that we have now under construction and in various stages of completion 17 capital ships, plans for which were laid down more than five years ago. These ships divide themselves into three groups, as follows:

FIRST GROUP.

"The average state of completion of the ships in this group is 71.46 per cent. These ships are of the superdreadnaught approximately equal displacement, horsepower, and speed, and all except the California mount 16-inch guns. California mounts 14-inch guns. Their completion would give the Navy 21 capital ships of the dreadnaught and superdreadnaught type of the most modern construction and effectiveness, which, with 21 second-class battleships now in commission, would give us a Navy of 42 battleships.

twelve 16-inch guns. They are over 10,000 tons heavier in displacement than the superdreadnaughts in the preceding class, have more than double the horsepower, and only a speed of 2 knots in excess of the five superdreadnaughts in the preceding class. There are no battleships or battle cruisers in the British Navy or the Japanese Navy of equal displacement and power.

"The average state of completion of these battle cruisers is 5.28 per cent.

"The part of the program covering the construction of destroyers, submarines, and auxiliaries is comparatively small measured by the cost of the capital ships.

"The authorization of Congress in 1916 was for ships the cost of the most powerful of which was not to exceed $16,500,000, and the execution of the entire program was estimated at approximately $544,700,000. Notwithstanding the limits placed by Congress in the act, appropriations have been made from time to time since then, until they now aggregate approximately $500,000,000 and yet the naval program of 1916 is not complete. In my opinion it will require at least five hundred millions more for the completion of the ships authorized in the act of August 29, 1916, and with their completion, as I shall show later, hundreds of millions of dollars additional will be required for the construction of undersea boats and for airplanes and the necessary naval airships, without which the capital ships would be of but little if any value.

In the hearings before the Senate committee one of the admirals, who was a leading member of the General Board of the Navy, stated that the cost of the capital ships would be $45,000,000 each. Upon this basis the ultimate cost of the 17 capital ships will be $765,000,000. When we add to this vast sum the cost of scout cruisers, torpedo boats, destroyers, submarines, transports, fuel ships, tenders, gunboats, and auxiliaries it is certain that the further cost for the completion of the 1916 naval program will exceed $1,000,000,000.

"But with this expenditure, stupendous as it is, the chapter is not ended. Additional carrier ships at enormous costs will be required, submarines of greater range and power will be imperatively needed, bombing planes, torpedo planes, and scout planes in large numbers will be necessary. A great flotilla of surface ships constituting an auxiliary fleet and the aerial and submarine vessels will cost hundreds of millions additional. More naval bases will be required, larger docks must be added, and hundreds of millions will be spent in harbors and upon naval bases for the protection of this great fleet which is to be created if the policy of the naval board is to continue unchallenged. I assert with the utmost confidence that the 1916 program, plus what will be imperatively needed to properly supplement it, including naval bases, yards, docks, and construction plants, will cost the United States more than $1,500. 000,000.

"Already it is planned to construct at Alameda, Calif., a naval base the cost of which will exceed $100,000,000, notwithstanding the fact that there is a suitable base at Mare Island, upon which $30,000,000 have been spent.

"Nor is the chapter yet ended. According to the demands of the Navy Department more than 120,000 officers and men are now required to man the ships already in use. When the naval program is completed at least 25,000 additional men will be required. This item alone will add to the naval budget tens of millions of dollars annually. At least 1,500 officers and men are required to properly man a capital ship. The requisitions of the Navy for the next fiscal year for maintenance alone amount to over $500,000,000. It is safe, therefore, to assume that for the maintenance of the Navy after the completion of the 1916 program an annual expense will be entailed exceeding that stupendous sum. And still the chapter is not closed.

"Vessels will become obsolete and tens of millions of dollars will be required annually to replace them. New types will be developed, and their construction will be demanded. A burden so staggering will not be submitted to, in my opinion, by the American people. It is to be noted that the completion of the 1916 building program, even by its projectors, promises no relief from further construction. We know that such a promise would be insincere and absolutely impossible of fulfillment. Indeed, the General Board desires at this time to supplement the 1916 program by adding thereto 3 battleships, 1 battle cruiser, 30 cruisers, 8 gunboats, 18 destroyers, 12 mine-laying submarines, 6 cruiser submarines, 4 airplane carriers, 3 destroyer tenders, and 3 submarine tenders, the cost of which would exceed $600,000,000.

"At this point let me say that I am not in favor of 'scrapping the Navy'; not do I support a 'little Navy' policy. I believe that our Army should be reduced to the utmost possible limits, but that we should maintain a strong and efficient Navy; but I contend that the policy proposed ignores past experiences, and commits the American people to an oppressive burden of taxation, and suggests a course that will subject this Government to criticism upon the part of other nations and to a distrust of our professions of friendship and international good will. Moreover, this projected naval policy will offer obstacles great, if not insuperable, to an agreement between the great powers to secure material reductions in armaments, military and naval, and to create an organization vital and potential in the interest of world peace, and for the determination of international controversies.

"In my opinion, the five battleships which are approaching completion should be finished. Work upon the remaining battleships, six in number, should be at once discontinued. One ships, six in number, should be at once discontinued. One cruiser should be completed, but the construction of the remaining five should be suspended, if not wholly discontinued.

"We have 300 destroyers. They are modern and the most effective vessels of their class in the world, and are entirely adequate for the present. A few submarines of the largest type are needed. At least one plane carrier, and possibly two, should be constructed within a reasonable time, together with the necessary complement of aircraft. Perhaps some additions of auxiliary craft should be made to the fleet. This program, in my opinion, should suffice for the present. I should add, however, that many of the vessels now on the Navy list should be immediately withdrawn from service.

"If this plan were adopted there would be an immediate saving to the Government of between four hundred and fifty and five hundred millions of dollars. The ultimate saving would be very great, amounting to tens of millions of dollars annually. It would result in a reduction of the personnel of the Navy and would subtract tens of millions of dollars annually from the operating expenses of the Navy Department. The upkeep of these huge capital ships is at least $3,000,000 per annum. The British estimate that the annual upkeep of the battle cruiser Hood, which is a smaller vessel than the capital ships projected in the 1916 program, is at least £539,000 per annum.

"The capital ships now being constructed are 860 feet in length, and their draft is so great that there are but few harbors wide and deep enough for them to enter. The fuel cost for the capital ships is enormous and the increasing scarcity of oil only adds to the already stupendous cost of operating a fleet of this character.

"The 11 battleships now under construction may be divided into two classes for the purpose of determining the percentage of completion. In the first class there are five vessels which range in state of completion from 44.5 to 95.5 per cent, the average state of which is 71.46 per cent. Four of these vessels, the Colorado, Maryland, Washington, and West Virginia, are being constructed in private yards, and the fifth, the California, which is nearly completed, is being constructed at the Mare Island Navy Yard. In the second class there are six battleships which range in state of completion from 1.2 to 22.3 per cent, the average of which is 15.53 per cent. Four of these vessels, the South Dakota, Indiana, Montana, and North Carolina, are being built in navy yards; the Iowa and Massachusetts in private yards. The Iowa is 13.1 per cent complete and the Massachusetts 1.2 per cent complete. The ultimate cost of these six battleships, which are less than 22.3 per cent complete, upon the basis of forty-five millions per unit will be at least $370,000.000

"As stated, the first group of battleships, consisting of the California, Maryland, Colorado, Washington, and West Virginia, should be completed. Work upon the second group of battleships should be suspended or discontinued. The average state of completion of the battle cruisers represents two and a fraction per cent of the cost, and the work upon the Ranger is only 1 per cent. My understanding is that the department in estimating the 'state of completion' took into account materials on hand but not yet used; indeed, the contracts for a number of the ships have been but recently entered into and the keels of a number have not been laid. Work upon the cruiser Saratoga, which shows 13 per cent state of completion, should be continued, but, as stated, work upon the remaining five cruisers should be suspended.

"The six battle cruisers are all of one type. They have a length of 850 feet, a beam of 101 feet 8½ inches, a mean draft of 31 feet, a displacement of 43,500 tons, engines of 180,000 horsepower, and an estimated speed of 33½ knots per hour. The battle cruisers are heavier than any of the 11 battleships under construction, although six of the battleships are to have a displacement of 43,200 tons, and four of 32,600 tons, and one 32,300 tons. The engine power, however, of the cruisers is to be three times that of the heaviest battleships and more than six times that of the lesser battleships. It is apparent that the battleships, modern as they are, are far outranked in engine power, speed, and general effectiveness by the battle cruisers.

"The keels of three of these battle cruisers were laid September 25, 1920, and one was laid in January, 1921. Of course, the purpose of the board is to construct a navy designed to be the greatest and most powerful in the world regardless of cost or of world conditions. The British Navy has but one vessel of the large battle cruiser type, namely, the Hood, which was launched in 1919; it has a displacement of 41,200 tons and is 2,300 tons less than that of the projected American battle cruisers.

"The armament of the Hood consists of eight 15-inch guns; whereas the armament of our projected battle cruisers is to be eight 16-inch guns. The speed of the Hood is 31.5 knots, and the speed of the American battle cruisers is estimated to be 33.25. The British have five other so-called battle cruisers, but they were launched between 1911 and 1916. Their displacement is only 26,500 tons and they carry eight 13½-inch guns. I might add that the British program, devised just before the war, included the construction of four ships of the Hood type and the keels of all were laid. At the end of the war the British Admiralty 'scrapped' the three keels, notwithstanding $8,170,000 had been expended in work upon them. This action was taken deliberately by the British Admiralty. Undoubtedly their position was influenced, if not controlled, by the experiences and lessons of the war. Yet, in the face of the position of the British Admiralty, the Navy Department and General Board insist upon the construction of six battle cruisers, exceeding the Hood in displacement, engine power, armament, and speed.

"On the basis that these battle cruisers are to have an ultimate cost of $45,000,000, their present average state of completion represents an average outlay of $2,376,000 each. It is altogether likely that the actual outlay is not nearly so great as indicated. The act of 1916 fixed the limit of cost on these cruisers exclusive of armament at $16,500,000. Upon this basis the average state of completion of 5.28 per cent would indicate an average outlay upon each vessel of $87,120. It is assumed, moreover, that the figures submitted by the Navy Department showing the state of completion of each vessel, refer to the completion of the hull and do not include the installation of the armament of the ship; and yet in the face of the fact that the British Admiralty scrapped the keels of three battle cruisers upon which there was an average outlay of $2,733.333 each, the General Board is laying the keels and is proceeding with the construction of six battle cruisers, and insist that there shall be no suspension of work, although the money actually laid out is much less than that expended upon the British vessels.

"Another fact should be taken into account in determining whether there should be a suspension of active work under the 1916 program. The cost of construction is very much greater now than it will be within the next two or three years. The contracts let for their construction are based upon the high levels established during and immediately after the war. These high cost levels operate as a disturbing factor in all industrial circles. They are impediments to economic readjustments and obstacles to a return to sound and just business and economic conditions.

"The contracts are under the cost-plus plan, a system which has proven in practice to make for waste and extravagance. It would be the part of wisdom, in my opinion, to suspend work upon all of the ships under construction, except the ones to which I have above referred, nor should contracts be let for the construction of those which I have indicated as necessary for the Navy until conditions in our industrial life have materially changed.

"It will be, of course, contended that a suspension of work upon the program will involve a considerable loss. The majority report of the committee states that the material loss from a six months' suspension upon the program would be between $15,000,000 and $25,000,000. Admiral Taylor in his testimony supported this view.

Admiral Coontz, when asked what the cost would be if construction were suspended, stated:

"I would have to figure on that, but the contracts have been let and some of the big concerns throughout the country are going ahead and the stuff is pouring in. and the greatest loss would be in the holding up of the contracts. That would have a very great effect. I understand that a number of our biggest concerns are practically depending on these to tide them over until they get more work, but that would be probably the principal effect of it.

"This statement is exceedingly interesting. It has been repeatedly charged that munitions factories and steel corporations and plants engaged in building war vessels were behind programs calling for military armaments and big navies. We know that in Germany the Krupps and the manufacturers of steel and war munitions were the most active propagandists in favor of imperialism and world power and mighty armaments and big navies. It is needless to say that the influence of these cor-porations and those controlling these huge industrial concerns were largely responsible for German militarism and the imperialistic policies of the German Empire; but they came to grief and brought their country to ruin.
"We are told now that a number of our 'big concerns' are practically 'dependent' on these naval contracts. I confess that this reasoning does not commend itself to my approval. These concerns are constructing ships which were to have cost but sixteen and one-half millions (without armament) at a present cost of forty-five millions each, including armament. Their interest, of course, is very great in the execution of the 1916 program. It means undoubtedly millions of dollars profit to the shipbuilders and the armament makers and the steel plants of the United has been advanced from $320 to $1,000 per ton.

"I submit that even if a suspension of construction of the entire program would result in a loss of $25,000,000, the gains would be very much greater. In the first place the cost of construction at a later period would be materially diminished, within a year it should be materially diminished. Within a year it should be reduced from 25 to 50 per cent. suspension of work upon the entire program for six months, even if work were then resumed upon every ship, would save the Government, in my opinion, considerably more than $100,000,000. A number of the ships, it will be remembered, are being constructed in Government yards and the loss there from a suspension of work would be unimportant.

"Again referring to the cost of maintaining our Navy, atten-tion is called to the estimates, or rather the requisitions for the fiscal year 1922. These requisitions cover maintenance, exclusive of appropriations for new construction, and amount to $495,515,731.47, and in addition thereto requisitions for the civil establishments of the Navy in the amount of $3,050,040, and requisitions for 'permanent annual and indefinite appropriations' of $13,197,696, making an aggregate of $511,763,764.47. In other words, merely for the maintenance of the Navy we are asked to appropriate over half a billion of dollars for the coming year. The amount asked for current construction upon the 1916

"The cost of maintaining capital ships now in course of construction is enormous. The indicated horsepower of the six battle cruisers alone aggregates 1,080,000 horsepower, to be produced by the consumption of oil. This in itself is a frightful waste when we consider that the total hydraulic power developed at Ningara Falls, both on the American and Canadian sides of the river, aggregates 697,000 horsepower, and the total potential horsepower at Muscle Shoals, Ala., is 100,000 horsepower primary, and 350,000 horsepower secondary. Millions of money have been expended to produce 697,000 horsepower at Niagara Falls which would otherwise flow to waste, and yet the Navy proposes to expend hundreds of millions of dollars to construct battleships, six of which alone will consume 1,080,000 horsepower, which will not be reproduced in money or goods, but will be utterly wasted, at least in the economic and industrial sense.

"The Federal Government has expended but $1,000,000,000 in rivers and harbors from the foundation of the Government until the present time. The great inland waterways and the enormous harbors, important and so essential to our commerce, have received but $1,000,000,000 in more than 130 years. We have expended upon our Navy more than $6,500,000,000 since 1884, and now are asked to assume a burden of from 500 to 750 or 800 millions of dollars for immediate naval construction and a continuing burden of hundreds of millions of dollars annually for the maintenance and development of our naval power.

"It might be interesting to know that 16 first-class battleships completed between 1910 and 1917 cost but $167,611,692, and that the 23 battleships completed from 1895 to 1908 cost but $139,-222,541; and the cost of all wars in all lands from 1793 to 1860 was but a little over $9,000,000,000."

The Navy Department adheres to a program five years of age, a program that was devised regardless of the lessons of the war, and we refuse to halt or to take counsel in order that we may appraise the lessons of the war and make proper application thereof in our naval policy.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] has not advocated the destruction of the Navy, the "scrapping" of the Navy; and those who favor the resolution which he has offered are just as patriotic, just as desirous of maintaining the honor of the flag as are the most militaristic and navalistic men who may be found upon this floor or outside of this Chamber.

Why should there be such a religious adherence, let me ask, to a policy that was framed in 1915? I have asked that question in the past and I propose to ask it again and perhaps again if by so doing we may engage the attention of the naval authorities and compel them to turn their attention from the past to a comprehension of the issues and the problems of the present.

The lessons of the World War, Mr. President, have revealed one thing, namely, that a one-plane Navy is wholly insufficient; yet we seem to be adhering to the plan of a one-plane Navy. There is but little talk of the submarine, of submarine development, of the development of the Deisel engine, of the metamorphosis which the submarine has made in naval warfare, but we are talking of dreadnaughts and cruisers and battleships-of the one-plane Navy. We seem incapable of looking under the water or lifting our eyes to the skies and attempting to construct a modern three-plane Navy. We were slow to utilize the airplane as a naval force and we have been hopelessly backward in the development of the submarine.

Mr. President, the basic idea of the 1915 program was the capital ship. Indeed, it was practically the entire program. The importance of airplanes is wholly unappreciated, and no

Let it be stated, Mr. President, that the aggregate cost of this program was to be approximately $500,000,000; but what is the situation now? We have spent $500,000,000 in its execution, and it will take more than $500,000,000 to complete it. Let me call attention to the progress which has been made under that program.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator from Utah talking about the 1916 program?

Mr. KING. Yes

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then the quotation of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] yesterday from the Senator from Utah that it would cost $1,500,000,000 to complete the program is $1,000,000,000 out of the way. I understand the Senator from Utah now to state that it will cost a half a billion dollars to complete it?

Oh, no. The Senator from Utah has not made the statement just attributed to him by the distinguished Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not attribute any statement to the Senator at all; I was quoting the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KING. I did not hear the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin, but I venture the assertion that the Senator from Washington misinterpreted his statement. I think this is what the Senator from Wisconsin stated, that approximately $500,-000,000 had already been expended upon the 1915-16 program, and that it would cost more than $500,000,000 additional in order to complete it, and then—and this is substantially what I said in the minority report to which I have just referred, because the manifest incompleteness of the Navy would be so manifest we would immediately be compelled to expend hundreds of millions to actually complete it-that is, add the indispensable complements-as a result of which the 1915 program would impose a cost of approximately $1,500,000,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President—

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understood the statement just now made by the Senator from Utah was that to complete the program would cost $500,000,000. I have turned to the minority report filed by the Senator from Utah, which was quoted by the Senator from Wisconsin, and on page 8 I find this statement:

I assert with the utmost confidence that the 1916 program, plus what will be imperatively needed to properly supplement it, including naval bases, yards, docks, and construction plants, will cost the United States more than $1,500,000,000.

The only discrepancy in the two statements is a billion

Mr. KING. Mr. President, as I have said, I did not hear all of the address of the Senator from Wisconsin. The Senator from Washington did hear it. Therefore, of course, I accept his statement as to what the Senator from Wisconsin said. However, the Senator has just read from the minority report which I submitted, and I reaffirm the statement therein made that the 1915-16 program, which was to cost approximately $500,000,000, will, in my judgment, cost $1,500,000,000. Then, when we have completed that program we will not have a modern or an efficient Navy, but will be compelled to appropriate hundreds of millions of dollars in order to have a modern and efficient Navy; and, in the meantime, because of our navalistic attitude, we will have forced Great Britain and Japan into the expenditure of large sums and into the construction of ships larger and more powerful than those provided for in this program. It is therefore quite likely, if we pursue the unwise course which this measure indicates, that when we have expended one and a half billion dollars we will have an obsolescent, if not an obsolete, Navy. Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN rose.

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey, who I understand desires to present a matter to the Senate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I ask unanimous consent at this time to present a resolution which has been adopted by the Women's Auxiliary of the American Legion of the Department of New Jersey, which has just been placed in my hands by a committee from that organization which is now here. The resolution declares against disarmament at the present time. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution by the Women's Auxiliary of the American Legion, Department of New Jersey.

whereas through the publicity given the views of certain well-meaning women the impression is gaining ground that the women of the Nation desire immediate disarmament; and Whereas there is no body of women with greater right or better qualified to speak on this subject than the mothers, wives, sisters, and daughters of veterans of the World War, such as those who comprise the Women's Auxiliary of the American Legion; and Whereas although such women, having freely risked and in thousands of cases lost their loved ones in the service of our Nation must therefore fully realize the horrors of war, the blessings of peace, and the desirability of disarmament when the proper time comes, nevertheless these women, above all others, are impressed with the facts: First, that it took the United States a year to prepare a coordinated Army and Navy for effective service in the World War; second, that had we not powerful allies fighting for us during that period of preparation, the result might have been disastrous in loss of lives and possible defeat to our unprepared forces; third, that primarily wars are not the result of armaments, but, contrawise, wars existed before armaments, and armaments are the result of the desire not to be defeated in probable wars; fourth, that the present international situation, as well as past history, gives no promise that the dreams of the ultrapacifists are about to be realized and the days of war to end; and fifth, that other nations, some of whose armaments exceed that of the United States, are not disarming: Now, therefore, be it fifth, that other nations, some of whose armaments exceed that of the United States, are not disarming: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the women who have been so closely touched by war prefer to pay for armament of a size and efficiency which will make all nations hesitate to attack us, rather than to pay vastly more dearly not only in money, but in lives, in a war of unprepared against well-prepared forces; and be it

Resolved, That these women believe that it is better to risk the real or fancied dangers of an Army and Navy composed of our own citizens, rather than to lay eurselves open to the dangers from the military and naval forces of other powers; and be it

Resolved, That these women, as represented by the Women's Auxiliary American Legion, Department of New Jersey, while urging every reasonable means for hastening the day when disarmament may be possible, and while praying to Almighty God that such a time may come soon, do nevertheless hereby respectfully petition the President of the United States of America and the Congress thereof to maintain an adequate and efficient military and naval force which will be capable of fully protecting the rights and ideals of these United States as long as the present need for such forces continues to exist; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, to the representatives, to the national commander of the Senate and House of Representatives, to the national commander of the American Legion, and to the public press.

Claire Oliphant (Mrs. O. D.), president Women's Auxiliary of the American Legion, Department of New Jersey; Mrs. E. F. Uliuda Eberstadt, first vice president; Mrs. B. S. Bemmer, secretary; Mrs. L. W. Smith, treasurer; Mrs. R. E. Shoemaker, executive committee; Mrs. B. Shoemaker, executive committee; Mrs. A. L. Parker, executive committee; Mrs. Amanda Hyde Barnes, executive committee; Mrs. Amanda Hyde Barnes, executive committee; Mrs. Amanda Hyde

Mr. KING. Mr. President, of course it is a mere coincidence that the distinguished Senator from New Jersey should ask me to yield in the course of an impromptu address which I am making in favor not of disarmament but of a rational naval policy in order that a plea against disarmament might be submitted.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will say to the Senator that I had no intention of presenting the resolutions in any relation whatsoever to his speech. It was simply a duty that I had to perform for these ladies who are here, and I thank the Senator again for his courtesy.

Mr. KING. I have no doubt it was a very pleasant duty; I should have been delighted to discharge it myself; but I say it is a remarkable coincidence, and of course it is only a coincidence that this particular petition for armament for a war policy-because that is the effect of it-for an adherence to a navalistic policy which imposes billions of expenditures in the long run without commensurate results, should be offered during the course of my remarks. It is a pleasant diversion. I regret that I shall not find time during the day to address myself to its incongruities and false premises and imperfect deductions.

Mr. President, let me say by way of interpolation that in certain manufacturing districts in the United States where there are munition plants and powder factories and navy yards and naval plants petitions can readily be secured, signed by hundreds if not thousands, in favor of a powerful Navy and the expenditure of hundreds of millions annually for war or fighting ships. I have no doubt that Mr. Krupp in his lifetime and his daughter Bertha upon his death and the munition workers in the factories and the officers of corporations in Germany would have daily signed petitions in favor of a great German navy and a mighty army. We know that a militaristic and navalistic policy dominated Germany and burdened the people so that every workingman carried a soldier upon his back. Are there some here who are endeavoring to transplant that spirit to this Republic? Is this spirit of militarism to be regnant here and at this hour when the world is bankrupt and famine and want show their horrid forms in many lands? Those who seek territorial conquests or imperialistic policies or who are blind to the needs of the world will advocate big navies and standing armies and warlike preparations.

Mr. President, I was calling attention to the 1916 program and to the condition of completion of those ships.

On May 10 of this year progress was reported by the Navy Department, the Bureau of Construction and Repair, with respect to the percentage of completion of these battleships.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him before he goes into that building program?

Mr. KING. I yield. Mr. NORRIS. The Senator was talking, just before that, about the militaristic spirit which has developed. He was referring to Germany. I presume the Senator is aware that the militaristic spirit not only did what the Senator said it was doing, but that it pervaded society; it became part and parcel of almost every citizen's life. Every German citizen was not only carrying a soldier on his back, but he grew up to look with reverence upon the men who carried a sword or was dressed in a uniform; and that spirit can not long prevail until the fellow who carries a sword and is dressed in a uniform is affected by it also, and he assumes unto himself a right and a privilege that ordinary persons do not possess, and that is acquiesced in by the civilians until the military spirit is developed and diffused through the people generally to such an extent that the ordinary person gets off the sidewalk when a man with a sword comes along. He does not assert even the rights that the law gives him. He usually submits to it willingly, because he has inculcated in him part of that spirit.

Mr. KING. I assent to the statement which the Senator

Mr. NORRIS. I presume it is well known that the entire German people was pervaded with that kind of spirit. It became part and parcel of every man's life and every woman's Now, I should like to get the Senator's idea as to whether or not Germany is any exception in that respect to any other people under like conditions. If it were carried on to the same extent, would not the same result come here in free America or in Great Britain or in any other country? Is it not a law of nature that such results take place if we go to the extremes in military lines?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Nebraska quite accurately appraises human nature and the deep-rooted characteristics of the German race. The German people, I think, are among the greatest people in the world; they love music and poetry and the finer things of life. They gave to the world poets and philosophers and musicians and educators whose names will live through the centuries. Inherently, they differed but little from other progressive and vigorous races, The war spirit, the militaristic spirit, was a development. Of course, when Napoleon invaded Germany and conquered States and kingdoms inhabited by the German people it developed a militant spirit, or, rather, a spirit of nationalism; but still the German people were not more inclined for war than their contemporaries. The German people devoted themselves to husbandry, to agriculture, to chemistry, to the development of the physical sciences, to art and music, and the civilizing forces in the world. Their progress during the half century preceding the World War was phenomenal and is a tribute to the greatness of the German people.

Bismarck's policy was founded upon the hegemony of the German Empire in Europe. He wanted to consolidate the German States into a strong imperial government. He sought to obtain a portion of the territory belonging to Denmark, and he waged an aggressive war upon Austria, and provoked a war with France—a militaristic party, a pan-German element developed and finally controlled the policies of the Empire. The false philosophy of Nietzsche and Treitchske and Bernhardi was accepted by many and the splendid and sublime philosophy of Kant was disregarded. The desire for power, the incarnation of the State, the callous disregard of the rights of the people and of small States, the crass materialism which resulted clouded the minds of the people and led them into the paths of militarism. Even the schools were dominated by this false philosophy and this still more dangerous psychology. Kaiser saw that if he could control education he could more readily convert the peace-loving people of Germany into the support of a militaristic and imperialistic policy. He accordingly attempted to bring the entire educational system of Germany under the control of the bureaucratic forces of Berlin. There are some Americans to-day who are determined to bring our educational system under the bureaucratic and paternalistic forces of Washington.

Let me say, in parentheses, that while most other nations in the world are decentralizing, our Nation is centralizing. We are trying to build up an oppressive paternalism in Washington, enter into the States, direct the lives and thoughts of the people, control their system of education, and prescribe their conduct. All roads are to lead to Washington and all power is to be centered in Washington. As all roads, physical and otherwise, led to Rome in the days of Rome's primacy, so now the imperialists and the paternalists of our own country would have all roads lead to Washington and all power be conferred upon Federal officials at Washington and all light for the guidance of the people emanate from Washington.

It is contended that the people are incompetent for self-gov-ernment. This view implies the incompetency of the people for self-government. So here in the United States is a school of thought which seeks to develop the same policy of centralization which was enforced by the imperialists of Germany and which resulted in the World War and in the humiliation of the German Empire. Centralization of political power has always developed a militaristic spirit. Perhaps it may be said that militarism tends to a consolidation of political power in the hands of a few or a class. However that may be, democracy is the antithesis of militarism. Wherever you find an autocratic government you will find a strong military government.

Russia illustrates the point. The Czar was an autocrat. He ruled the Russian people in a despotic manner. his will by the bayonet and the sword. In time intellectualism began to undermine his Government; the people shook off their chains, lifted their eyes to the sun, and perceived that the earth and its joys and blessings were for them as well as for others, and that freedom was a patrimony to be enjoyed by all.

The Czar was overthrown, and the provisional government of Kerensky was established; but the new-found freedom dazzled the people, they were not yet steady upon their feet and yielded to another autocratic force more merciless and cruel than that which had been overthrown. Communism, hideous and bloody, came, and it has drenched Russia with blood and maintained with bayonet and sword. It demanded that a small minority should govern the "proletariat," that the bourgeoisie should be destroyed, and that a red army should be formed to impose its will upon the people.

This minority, not more than 150,000, led by Lenin and Trotski are exercising to-day a despotic sway more oppressive than was ever exercised by the Czar. The soldier and the bayonet, the application of force and power, these are the instruments of imperialism or "proletarian communism." Some persons who had opposed the Czar and fought for democracy and for liberty immediately became seized with a desire for power, and they contended for an army to enforce the mandates of the communistic government.

So, Mr. President, wherever you find centralization of power in a government, you find the militaristic spirit following. If the American people build up a great centralized government in Washington, the militaristic spirit will follow as the night follows the day, and we will be demanding big armies and great navies regardless of the condition of the world.

We are departing from the spirit of our Government and overriding the States. Bureaucracy is gaining in power in our land; it will demand a big Navy, a strong Army, and will be proud to have the trappings of military power. So, Mr. President, replying to the Senator from Nebraska, the German people present no new phase in life or character. The French people for years were militaristic. Under Napoleon they developed militarism. The Austrian people were militaristic. The Turks were militaristic. They had an autocratic Government, and that autocratic Government was buttressed by bayonets and swords and the fighting units of the army.

Now, Mr. President, I return to what I was stating concerning the percentage of completion of the 1916 program. The battleship Massachusetts is one of the 1915-16 ships. The percentage of completion of that ship on February 10 was 1.02 I thought I had the date when the contract was entered into, but I do not seem to have that data here. At any rate, Mr. President, the contract for the construction of the battleship Massachusetts was not entered into, as I recall, until a few months ago.
Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield. Mr. NORRIS. To what battleship does the Senator refer?

Mr. KING. The Massachusetts.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish the Senator would tell us what has become of the other battleship Massachusetts. We had a battleship Massachusetts, did we not?

Mr. KING. Yes. Mr. NORRIS. Where is that battleship?

Mr. KING. I must confess my inability to answer the Sen-

Mr. NORRIS. Should not this new battleship be named the Massachusetts the second? The Senator ought to give the Senate the information about the other battleships. It has been only a few years since that was one of the proudest vessels that We are not going to have two battleever floated on the water. ships named Massachusetts?

Mr. KING. I think not. I regret, Mr. President, that I can not give the Senator the information for which he is inquiring, which I ought to possess.

I wish the Senator in charge of the bill, who is far more familiar with the history of our battleships and our naval development than I am, would impart that information to the Senate. I should like to know myself.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The old battleship Massachusetts is one of the oldest battleships in the Navy and it is to be put out of commission. The name is to be bestowed on the new one.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him again, it would be interesting at this stage of the discussion, then, it seems to me, to find out just how long the battleship Massachusetts the first was in commission, and whether, as a matter of fact, it was not as great a battleship as was constructed in its day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will say to my friend from Nebraska that the battleship which we are building now, at a cost of between forty and fifty million dollars, will be obsolete in five years from now if we provoke Great Britain and Japan to adopt a navalistic policy which calls for super Hoods, which have a displacement of 55,000 tons and 20-inch guns. The Massachusetts will have 16-inch guns.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator is getting to the point I was trying to lead him to, that by the time this program we have started out on so bravely, now a few years old, but not completed, is completed these ships, if history repeats itself, will be obsolete.

Does the Senator think that we can announce to the world that we are going into this great program, constructing the biggest fleet in the world, without inciting other nations to get into that race? Is it not unreasonable to expect such an outcome? Are the other nations going to remain idle while we proceed and use all our resources in building up the biggest Navy of the world; and if they get into it, will it not be necessary for us every year to revise our plans, and instead of building a battleship that costs $40,000,000 build one that costs $100,000,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Schator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to call attention to the dimensions of this old ship. I appreciate the argument made by the Senator from Nebraska, or suggested by him, that we ought to rely on such ships as the old Massachusetts and not build new ones, because possibly at some future time the new ones might in their turn become out of date. I can not look into the future and see to what extent naval development may go. That is a matter of hypothesis and conjecture. Modern ships of the first line of all naval powers displace as high as 40,000 and 50,000 tons. The old Massachusetts had a displacement of only 11,688 tons, a draft of 26.5 feet, and was 350 feet and 11 inches long. So it is very easy to see the position the United States would be in if we adopted the policy that is argued for by the opponents this bill and rely upon ships of that class.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator from Utah again?

Mr. KING. I yield. Mr. NORRIS. Of course, if we knew that within the next year or two years we were going to engage in a war there might be some reason, perhaps, to back us up in our determination to outstrip the other nations of the world and build the biggest battleships. But history has shown—and it seems to me that the case of the Massachusetts illustrates it, and that is the reason why I brought it out in my question-that the battleship which is constructed to-day and put into commission will be out of date to-morrow, so that if we start out on the theory that we are going to get the biggest navy in the world just for the purpose of having the biggest mavy in the world, we will find by the time we have completed it that our entire Navy is out of date. It seems to me that we should at least divide it up and have a few ships that would be up to date instead of trying to build them all at once and let them all go out of date without anything left to meet the newer ships that other nations will build.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not want to protract the debate, but I can not refrain from making the remark that under this bill, as reported by the Senate committee, which is identical with the bill as passed by the House in so far as provision for the construction of ships of the line is concerned, we will have, to all intents and purposes, a naval holiday. It would be impossible, with the appropriations provided in the bill, to proceed at more than 25 per cent of the normal rate of progress in the construction of battleships.

The policy of keeping the Navy up to date, of course, was settled a long time ago. One small ship of the American Navy to-day could very quickly destroy and sink to the bottom of the sea the entire United States fleet of 1861. But I apprehend that there are very few people who would claim that we should have continued, in the face of the progress of the world, to rely upon the ships of a previous

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington says, if I understand him correctly, that when we complete this 1915-16 program we may have a naval holiday.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; the Senator misunderstood me. I said we will have a naval holiday now, so far as construction is concerned, if this bill is passed as reported by the Senate committee, because there is not money enough provided in the bill—the Senate committee bill being the same as the bill that passed the House—to proceed with the construction of these battleships except at a rate of 25 per cent of the normal rate of construction, the purpose of the department being to use a sufficient amount of the appropriation provided for construction to proceed with the construction of battle cruisers, of which the United States has none at all now, at a rate of 60 per cent of the normal rate of progress of construction, and proceed with the construction of light cruisers at the rate of 50 per cent, leaving only sufficient funds to proceed with the construction of the battleships at a rate of 25 per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. If the method and the money provided in the pending bill constitute a naval holiday, if the expenditure yearly of $400,000,000 on the Navy is a holiday, I wish the Senator would tell us how much the expenditure would be when we tinish the holiday and get into actual business.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I was about to say that I did not understand the definition of "holiday" as it has been supplied to us by the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to answer the question just asked by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KING. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It would take about $80,000,000 additional to proceed with construction at the normal rate.

Mr. NORRIS. Then the difference between a naval holiday and a naval working-day is, in round numbers, $100,000,000. I suppose that is assuming the other nations stay out of the race. It would probably be increased a few dollars if they get into it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it does not pay to palter with words. What is a "naval holiday"? What do we mean by that? The Senator from Washington is advocating with his splendid ability the completion of the 1915-16 program, which will require an expenditure, as I have heretofore stated, of $1,500,000,000. We have expended about $500,000,000 toward its execution and we are to continue appropriations until there have been expended substantially $1,500,000,000; and yet the Senator says we are now in the midst of a splendid and glorious holiday.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I did not.

Mr. KING. I strike out the adjectives and leave the holiday. Mr. POINDEXTER. I am glad the Senator strikes out the adjectives, because they form the most striking part of the Senator's statement.

Mr. KING. That may be true, because the word "holiday" is quite meaningless to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, because the Senator's statement may, without some reflection on the part of the Senate and the country, create an erroneous impression, I wish to call his attention to the fact that there is a discrepancy of $1,000,000,000 between his statement of to-day and his statement of yesterday. I wish to make this statement on my own account-

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean my statement of yesterday?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; the statement that was read from the Senator's minority report that to complete the 1916 program would cost $1,500,000,000. This morning the Senator stated it would cost $500,000,000, leaving out the $1,000,000,000, rather a reckless use of figures in a matter of so much importance as this, and upon which judgment is asked on the basis of cost.

Mr. KING. The recklessness exists with the distinguished Senator from Washington, not with the Senator from Utah,

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no; not at all-

Mr. KING. Please let me complete this sentence and then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make this statement and put it against the statement of the Senator from Utah, that to complete the 1916 program will not cost an additional $500,000,000, much less the $1,500,000,000 which the Senator stated it would cost.

Mr. KING. I repeat that the Senator from Washington is reckless in attributing recklessness to the statement which I made. The Senator did me the honor to read an excerpt from the minority report which I submitted. In that minority report I stated the limitation provided by the act of Congress of 1916 as to the cost of that program, and I stated that notwithstanding the limitation the completion of the ships authorized would approximate $1,000,000,000 and that with the supplemental vessels which would be imperatively needed, plus the naval bases which would be required in virtue of that construction, the cost would be $1,500,000,000 when completed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It will not cost within $1,000,000,000 of the figure just stated by the Senator from Utah.

The Senator knows that we have already, upon Mr. KING. the program which is the apple of his eye, appropriated nearly $500,000,000. Why does he not stop if the program is completed? We have spent slightly more than $500,000,000 under that program and the Senator is here demanding still more. The Senator now knows and is compelled to admit that he, as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, will be knocking at the door of Congress for $500,000,000 more to complete that pro-

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thought the Senator said it would be $1,500,000,000.

I regret that the Senator has not learned Mr. KING. arithmetic; he has so many other accomplishments. We have already spent over $500,000,000; it will cost approximately $500,000,000 to complete the ships mentioned in the program, and when we add to that what I stated in my report we will have expended substantially $1,500,000,000 for the completionnot the completion from now on until the ships shall be put into commission but for the completion of the program. Moreover, the Senator is now asking for millions more for airplane carriers and naval bases, which will swell the figures which he insists comprise the 1916 program.

I make the prophecy now to the able Senator from Washington that the program for which he is pleading to-day, plus the indispensable accessories, will cost the United States Government more than $1,500,000,000. In that statement I am not taking into account the annual maintenance charges that will be augmented by virtue of this increase of the Navy. The annual maintenance charges will be not less than $400,000,000. No one can tell with certainty what they will be.

In my opinion, if the 1915-16 program is completed, the Government will be compelled to pay during the next three years nearly or quite two and one-half billion dollars. That assumes that there will be no agreement for reduction of naval arma-And if our navalistic policy is followed by Great Britain we will be called upon to spend hundreds of millions more, because our 1915 ships will be antiquated and can not stand against the larger and more powerful vessels which Great Britain is now contemplating building, because of our belligerent course.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. Has the Senator taken into consideration that as this program grows and the ships grow in size as the program proceeds, he has not enumerated all the accessories? Has the Senator thought that we will have to rebuild the Panama Canal to put the ships through; that the locks will have to be torn out and rebuilt? The very next step will make the battleships too large to go through the Panama Canal. All the harbors on the coast will have to be deepened so that the ships can come in and go out. The Senator has not touched the accessory expense, in my judgment. We will have to remodel every harbor, every dry dock, every canal, every lock, everything connected with the handling of the Navy.

Mr. KING. The statements made by my friend from Nebraska are pertinent and are substantially correct. things, of course, must be visualized if we are honest with ourselves and with the people. The people must be made to understand the aftermath of the program which on its face may not seem to call for such stupendous amounts. It is like the building of a house; the architect submits an innocent-looking plan and estimate, but when the house is completed, with the changes and developments and modifications, with the growing and expanding views of the architect, it will frequently be found that the house has cost three or four times more than the original figures submitted.

What the Senator from Nebraska said is true. Before this program is completed, which we are constructing during a "naval holiday," I venture the assertion that the greater part of the ships will be obsolete.

I invited attention in the beginning of the debate two or three days ago to the discussion in the Parliament of Great Britain, within the past few weeks, with respect to the naval policy of the United States. Great Britain had indicated to us and to the world a desire for a naval holiday. Winston Churchill, one of the statesmen of Great Britain, had pleaded for a naval holiday. Other English statesmen had asked for a suspension of naval construction in order that there might be an international arrangement that would call either for disarmament or for a material reduction in naval armaments. Great Britain has not built a capital ship for five or six years. She laid down four keels of cruisers of the Hood type; but one was completed, and though there were three upon the stocks, upon which there had been expended nearly $16,000,000, she scrapped them within the past 18 months, and not only scrapped them but scrapped hundreds of her war vessels and thus gave to the world evidence of her good faith and of a desire to end this naval rivalry which is bankrupting nations. How did we meet those pacific approaches of Great Britain?

Japan, may I say to the Senator, likewise gave the same pacific manifestations. I have here, if the Senator will be interested in it, the statement of Viscount Ishii, the Japanese ambassador to France, who stated that if the United States desired to establish a naval holiday Japan would be among the first to agree to it. Mr. Charles A. Selden, a brilliant American journalist, interviewed Viscount Ishii, and submits an article, together with the interview. He says:

This assurance was given by the ambassador in the course of a statement made in response to a request for an interpretation of the recent discussion on the American and Japanese naval programs. Count Ishii

Now he is quoting Count Ishii:

The general plan of construction of the Japanese fleet was formulated immediately after the Russo-Japanese War.

The Senator will recall that years ago, when Russia manifested a desire to crush Japan, to prevent the latter's expansion, and sought to reach out and take possession of the entire Pacific coast north of the legitimate boundaries of China, Japan felt compelled to fight for her existence, and that war provoked in Japan, I will not say a militaristic spirit, but a spirit calling for defense; at that time she outlined her naval program. It was inspired by the lessons of that great naval struggle.

Mr. Selden in this article continued:

The Japanese admiraity adopted as a type of a strategic unit a system of eight battleships and eight battle cruisers.

We hear a great deal about the Japanese program of 8-8. In our Naval Committee hearings-and I am betraying no secret-naval officers seemed to be frightened by the Japanese program of 8-8-eight battleships and eight cruisers-a program that was formulated at the close of the Russo-Japanese War. Japan has not yet completed that program, which was initiated at least 10 or 12 years ago.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the Senator completed his point? Mr. KING. I have not completed my point, but I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As a tribute to the old ship Massachusetts, in view of the fact that it has been mentioned, I should like to state that its construction was authorized in 1890. It was completed and commissioned June 10, 1896. It served with great usefulness and distinction in the Spanish-American War, participated in the blockade of Habana and in the destruction of Cervera's fleet. It served throughout the great World War a most useful purpose as a training ship, and was not put out of commission until the close of that war. ship has had a long period of useful and distinguished service. The original cost of the ship was $4,000,000; complete with armor and armament it cost $6,047,117.95. I have the figures from the department. Therefore the Senator from Utah can readily see how ridiculous it would be for the United States to rely upon a ship of that size and age, with armor and armament procured for those figures, to maintain American rights against modern battleships of the world.

Mr. KING. I hope my friend will not be offended if I use his word and say how "ridiculous" it seems for us to complete the 1915-16 program, which was born in the year 1915, prior to the experiences of the World War, when we know that many, if not all, of the ships therein provided for when they are completed will be obsolescent if not obsolete.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not let that statement go un-challenged, Mr. President. The fact of the case is that, while the naval program to which the Senator from Utah refers was authorized in 1916, it has not yet been executed. The types and the designs of the ships were not fixed until we had had the experiences of the great World War, and the final equipment of the ships, the armor and armament, has not yet been determined.

Mr. LODGE Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHORTRIDGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. KING.

Mr. KING. I yield to my friend from Massachusetts. Mr. LODGE. I wish to make an inquiry as a matter of curiosity. I have heard the Senator from Utah reiterate here many times that we should be found with "obsolete or obsolescent" ships. Those are very admirable words; I like to hear them; but are the ships of the other nations not to become obsolete or obsolescent? When are other nations going to build? If they build, when will they build?

Mr. KING. Does the Senator from Massachusetts pause for a reply now?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I ask when other nations will build?

Mr. KING. If the Senator from Massachusetts had done me the honor to listen to my rather disconnected remarks the other day, he would have seen that I discussed that matter. I called attention to the fact that recently in the British Parliament the question was brought up for discussion by Sir George

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I know what was said in Parliament. Mr. KING. And the attention of that body was directed to the fact that the United States was adopting a naval policy which called for the expenditure of millions of dollars Mr. LODGE. But that is not an answer to my question.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator to allow me to complete my sentence. The policy was then approved that Great Britain should lay down next year four super Hood warships, each one of which would have a displacement of 55,000 tons and carry 20inch guns. If we persist in our program, those ships will be constructed, and the Senator from Massachusetts knows that a super Hood with 55,000 tons displacement and 20-inch guns would make the American battleships obsolescent if not obsolete.

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not think they will be larger ships than ours. Our battle cruisers, unfortunately, I am sorry to say, have only just been begun. So there is nothing to prevent their enlargement and nothing to prevent their improvement. My point is that our ships have got to be built during the same period that the ships of other nations are being built.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, that is exactly what I am coming to. If we had pursued a wise, statesmanlike policy we would before this-and not having previously done so we would do it now as soon as possible-have approached Great Britain and Japan and agreed upon some plan for the reduction of armaments; but if we persist in driving through by brute force or by legislative skill this program, of course Great Britain has no other alternative than to proceed with the expen-

Mr. LODGE. What is to prevent Great Britain and Japan from suggesting to us that we stop building ships?

Mr. KING. They have suggested it.

Mr. LODGE. Have they?

Mr. KING. They have indicated over and over again—Mr. LODGE. Officially?
Mr. KING. I was just reading from Count Ishii.

Mr. LODGE. Have they done so officially?

Mr. KING. I did not say officially, but they have suggested it in the covenant of the League of Nations. They have given adherence to the policy.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, well—

Mr. KING. I know that any reference to the league immediately excites the smiles and ridicule of my distinguished friend. Mr. LODGE. Not at all; but that is in the dead past.

Mr. KING. It may be in the dead past; that question I will not discuss now, but it was evidence of a sincere desire upon the part of those nations who were signatory to the treaty to have an agreement.

Mr. LODGE. I do not intend to go into that, but that clause in the League of Nations covenant amounted to nothing, and the Senator from Utah ought to know that.

Mr. KING. That presents a case where two men differ. The covenant of the league has a specific and admirable plan to secure disarmament. And if the United States had ratified the treaty we would not now be discussing a naval bill calling for hundreds of millions of dollars. I repeat, our 1916 ships when complete will be "out of date" if Great Britain builds "super They will be obsolescent. They will be incapable of meeting the larger and more powerful ships.

The Senator says we can build larger ones. That is true. But we have this program. It is being carried out. It calls for ships of smaller size and lighter guns than the super Hoods. We can, of course, build larger ships. That means more money.

So we will have to scrap 1915-16 ships to build war vessels larger than the super Hood, so the rivalry is to continue.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to say, first, that I do not agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] that the clause to which he refers in the Versailles treaty had any meaning. think it was worse than nothing.

Mr. KING. Let me say that I do not want the Senator from Nebraska to lead me aside, because I may feel compelled to reply to a matter not quite pertinent to the discussion.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Utah may reply to it if he wishes and continue that debate. I did not care to get into it until the Senator mentioned the matter. I can not go with him on that. However, I wanted to make a suggestion to the Senator from Utah in reply to what the Senator from Massa-chusetts [Mr. Lodge] has stated about the naval program. It seems to me that what the Senator from Massachusetts has said and what the Senator from Utah stated in reply illustrates just what these naval programs mean, whether we or any other nation are behind them.

The fact that we have started on this program has incited Great Britain, after she had called a halt and scrapped many vessels which she had started to build-and it seems to me her course in the matter is perfectly logical-to build four ships that are bigger than anything we had thought of. The answer to Great Britain from us must be that we will build four more bigger than those she has built. If they have built vessels of 55,000 tons displacement, we must start in and build vessels of 75,000 tons displacement. If the ships of Great Britain, as I understand they are, are something over 1,000 feet in length, we must build ships 1,500 feet in length. If the ships of Great Britain have 20-inch guns, we must have 25-inch guns. And then comes the next step, that we must tear the Panama Canal to pieces and rebuild it, as well as all our harbors and dry docks.

Mr. KING. And then we must impose more burdens upon the people by taxation.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that will probably come before any of these programs are completed, and the world will be bankrupt and revolution will occur in every country in order to get rid of Bankruptcy is what it means.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Idaho. Mr. BORAH. As I understood the Senator from Massachusetts, the inference from the inquiry which he put to the Senator from Utah was that while our ships are becoming obsolete, necessarily the ships of other countries were also becoming obsolete; that as we were building their ships also would become obsolete. That is literally true, and that is what makes the whole program so utterly useless. Let me read an article from the Edinburgh Review, which has only recently come to this country. The article is written by Admiral Bridge, who for 50 years was in the British Navy, who has held some of the highest positions in that navy, and who has written two books proposes power. Then the year question which was consoled. upon sea power. Upon the very question which was covered by the remarks of the Senator from Nebraska in a measure, concerning the method by which a ship is made obsolete because of the fact that another nation builds a superior ship and the race to ruin, so far as money is concerned, continues just the same, he says:

The battleship Dreadnought dated from 1966. It was widely pro-claimed that she had rendered all foreign ships of her class then existing obsolete.

We must be permitted to use that term.

We must be permitted to use that term.

It was not admitted that if such were the case she must also have rendered obsolete many ships of our own, though of recent construction. The Dreadnought had a displacement of 17,900 tons, being bigger than any battleship in the world. The Germans took the hint conveyed in our admitted, indeed vaunted, intention of putting their ships on the obsolete list by building a bigger one of our own. With less than the ordinary German slowness they replied to our Dreadnought of 1906 with the Nassau class of 18,600 tons in 1907. We were bound by the terms of our "go-one-better" policy and found ourselves obliged to reply to the Nassau with the Collingwood of 19°50 tons. Then the Germans took up the running and built the Heligoland of 22,400 tons. The pace was being forced, but we were not going to give up the race, so we turned out the Orion of 22,500 tons. The next move was with the Germans, who built the Kaiser class of 24,410 tons. At first our reply must have seemed feeble to those who regarded superior bigness as a guarantee of invincibility, for we answered with the King George, Ajax, etc., of only 23,000 tons. We soon pulled ourselves together and built the Iron Duke, Marborough, etc., of 25,000 tons. The Germans topped this figure with their König class of 25,390 tons. We had to show them that in war fought on the building slips we were not going to be beaten, so we produced the Queen Elizabeth, with the imposing displacement of 27,500 tons. Then the real war broke out. Of course, during the competition the cost of individual ships was mounting. The Dreadnought had cost nearly a million and a half—

That is, a million and a half pounds-

By the time that we had reached the Iron Duke the cost per ship was over two millions. In the case of the Queen Elizabeth it was higher still. It should be remembered that each ship named was usually only one amongst several.

There was exactly the same rise in dimensions, and, of course, in cost when we engaged in a competition of "battle-cruiser" building. Our Inflexible (1905-6) was of 17,250 tons; the German Von der Tann (1907-8) was of 19,100 tons. The Germans advanced by successive steps, 22,640, 24,610, and 26,180 tons. Our advance was less gradual. We built the Lion (three ships) of 26,350 tons, thus outdoing the biggest German figure; and then we jumped to the Tiger, 28,500. The increase in caliber of heavy guns was slower. Until 1909-10 the heavlest gun mounted in our battleships was the 12-inch. In the period following we went on to the 13,5-inch; after that our battleships carried 15-inch guns. The German corresponding ships carried either 11-inch or 12-inch guns, and the latter was their largest caliber at Jutland.

This summarized history of our "building-slip" contest ought to be interesting to any who care to contemplate the future. In the war our biggest battleship had a displacement of 27,500 tons; our biggest battle cruiser 28,500. The flagship of the commander in chief at Jutland is stated to have cost somewhat more than two millions. Our most recent ship, the Hood, has a displacement of 41,200 tons.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, does the author contend, in giving those figures, that Great Britain made a mistake in building those ships?

Mr. BORAH. He does contend that she made a mistakethat Germany and England both made a mistake. He is not contending that one should disarm and that the other should

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the Senator ever stopped to reflect what the condition of Great Britain would have been if she had not built those ships and had them at the time of the Great War with Germany?

Mr. BORAH. I admit that, provided Germany had refused to sign the agreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But she did refuse, did she not?

Mr. BORAH. Exactly. That is, they did not reach an agreement.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Great Britain made an effort to get Germany to disarm. Everybody agrees to the conclusion that the Senator reaches, but the great difficulty is to carry it out. If the Senator can say the magic word and make the magic gesture by which the world will be relieved of these things, we will all applaud him.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it is not a question of saying the magic word or making the magic gesture; it is a question of taking a single step in that direction.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We passed a resolution here at the last Congress suggesting such a step; and yet the Senator-and I say it without any criticism whatever-even though that resolution was attached to the bill, still continued to oppose the bill, and through his efforts and the efforts of others it failed to become a law. I assume that if it had passed steps would have been taken toward that end.

Mr. BORAH. Then I assume if the Senator assumes that he will put nothing in the way of putting it on this bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is entirely correct.

Mr. BORAH. Is the Senator willing to put it on this bill? Mr. POINDEXTER. I am, absolutely. I have no objection whatever

Mr. BORAH. Very well; that is good. That is one step Mr. POINDEXTER. I hope we can proceed, then, if the Senator thinks that is of so much importance. I am not objecting to the debate; I think that is very desirable; but I hope the Senator will aid us to get a vote on the bill within a reason-

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I think this debate has been perfectly legitimate. I think it is exceedingly important. Members of the Navy have said to me that they regarded the discussion which has been going on as extremely important; that it had interested the whole country and everybody in what kind of a Navy we were getting.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We can not have too much light on these matters; I agree with that. I have felt somewhat handicapped myself in joining in the discussion, because there seemed to be some evidence that there was a desire to jeopardize the passage of the bill by protracted discussion. I do not want to join in a movement of that kind.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have a resolution here. I do not ask the Senator to accept the amendment. I suppose Senators will want to vote on it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not seen it. I do not know the form of it.

Mr. BORAH. It is the same in substance as that I proposed before.

Mr. POINDEXTER. But if it is such an amendment as the Senator had before-I voted for it before, and there is no reason why I should not vote for it again.

Mr. BORAH. Then I understand that the Senator will not raise a point of order against it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will not. I think it is subject to a point of order, but it is not my purpose to make the point of order.

Mr. BORAH. That is good.

Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator that he has wholly misunderstood my position if he has ever understood. that it was my desire to have the United States disarm without an agreement upon the part of Great Britain and Japan to do the same thing. I have always been an advocate of a strong Navy. I was particularly an advocate of a strong Navy at the time Germany and England were in that naval race, because so long as they were in that naval race it was apparently impossible to get a hearing on the question of disarmament at all, and therefore the United States must for her security take steps which would protect her through a strong Navy. I have said many times, and I repeat it now in order that it may be accentuated, that I do not want the United States to disarm standing alone. I am not so confident as to the purposes and objects of either Great Britain or Japan that I could ask my country alone to stand disarmed.

What I do desire-and I am perfectly delighted to know that I have the sympathy of the able Senator from Washington-is to ask Great Britain and Japan down at the council table, where the publicity of the world is beating in upon the transaction, "Are you willing to disarm? The United States takes the first step. We call you together. Are you willing to disarm? If you are not willing to disarm, the United States and the whole world will know that there is only one thing for the United States to do, and that is to protect herself through another method."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am perfectly delighted to hear the Senator make that announcement. Other than that, the differences of opinion are mere matters of detail and mere matters as to the methods of attaining the object. I am in hearty agreement with what the Senator has said; but so far as my views upon the matter-which are unimportant-are concerned, if I had had the power or the opportunity, when the nations of the world were assembled around the peace-conference table at Versailles after the Great War, I would have submitted to the representatives of the great naval powers of the world the proposition which the Senator from Idaho makes, and I believe that that was the opportune moment when it should have been disposed of.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

Mr. BORAH. Let me complete this article, because I think it is extremely enlightening, coming from this old admiral. On the question of competition in the naval race, it says:

Our most recent ship, the Hood, has a displacement of 41,200 tons. It has been said that her cost was about seven millions. The probable cost of each future ship of the class—if any are to be built—is put at nine millions. If, therefore, we engage in another "building-slip" competition it looks as though we must take 41,200 tons and 29,000,000 as constituting the datum line or "scratch" from which we shall have to start. These figures refer to capital ships only; a navy must include many other classes.

And so forth. Then it says:

And so forth. Then it says:

Having taken a rapid view of the course of our prewar "building-slip" competition with Germany, we may, without in any way prejudging international conditions, see what would be likely to happen should the United States and the British Empire—for it will be the British Empire and not Great Britain alone—engage in a similar competition. About the middle of January, 1921, the United States Secretary of the Navy communicated to a committee of the House of Representatives two sets of figures belonging to what is called the "1916 program." It is well known what these figures import. It is that there is in contemplation an increase of the United States Navy that will make it by a good way the greatest—at any rate in tonnage—in the world. For the moment the most interesting thing which can be extracted from the figures is the increasing displacements of individual battleships. As already stated, our latest capital ship displaces 41,200 tons. The six American ships the names of which come lowest on the list, thereby indicating the most recent date of design, are to have a displacement of 43,200 tons, thus surpassing our Hood by no less than 2,000 tons. The heavy guns proposed for these ships are to be twelve 16-inch guns, 50 calibers in length. It may be well asked, is there to be no limit to the size of men-of-war? Anyhow, it can be seen what competition in bigness would be pretty sure to involve. Naval megalomania is evidently a widespread disease.

Then it says further—the matter which was mentioned by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]:

It may also be said that great size of individual ships will render certain channels or canals impassable. Will displacements exceeding 43,000 tons allow of passage through, say, the Suez Canal? Will they allow of passage through the Panama Canal? To enlarge the canals or make new ones will cost money. Will it be better to spend that money in adding to the number of ships?

And so forth.

Mr. President, going back to the suggestion made by the Senator, of course Great Britain would have made a mistake if she had not gone ahead after Germany declined to enter into the agreement. However, let me say that there is a very serious dispute as to who did decline to enter into the agreement. It was a case almost such as we have now. Each nation was asking that the other take the first step, and neither was willing to take the first step, and therefore no first step was taken. What would have happened had England called a conference and asked for an agreement, we do not know. What would have happened had Germany called a conference and asked for an agreement, we do not know. We only know that no one of them was willing to take the first step; and that, Mr. President, is all that the Senators here who are supporting the resolution are asking-namely, that the United States call these nations into a conference, take the responsibility, and place it upon the power that refuses to enter into the conference. As I said the other day, it is my deliberate judgment that the masses of Japan and the masses of Great Britain will overturn any government which refuses to lift the burden of taxation upon them if they have an opportunity to do it, and do it in safety.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. FLETCHER. I differ from some of those who have referred to the Versailles treaty, of which the Senator from Utah made mention. I believe there was a definite, certain, and workable plan outlined in the Versailles treaty for the reduction of armaments all over the world. It was a plan agreed upon by the representatives of every civilized nation on earth, and it was one of the strongest points arguing to me, at least, in favor of ratifying that treaty. It did provide a plan whereby there could have been agreed upon by all the nations and put into world operation a reduction of armaments as to the armies and the navies all over the world and the saving of this enormous burden of taxation to which reference has been made.

We saw fit, however, to reject that treaty, and therefore that plan, as far as we are concerned, is not in operation. Still, as the Senator has suggested, it has been agreed upon by other nations who are working under the treaty to-day.

Mr. President, I have always favored any sort of movement looking to disarmament the world over and the saving of these enormous taxes which it will be necessary to levy upon the people of the various countries in order to support big navies and big armies, growing bigger and bigger all the while. I deplore such a prospect as that; and at the time when this proposition was before the Senate when the last Navy bill was up the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Edge]—which was in substance the proposal of the Senator from Idaho-received, as I recall, the vote of every Member of the Senate then present. There were some recorded as not voting who were not present, but it is my recollection that there was not a single vote against the proposal made at that time.

I think the prospect is now that there will be really no oppo-sition to that proposal. But we are not to sit here, I take it, and in accordance with the views expressed by the Senator from Idaho he would not have us sit and wait until this arrangement is perfected and carried out, and the plan agreed upon, in the meantime leaving ourselves crippled upon the seas.

I would call attention, Mr. President, to this fact, that not only has it been known all over the world what the policy of the United States was in this regard, but we have not been derelict in advising all nations everywhere that we were willing to come to a disarmament understanding and agreement. Not merely passing a resolution, or giving voice to some sentiments upon that subject, we wrote into the law that was enacted by Congress and approved by the President as far back as August 29, 1916, this provision:

In view of the premises, the President is authorized and requested invite, at an appropriate time, not later than the close of the war

And it has not yet closed, so far as we are concerned, apparently-all the great Governments of the world to send representatives to a conference which shall be charged with the duty of formulating a plan for a court of arbitration or other tribunal to which disputed questions between nations shall be referred for adjudication and peaceful settlement, and to consider the question of disarmament, and submit their recommendations to their respective Governments for approval.

That was nearly five years ago. Are we to wait about the building of ships until this sort of policy can be carried into effect by reaching an understanding with all the nations of the world? We started five years ago with that proposition, and where have we gotten?

Mr. BORAH. Where did we stop? That is the question, Mr. FLETCHER. The law is still on the statute books, unrepealed.

Mr. BORAH. It is a dead letter. Mr. FLETCHER. The war is still pending, so far as we are concerned. There is ample time to act upon that law now. That is to say, it is still in effect. It can be followed now; it can be pursued now. But I am willing to go on further record in this matter and, as I did before, support now the proposal of the Senator from Idaho for this understanding, if it can be reached. But I simply submit that we can not fill our responsibilities and our duties and properly protect our country if we are to wait until the final consummation of some program which may or may not be agreed upon, and when it may be 10 years after you get into conference before you settle upon a definite policy.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I supposed that the Senator from Florida was coming as a friend and ally. I shall beware of the Greeks when they come bearing gifts. He has become now a coadjutor of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], and an able supporter of the Senator from Washington [Mr.

POINDEXTER]

Mr. FLETCHER. I agree with the Senator in that proposition.

Mr. KING. The Senator seems to take the position that because we enacted a statute a number of years ago, in 1916, authorizing the President to take steps to secure disarmament, and never did anything under it, except that which was done at Paris in the Versailles treaty, all the rest of the world ought to take cognizance of it and suspend naval construction.

I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that the nations participating in the Paris conference wrote into the Versailles treaty a provision which called for a rational and practical method of disarmament. I do not desire to revive the discussion of the League of Nations, as I suggested to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], but I am compelled to make this observation, Mr. President, in reply to what the Senator from Florida said, and in reply to what the Senator from Massachusetts said, that that was not only an invitation, but was a guaranty and a pledge by all the signatories to that treaty, that they would bring about disarmament.

What did we do? The Senator from Massachusetts asked if these nations have extended an invitation to the United States What was the Versailles treaty? It was more than an official invitation; it was a solemn obligation upon the part of those powers to proceed to secure disarmament. President Wilson and our representatives also signed the treaty. The American people approved of the plan to bring about world disarmament. Whatever objections they felt to the league, there was universal approval of the idea that nations should cease competitive armament. The other nations signing the treaty are willing to proceed with the plans for disarmament. This Nation stands aloof and demands the construction of battleships and cruisers costing hundreds of millions. The treaty obligations were, strictly speaking, multilateral, not unilateral. The obligations, though perhaps several, were essentially joint. The obligation resting upon one nation to disarm could not be executed unless nations respected the same obligation.

Now, the implication of the Senator is that there has been no invitation to us to join in a plan for disarmament. I submit that they have asked us to meet for the purpose of securing an agreement. Indeed, they have pledged themselves with us to work for that end. They have done it in a solemn treaty. They have provided a plan for disarmament. They have appointed a commission to work out a rational and feasible plan for disarmament, and the President of the United States was invited to send a representative to participate in the conference to secure disarmament. We failed to respond. Was not that an official invitation? When the League of Nations, those great nations, including Japan, France, and Great Britain, asked us to attend a conference, if only in a "consultative" capacity, in order to work out a plan for disarmament and we declined, what else could they do, what conclusion could they reach, other than that we have spurned their proposition?

My friend from Florida said we signified to the world by that empty statute that we passed that we were for peace. What have we done to emphasize our declaration for peace or to bring the nations of the world into conference to secure a reduction in armaments or disarmament?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. KING. I yield.
Mr. POMERENE. The Senator asks what we have done for the cause of peace. Every time that subject comes up every Senator and every Representative talks in favor of it, but when it comes to legislation for an increase of our Navy they vote against a policy looking toward peace.

Mr. KING. Exactly. The Senator from Ohio has stated the situation accurately. We have rendered magnificent lip service, but we have done nothing to convince the nations that we desire naval disarmament.

The distinguished ex-Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, while the nations of Europe were pleading for disarmament, announced that if we did not enter the League of Nations, then we would have to build the biggest Navy in the world. I do not want to criticize Mr. Daniels. I think the position which he took was unwise and provocative necessarily of international suspicion and skepticism, if not resentment. They asked us for bread and we gave them a stone. They sought to propitiate the United States and to secure its active cooperation to secure world disarmament, and ex-Secretary Daniels said, "We are going to build the biggest Navy in the world." Japan and Great Britain were compelled to take notice of that belligerent attitude which we assumed. However, I should say that Great Britain refused to take any action to meet this threat of Secretary Daniels until the past few weeks.

Moreover, Mr. President, here in Congress we announced that we were going to carry out the 1915-16 program. Great Britain said, "We are so desirous of peace and of world disarmament we will construct no more capital ships. We will break up three that are on the stocks. We will not only make promises and pledges for d'sarmament, but we will demonstrate our desire for disarmament by refusing to appropriate for capital ships and by destroying some that are upon the stocks."

How did we meet that invitation? By an expressed determination to drive through this program, which when completed will call for the expenditure of a billion and a half dollars, plus the tremendous expenses for maintenance which will devolve upon us from year to year.

Japan said she wanted to disarm, and when I was interrupted some time ago I was reading what Count Ishii had said:

I have shown what Great Britain did. I showed the other day, from the debates in Parliament, that after Great Britain had broken up those ships upon the stocks and stated she would build no more capital ships, she was compelled, because of our attitude, to reverse her position, modify her program, and announce a policy to lay down next year the hulls of four super Hoods. Before reading what Count Ishii said, let me comment upon that just a moment. What does the construction of four super Hoods mean? I said a moment ago, in response to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris], that when we had our ships completed, if Great Britain had adhered to the recent determination to build these four super Hoods, our Navy would then be practically obsolete. What chance would the Massachusetts, which we are now building, have against a super Hood, with its 20-inch guns, with its longer range, and with its greater fighting power? Absolutely none.

So, Mr. President, we are building a Navy now which we know will drive Great Britain and Japan to the building of larger vessels. And we must know that when they have constructed such vessels the 1915-16 ships will be antiquated, out of date, unable to meet the more powerful ones.

Let me add, Mr. President, as I stated in the report from which I read, that I am not in favor of "scrapping" the Navy, nor am I in favor of a little Navy. If we are to have a Navy, I want the best Navy, the best in the sense that it is the most efficient, the most modern, and the most scientifically equipped. That does not mean we must have the most ships, that does not necessarily mean we must have the greatest tonnage; but if we are to have a Navy we want a modern Navy and efficient Navy.

My position has been that with the manifest desire of the European nations to have a naval holiday, we ought to meet them not only half way, but more than half way. We ought to suspend the construction of some of these battleships and cruisers, pending an honest effort to secure naval disarmament or naval reduction.

But of course, Mr. President, if we continue this policy and rebuff those who make advances to our Nation, we foreclose the opportunity for a successful modus vivendi for the termination of naval construction. If we continue this policy, how are we going to reach an agreement? How are you going to bring about disarmament if we proceed to drive through a program which calls for greater armament? What is the rational and sensible thing to do? To immediately call our naval experts together, ascertain what can be done toward suspending the construction of a portion of the 1916 program, and enter upon negotiations with Japan, Great Britain, and other nations for the purpose of reaching a satisfactory agreement for naval disarmament, partial or complete.

Such a course would not require an indefinite period. Within a very few months we would be able to determine whether a resumption of naval construction should begin or whether some other course should be pursued. In the minority report which has been submitted I stated that six of these great battleships, notwithstanding their tremendous cost, had been advanced to such a degree of completion that, wasteful though I regard it to be, we should complete them.

I repeat that we are closing the door to international agreement to secure reduction of armament. When we get this program completed, indeed before we complete it, it will be found that naval authorities and experts are here demanding that we appropriate for other larger vessels.

I make the prophecy that in the next naval appropriation bill, if we do not reach an international agreement, there will be a demand that we authorize the construction of battleships larger than the super Hoods. If Great Britain begins the construction of four, demand will be made that we construct six or eight. Each will cost from $60.000,000 to $70,000,000. Our navalists will not consent for Great Britain to outstrip the United States, so they will insist upon a 70,000-ton ship with 22-inch guns. Thus the mad race will again be on.

So the 1915-16 program does not end naval construction. It only begins it. When we complete the expenditure of the $1,500,000,000 we have nothing—that is, we will have an obsolescent or obsolete Navy.

Returning to the statement of Count Ishii, he said:

At the recent assembly of the League of Nations at Geneva the Japanese delegates supported a resolution on the subject of disarmament.

This limitation of armaments is so desirable for all that it must be established on a fair basis, taking into account the geography and economic conditions in each country.

There is an invitation, or, rather, a manifestation of the pacific character of Japan. Let me read, now, a few words from a very interesting newspaper article which appeared in the Star of this city. It was written from London, and, among other things, said:

The speeches of Secretary Daniels-

I referred to them a moment ago-regarded here as needlessly provocative, were taken as so much "bluff." But now the report of the Naval Board and the debates in Congress, coupled with what Ambassador Geddes appears to have said here concerning the attitude of the Republicans, has at last convinced Englishmen that they are up against the first serious threat to their lordship of the sea in several centuries.

They believed that we earnestly desired peace and naval disarmament, or at least a reduction of armaments, and even the belligerent speech of Secretary Daniels did not disillusion them; but when we proved, through this program and debates in Congress, the fact that we are to have the biggest Navy in the world, and there was constant discussion in the United States of the possibility or probability of war with Great Britain or Japan, it might have been expected that sooner or later those nations would take notice of the matter and adopt such course as prudence seemed to dictate.

Figures obtained from an informed quarter in London concerning the strength of the two fleets in 1924, a year ahead of the time at which Daniels said they would be equal, foreshadow even within three years a crushing American superiority. The Battle of Jutland, fought in May, 1916, is the only action in which first-class modern armored ships have met, and the lessons of that fight have been applied to all ships built since by any navy, so that experts here declare that post-Jutland battleships, battle cruisers, or destroyers will be infinitely better than warships laid down in times of peace and inexperience.

By 1924 the United States will have 12 battleships of post-Jutland design, carrying 14-inch guns or guns of larger caliber; the British will have none.

America will have 9 pre-Jutland superdreadnaughts, strong enough to hold their places in the first line; England will have 18.

Then the writer proceeds:

Then the writer proceeds:

Then the writer proceeds:

According to the Admiralty, therefore, of ships of the first line, America will possess 27 and Britain 22 in 1924, but the true disparity of strength will be much greater than those indicated by these figures.

There is some suppressed indignation at Secretary Daniels for giving the American public to understand that in 1925, in spite of an American "equality" in big ships, the British will have more light cruisers, destroyers, and submarines. If the American public is sanctioning the naval program with a view to obtaining naval equality with Great Britain, the authorities here think the Americans are being misled, and that what is aimed at in Washington is not equality, but tremendous superiority.

If belief that American naval power will ever be used for aggressive purposes exists, it is of recent growth and is developing slowly. In the same breath that men now say how unthinkable it is that the United States could plan to attack England, they each, however, repeat Lord Northcliffe's query, "Against what enemy is America feverishly arming?" On looking about the world and seeing none, misglvings are beginning to mingle with their confidence.

Vice Admiral Mark Kerr, who commanded the British fleet in the Adriatic during the war, discussed the question of armament and the character of vessels, and said:

The character of the late war at sea was entirely conditioned by the fact that we held the whole German naval force in a bottle. We commanded the exits to the seas of the world. Only by defeating our grand fleet could the Germans get their commerce raiders out. * * In a war with America we could not stop American cruisers, submarines, and converted merchantmen from putting out from any one of the hundred ports on your thousands of miles of coast line in such numbers that no matter how big our fleet might be, were it four times the present size, our commerce would stop everywhere excepting in European waters.

He proceeds then to a discussion of the importance of sub-marines and air vessels, and states, with reference to the difficulty of attempting to carry on a naval war with a power at a great distance:

The grand fleet—ours or yours—would put forth heavily laden with coal and sall 2,500 miles or so across the ocean. When it arrived in the region where the enemy fleet might appear it would continue to sall about at high speed for fear of submarine attack by day; at high speed for fear of submarine attack by day; at high speed for fear of destroyer attack by night, until much of its coal was gone. As the bunkers became empty the great ships would get higher in the water; their protective armor would rise nearer to the surface of the sea until they would be riding so high that in case of action the chances of being holed below the water line would be greatly increased. The invading fleet would merely commit suicide by approaching near to a defended base, in view of modern submarines, mines, and coastal defenses. So it would remain steaming about, hoping the other fellow would come out and fight.

Then he discussed the advantages of the defenders, the neces-

Then he discussed the advantages of the defenders, the necessity of submarines for coastal defense and for extensive cruis-

The question was then asked, "Then you believe that England should not build against the American battleships?" He replied:

I certainly do. I think, moreover, that if your people found out that we were taking no notice of your expensive toys they would very soon get tired of spending a billion dollars or so in four years to incumber the water with these contrivances.

He is making an argument in favor of the submarine and the airplane as necessary adjuncts, indeed more important in the modern naval warfare than the capital ship.

Now, I wish to say a few words about the defects of the program. As I observed at the outset, we are adhering to a one-plane Navy program instead of a three-plane plan. We are adhering to the capital-ship idea and are not developing sufficiently the submarine. The submarines that we have are wholly inadequate if we are to have a well-balanced and efficient Navy. We have not a submarine that is competent to engage in an extensive cruise. The engines in many of them are defective. Many of them will do for coastal purposes, but we have not developed the submarine nor does the 1915-16 program pay sufficient attention to its development; we squander money upon the capital ship and fail to provide suitable or sufficient submarines.

I wish to read from the New York Tribune of recent date a statement which may be of interest. The article was written by a naval expert of splendid ability and extensive experience:

The Navy of the United States as it exists to-day is a one-idea Navy. It is practically built upon prewar conceptions. Generally speaking, its material and its offensive power dates from 1914 and its building program was conceived in 1916—five years ago. It is purely a surface Navy, which will be limited to the defensive in modern warfare, because it is totally lacking in those modern auxiliary forces and weapons that are necessary for its protection against attack from an up-to-date enemy and without which it can not strike an effective blow, even in self-defense.

We should not delude ourselves. Our own people and possibly Con-

We should not delude ourselves. Our own people and possibly Congress are alone deceived as to the comparative helplessness of our fleet. If we are so foolishly shortsighted as to neglect the development of modern offensive and defensive weapons in our Navy, we can not safely assume that our future enemy will be equally foolish. The fact that we are not wide awake is no proof that our enemy is asleep.

SUBMARINE WEAKNESS.

It has been shown that our Navy has no submarines that can accompany the fleet in tactical operations or in a battle at sea; that we have no long-range cruising submarines that can operate against an enemy's coast or commerce overseas or obtain information and report upon the enemy's movements; that we have no mine-laying submarines for important offensive uses against an enemy fleet or coast. In short, our submarine force, as it exists to-day, is suitable only for the local defense of our country and its foreign possessions.

Reviewing briefly the deficiencies of our Navy in submarines and aviation, we discover that with the utmost energy in building up modern submarine and air forces our fleet must remain a one-plane, surface force for at least three years. During this interval it can not possibly command the sea against a three-plane navy. It would fight at a perilous disadvantage.

But to-day, with the experience of the war in full view, realizing as we must what the submarine actually did and noting the recent triumphs in aviation, with the plain lessons to be derived therefrom, must we not conclude that a surface fleet alone can not possibly control the sea? Is it not clear that such a fleet pitted against an up-to-date three-plane fleet will receive blows from above and beneath the surface of the sea which it is powerless to resist or to return?

Mr. President, Great Britain, realizing that battleships can not withstand aerial attacks, is compelled, because of our foolish course, to revise her program and to project these super Hood vessels. I am advised—and, I think, authoritatively—Mr. President, that these new vessels which we are compelling Great Britain to construct will have steel protection over their decks that may, as far as possible, ward off attacks from the air. Protection to the hulls is needed, and no doubt Great Britain will give attention to this important matter. I have been advised that it is proposed to attach to the ship what is denominated "macaroni tube armor."

I do not know that I can describe the mechanical construction of this new device for the protection of hulls against torpedo attacks, but Great Britain, if we force her to further construction, will build vessels that will present improvements to render greater immunity from torpedo attacks. If that be true, our battleships will be relegated practically to the scrap heap. By the time they are completed they will be out of date.

We now have a one-plane Navy, and we propose to continue to have a one-plane Navy. We are wedded to the capital ship; we can not lift our eyes from the surface; we refuse to look under the surface; we refuse to build proper submarines and we are inadequately protecting the Navy in the matter of aircraft.

So my complaint, Mr. President, concerning the 1916 program is, first, that it is an impediment to international agreement to reduce armament; secondly, if we can not reduce armament, if we can not reach an international agreement looking to that end, then we must have a modern, scientific, up-to-date Navy. We are, however, building a Navy now under this program which is not up-to-date, which is not modern, which pays no attention to the lessons of the World War, and which will be obsolete by the time it is constructed. If we exercised wisdom and statesmanship and prudence, we would suspend the construction of many of the vessels; we would appeal to the nations of the world in a friendly way for an international agreement; and I am sure our approaches would not be denied. When we met with the nations of the world we could agree upon a limitation of armament, if not upon disarmament, which would relieve the American people and the world from the great burdens which threaten to increase as the years go by.

Permit me to read further from the report submitted by me in February and to which I have referred during the course of these remarks.

"What is the reason, then, for this feverish haste to impose upon the American people further burdens for naval armament? Europe is exhausted financially and otherwise. Even the most clamorous and strident for a powerful American Navy must admit that there is not a single power of Europe which menaces us, nor could a combination of all the powers of Europe imperil the United States either upon land or upon sea. I freely admit that Great Britain's Navy is stronger than ours, but even if Great Britain were our enemy and engaged in war against us, her navy, powerful as it is, would be impotent against our coasts.

"The United States has a superior torpedo destroyer flotilia, and with the development of the submarine, the torpedo, mines, and airplanes, not only for coast defense but for combat at sea, it would be impossible for Great Britain to successfully operate against our coasts or to land troops upon our shores. The testimony of Admiral Sims, as well as the views of the greatest naval experts of the world, confirm that view. Of course, it is obvious that Japan is less able to attack our coasts than is Great Britain.

"The nations of Europe are not building war vessels. They are trying to satisfy their hunger, and meet the ravages of disease and restore order in distracted and suffering countries. They want peace, not war; bread and meat and clothing and medicines and an opportunity for work and production. are building no battleships; and aside from the bolsheviks of Russia, they are seeking no conflicts. Military ambitions are dead and the prostrate peoples of Europe are looking to America not for bombs and bullets and war but for food and clothing and our surplus commodities, and for material help and aid in their distracted and tragic situation. When this Nation was assailed by Germany and the cause of civilization was imperiled, we cast our lot with the Entente Allies, and with them battled in a common cause until the right triumphed. During that great contest, as well as since, we have exhibited in many ways our deep sympathy for the peoples of Europe and have manifested a sincere desire for their welfare. They are not plotting against us. Even the defeated nations are seeking the friendship of the American people. Great Britain desires no war with the United States, nor with any nation. It would be absolutely impossible for her to wage war against the United "Naval experts who are fair and honest are compelled to admit the impossibility of the United States encountering any danger at the hands of Great Britain. Admiral Sims in his testimony before the Senate committee stated in substance that we needed no coast defenses other than for the protection of our naval bases. The development of aerial warfare, the submarines, the mines, and the torpedo boats, make invasion of this country from the sea absolutely impossible. Not even the wildest jingoes dare to express a fear of invasion by land of the United States from the north or from the south. Against whom shall we arm? Against what power shall we continue to build giant navies, at a cost of hundreds of millions, if not billions of dollars?

"It would be cruel to even intimate that there is any apprehension from the Latin Republics. The United States entertains a deep and lasting affection for the Republics to the south of us. Their welfare and development has been a matter of deep solicitude upon the part of the United States. The Monroe doctrine was promulgated as a shield against imperial ambitions of despotic European powers. We desire the friendship of the people of Mexico and Central and South America. It is the sincere desire of the people of this Republic that they shall be bound in amity and good will to the peoples of the vigorous and splendid Republics upon this

"We turn to Asia. What foe have we there? And against whom shall we marshal our great resources and build a still more powerful Navy? China entertains not only respect but deep affection for this Republic.

"The chauvinistic elements in the land are endeavoring to sow the seeds of discord and to provoke war between the United States and Japan. Writers, political orators, powerful magazines, and newspapers seek to inflame the public mind against the Japanese Empire, and to induce the belief that war between the United States and that far-away people is at our very door. It would seem that there are those in our midst who are intriguing and plotting for the purpose of destroying peace and amity now existing between this Republic and Japan and between this Republic and Great Britain. In my opinion, these intrigues will fail. War between the United States and Great Britain is unthinkable. It would not only be a tragedy, it would be a calamity—a catastrophe so overwhelming that no one but the most insensate and calloused could regard it except with horror. Why should Great Britain desire war with the United States? She covets none of our territory, nor do we covet hers. She has been benefited by our commerce and her trade has been important in our development. Great Britain has been our best customer and has absorbed our surplus commodities to the value of hundreds of millions, indeed, billions, of dollars annually.

"Japan respected her treaty with Great Britain and joined with the Entente Allies against the Central Empires. Though of the Orient, she has absorbed much of the spirit of the Occident, and has exhibited qualities that entitle her to be regarded as one of the leading nations of the earth. Upon a little island thousands of miles from our shore, she seeks only the welfare of her people and opportunity for growth and development. Her birth rate of between six and seven hundred thousand per annum compels her statesmen to seek fields for legitimate territorial expansion.

"Asia lies before her and at her door; to Asia she will turn. She seeks no conquest upon this hemisphere, and, in my opinion, sincerely desires the good will and friendship of this nation as well as of all other nations of the earth. Japan is burdened with debt and possesses but few resources and limited national wealth.

"The imprudent, not to say irrational and menacing, talk upon the part of some Americans is calculated to impress her people with the thought that we entertain hostile designs against them and other nations. In 1904 Japan believed she was menaced by Russia and mobilized her strength and gained a notable victory. Germany's activity in the Orient before 1914, together with her aggressive policy in China, constituted a menace to Japan and was calculated to arouse her fears and lead her to adopt a military policy of some magnitude. and honest consideration of the aggressive designs of France, Great Britain, Italy, Russia, and Germany with reference to China's territory will lead to the conclusion that Japan's position in the Orient was endangered, and justified her belief that her interests in Asia, potential or otherwise, were to be sacrificed to imperialistic policies by the strong nations of Europe. Japan's geographical position must be considered and her relations to China and other Asiatic territory must not be ignored. These conditions undoubtedly filled the Japanese with apprehension and inspired Japan to adopt a policy regarded as necessary for her preservation.

But I do not believe that the Japanese people desire war with the United States or with any country.

"Japan entered the League of Nations, and upon signing the treaty of Versailles submitted a statement which revealed her desire for peace and for an honorable station among the nations of the world. Her representative sits in the council of the League of Nations and she has consistently supported the policy of the league, which seeks world disarmament and the settlement of international controversies by peaceful means instead of the employment of military and naval force. In my opinion there is much exaggeration concerning Japan's naval program, Testimony before the committee was unsatisfactory concerning Japan's naval program. An admiral, speaking of the same, stated that she had 'laid down only one battle cruiser up to the present time, so far as we know.' 'Her program,' he stated, 'involved the building of 12 light cruisers, but 5 only are down and building.' With reference to destroyers he stated:

"We do not exactly know how many are building, but we know that at least 10 are building now of the 47. She is building 10 submarines of the first line. Those are vessels of about 900 tons each. She is building 9 submarines of the second line.

"The evidence before the committee also establishes what everyone knows to be the fact, that Japan is dependent upon other nations for steel and perhaps other materials needed in the construction of a naval fleet. Moreover, the resources of Japan are limited and she could not long continue any competitive naval program with the United States or Great Britain and other European nations. Japan can not contemplate an attack upon Mexico or any of the Latin American Republics. There is no quarrel between her and any nation to the south of us.

"Any attack by Japan upon Mexico or Central America, or any of the Republics in South America, would unite the Western Hemisphere, perhaps including the Dominion of Canada, against her: It would be supreme folly for Japan to even contemplate such a course. Nor is it conceivable that she would attempt to land troops upon our shores or to send her fleet across the Pacific. If Great Britain's fleet would be powerless against -and that is the testimony of competent naval exour shoresperts, then it is preposterous to assume that Japan, 12,000 miles distant from our shores, could be more successful.

"I refuse to join with the jingoists in our country who are determined to perpetuate the old order of things and who stubbornly resist a world-wide movement which, in my opinion, will prove irresistible for world disarmament and for a union of the peoples of the world in the interest of peace.

The proposition to make the American Navy the greatest in the world is a proposition to indulge in this extravagant luxury merely because our country is rich and powerful enough to do so. No support for this course can be found in our needs for naval defenses. The British Government has publicly stated that the United States, if it chooses, can have the biggest Navy, and it is very much to be doubted if the English Admiralty will undertake to challenge or match the construction of capital ships for the consummation of the project, which has the Navy Department behind it, to give our Navy the first place in the world.

"If it be claimed that our Navy must be the greatest in the world, in order to defend our commerce and defend our coasts, let me reply that this is precisely what was said by the Germans in their ambition to overmatch the British Navy. fact was that the great German Navy was no more a necessity to defend the commerce of Germany than a great Dutch Navy was necessary to defend the commerce of Holland, or a great Danish Navy to defend the commerce of Denmark. Danish ships, Dutch ships, Greek ships, and Belgian ships have as much freedom of commerce upon the seas as have the ships of the United Kingdom or the United States. There is no warrant for the assertion that the protection of commerce requires great armament. The nations which have a preponderance of naval power to-day will not use their naval superiority to interfere with the liberty of maritime commerce in time of peace. is every assurance that the world may depend upon this, and it is not necessary to defend every merchantman that plies the seas with the attendance of a ship of war.

"The great naval powers of the world to-day offer no obstacle to the utmost freedom of trade and commerce upon the part of the smallest and weakest nation, and the liberties which the powers ask for themselves they have freely accorded and will freely accord to the ships of every nation. The day has come when the United States must cease its prodigal and useless outlays in time of peace, for the making of armaments and the construction and maintenance of great ships to be moved and maneuvered at an annual cost of hundred of millions of dollars. Our naval policy must cease to be dominated by the professional naval view, and the influence of men who have a more comprehensive conception of the advantage and welfare of our country must become dominant in the naval policy of the Government.

"The League of Nations offers a practical and feasible plan to secure world disarmament. The reactionary policy of the United States seems to be an impediment to the realization of the practical conceptions of the league. All members of the league earnestly desire to be relieved from military and naval If the United States should enter the league, the burdens formulated plan of the league to secure disarmament would, in my opinion, be earnestly carried forward by all members of the league until its full fruition was realized. But, if this Nation does not enter the league it should cooperate with its members for the purpose of achieving those beneficent purposes which inspired its conception. It can be readily understood what effect the action of the United States in refusing to ratify the Versailles treaty or to enter the League of Nations would have upon the rest of the world. Notwithstanding this Nation has no imperialistic ambitions or a desire to obtain territory belonging to other nations, its course and its present attitude undoubtedly have produced skepticism in the minds of some nations with respect to the sincerity of our declarations.

When the Secretary of the Navy and others declare that we must have the most powerful Navy in the world, and when demands are made to execute a program that will cost more than a billion and a half dollars, and entail upon the United States an annual expenditure of at least one-half billion dollars for its maintenance, other nations may not be criticized if they express some concern regarding our purposes. In my opinion, we can not reconcile our declarations that we desire peace and disarmament with the avowal that we shall complete the 1916 program and supplement it with modern aircraft, submarines,

"If we believe in relieving the world from the burdens of military and naval disarmament, let us set the example. The psychology of our action in carrying forward a militant naval program will be bad. It will tend to drive the world back into old paths-into policies based upon alliances and the balance of power, into the shadows and darkness from which we emerged when military autocracy in Europe was overthrown and when the right of determination was accorded to the peoples We should suspend the naval program to the exof the world. tent herein indicated and either enter the League of Nations or address ourselves to obtaining an agreement with the great powers for the dimitation of armaments and the establishment of tribunals for the settlement of international controversies.

"The wealth and power of the United States, together with its isolated position, give us the primacy of the world. We should lead in every movement for justice and righteousness and peace. This propaganda for a Navy to outstrip the world has little or nothing behind it excepting an appeal to the national pride and vanity. The adding of capital ship to capital ship is bound to raise misgivings on the part of other nations and will incline them to ascribe ulterior and imperialistic purposes to our Government and will engender distrust and jealousy against a people who in their hearts sincerely desire the welfare of humanity. If the United States desires, as it should, to have the emulation of other nations, we should set them an example. Do we desire that they shall emulate us in the construction of men-of-war, or that they shall emulate us in our defense of the principles and purposes of international peace and justice?

"Whither are we to lead the world? That is the question. Shall it be along the lines of arms and war, or upon the paths of peace and trade and constructive progress, which shall turn the work and materials of the world to the increase of goods and riches and wealth, for the blessing of all the nations? Do we desire to impress the world with fear and terror of our country or with that respect and trust and confidence which an adherence to the principles of liberty, of justice, and of peace will invite from all other nations? These questions are before us. Our answer will determine the fate of the world."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the want of a quorum. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll. The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

SALE OF FIREARMS.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, on yesterday I reported from the Committee on the Jadiciary favorably and with an amendment the bill (S. 1184) to suppress the sale of pistels, revolvers, and other firearms of like form, size, and description, commonly used in the commission of felonious homicides and assaults, and to provide punishment for violation of the provisions of the same. At the meeting of the committee the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandeger] was not present on account of thiness. He is opposed to the bill, and he has communicated with me this morning, telling me of his illness and of his inability to be present, and stating that he wishes to be heard before the committee upon the bill. It is only common courtesy and, I think, justice that he should be heard. I therefore ask that the bill may be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary in order that the Senator from Connecticut may have an opportunity to be heard there upon the measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be taken from the calendar and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENYON. I offer an amendment to the pending bill, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE resumed the speech begun by him on yesterday. After having spoken for nearly two hours, he said:

Mr. President, I have no doubt that the natural reluctance of naval officers to commit what Admiral Sims calls professional suicide has a great deal to do with their insistence upon the construction of the capital ships in the face of the opinions I have quoted. But I see another reason why this unceasing demand for enormous appropriations for the construction of capital ships is made. Before I take that up, as it invites me to a field of investigation touching what I regard as the improper and corrupting influences back of this proposed legislation, and as it will take me some time to lay the facts I have gathered bearing upon that issue before the Senate, and as I have now spoken for nearly two hours, I will, Mr. President, at this convenient point in my argument surrender the floor for the day.

Mr. CURTIS obtained the floor. Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. POMERENE in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. CURTIS. I was about to move that the Senate go into executive session, but I will withhold the motion if the Senator from Mississippi desires to give a notice.

Mr. HARRISON. I wanted to ask a question of the Senator in charge of the bill,

Mr. CURTIS. He is out of the Chamber for the moment. I shall send for him.

Mr. HARRISON. It may be that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] can give me the information, or that the Senator from Kansas can give it. I should like to know just what is the status of the proposed amendment of the Senator from Idaho touching disarmament. Has there been any agreement resched touching the matter?

Mr. BORAH. There has been an agreement reached, which I think is of the general import that there will be no point of order raised against it. Further than that, there is no agreement

Mr. HARRISON. I am curious to know the position of the President, in view of the fact that certain statements were made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter], in charge of the bill, and by the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], who has had charge of the bill quite a good deal of the time. After their conferences with the President a statement was issued to the effect that the President is opposed to the resolution on disarmament offered by the Senator from Idaho. I am wondering if he has come around to that Senator's way of thinking on the proposition and has given his consent that the acting chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee and the Senators on the other side of the aisle shall acquiesce in it. I do not see the Senator in charge of the bill present. I do not know whether the Senator from Kausas [Mr. Curtis] can give the information.

Mr. CURTIS. The Senators on this side of the Chamber are going to vote their sentiments on the question when it comes before the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. Is there any understanding that they are to vote for it?

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know. Every Senator will be free to vote his own good judgment. That is the way we do over here; every Senator votes the way he chooses.

Mr. HARRISON. You have the steam roller working splendly. May I ask the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] whether there will be a point of order made against his amendment?

Mr. BORAH. I feel very certain there will not be a point of order raised against it. Of course, anyone on this side has a right to raise a point of order, but the Senator in charge of the bill stated upon the floor that he did not propose to raise any point of order. That is the only agreement that there is.

At this point Mr. Poindexter entered the Chamber.

Mr. HARRISON. I presume, then, that no one will make a point of order as to the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho and it will go through. The Senator from Washington is now in the Chamber. It will curtail the debate quite largely if that is the understanding. It is the understanding of the Senator from Washington, I understand, that no point of order will be made against the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only spoke for myself personally and not for the committee or any other Member of the Senate.

Mr. HARRISON. I stated before the Senator came in that in view of what has been said in the debate, and in view of statements that were issued by Senators in interviews with newspapermen, it seems that the President was against the proposition of the Senator from Idaho. Has the President changed on that proposition? Does it meet with his approval, may I ask the Senator?

'Mr. POINDEXTER. I am not authorized to speak for the President. I assume that he will make his wishes known to the Senate in the proper way.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator has had no word from the President of a public nature, I presume?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No. nothing of a public nature.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; nothing of a public nature.
Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I had the floor and yielded to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.
Mr. CURTIS. If there is no further legislative business—
Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair).

Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CURTIS. Certainly, if the Senator wishes to give a notice.

Mr. POMERENE. I desire to give notice of a motion to suspend the rules in connection with the amendment which I proposed the other day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The notice of motion will be read.

The Assistant Secretary. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Pomerene] gives notice that under Senate Rule XL he will move to suspend, if necessary, paragraph 3 of Rule XVI in order to present to the Senate the amendment to House bill 4803, which he submitted on May 4, as follows:

At the proper place insert the following: "Provided, That the President is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to delay for a period of six months, in whole or in part, the building program provided for in this act in order to enable him to arrange for a conference with the Governments of Great Britain, Japan, and such other powers as to him may seem proper, with the view of reducing substantially the naval building programs of the several Governments se participating in said conference, and if they agree upon such plan of reduction, the President is hereby further authorized to suspend, in whole or in part, the said building program in order to enable him to carry out any agreement thus made."

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Washington, who has charge of the bill, has very generously stated that he would not make a point of order against the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. I hope that he will not play favorites, and that he will not make any point of order against the amendment which I have proposed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall not play favorites. I shall not make any point of order against any amendment proposed by the Senator from Ohio that is identical with the one proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. POMERENE. It is not identical with it, but it has for its object the same purpose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding was that it was quite different, but I have not examined it and can not speak about it. The reading of it was omitted at the desk just now. Thomas O. Cooper.

Mr. POMERENE. It relates to the matter of getting a conference with other nations looking to disarmament. In substance it provides that the President, in his discretion, may suspend any part of the program for new construction for a period of six months in order to enable him to negotiate with the other nations for a plan of disarmament.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DRAWBRIDGE AT WILLAMETTE FALLS, OREG.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 2173) authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a private drawbridge over and across Lock No. 4 of the canal and locks, Willamette Falls, Clackamas County, Oreg., and I submit a report (No. 58) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Crown Willamette Paper Co., a corporation, is hereby authorized, subject to the approval of the Chief of Engineers and Secretary of War, and to such conditions as they may prescribe, to construct, maintain, and operate a private drawbridge, connecting the units of its industrial plant, over and across Lock No. 4 of the canal and locks, Willamette Falls, Clackamas County, Oreg., and to use the canal right of way for abutments or other construction work, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 18, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I report back favorably with amendments from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (H. R. 5010) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 59) thereon.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator from New York if he expects to call up the bill at an early day?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. STANLEY:

A bill (S. 1838) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes, relating to patents; to the Committee on Patents.
By Mr. McCORMICK:

A bill (S. 1839) to create the department of public welfare, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor. By Mr. ELKINS:

A bill (S. 1840) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Reed; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 1841) to reimburse L. W. Dragoo, formerly post-master at Smithfield, Wetzel County, W. Va., for money, money orders, and postage stamps stolen; to the Committee on Claims. By Mr. OWEN:

A bill (S. 1842) authorizing the Wichita and affiliated bands of Indians in Oklahoma to submit claims to the Court of Claims; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LODGE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 61) authorizing the Joint Committee on the Library to provide for the restoration and completion of the historical frieze in the Rotunda of the Capitol; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 62) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to appoint a commission to investigate and appraise the value of Jamestown Island, Va., and to make recommendations to Congress regarding the purchase; to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted an amendment providing that the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and empowered to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, certain additional land across the alley which joins the east side or rear of the present site of the customhouse, appraisers' stores, etc., building at Wilmington, N. C., as an addition to the present site, and to pay for such additional land from the unencumbered balance of the appropriations heretofore made for the acquisition of a site and the erection of the customhouse, appraisers' stores, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

S. 594. An act for the relief of certain ex-service men whose rights to make entries on the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, were defeated by intervening claims;

S. 1479. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River; and

H. R. 4075. An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. President, I ask that the naval appropriation bill be laid before the Senate and that the question be put on the pending amendment.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the first amendment of the committee which was passed over, the amendment on page 8, line 14. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the pending amendment. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the

The READING CLEEK. On page 8, line 14, under the head of "Bureau of Navigation," for transportation and recruiting, the committee proposes to strike out "$3,500,000" and to insert " $4,500,000

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before the roll is called upon the amendment, I should like to ask whether any explanation has been made of the necessity for an increase of $1,000,000 over the amount provided by the House. May I ask the Senator from Washington?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is all based upon a mere matter of calculation of the necessary expenses of transportation and recruiting, which constitute about 90 per cent of the amount of the appropriation. The bill is based upon an estimate of the same number of men that we have at the present time.

The actual cost under this item for the same number of men during the current fiscal year was $5,000,000, half a million dollars more than the amount reported by the Senate com-There will be, according to facts which are known positively, a larger number of expirations of terms of enlist-ment during the fiscal year provided for by this appropriation than during the current fiscal year. For that reason the Navy Department made an estimate of $6,000,000.

The appropriation under this head in 1915 was $980,000; in 1916, $880,000; in 1917, $1,254,752.84 with a deficiency of $6,-517.10; in 1918, $1,479,752.84 with a deficiency of $6,989,559.04; in 1919, $12,000,000, with a deficiency of $6,735,764.70; in 1920, $9,000,000 with a deficiency of $3,000,000; in 1921, $3,500,000, with a deficiency of $1,500,000, making a total for 1921, the current fiscal year, of $5,000,000.

There will be in the neighborhood of 43,000 expirations of enlistments during the coming fiscal year, and if they are to be replaced, as is contemplated by the bill, it will be necessary to recruit men, to pay their traveling expenses, and to pay the traveling expenses to their homes of the 43,000 men whose terms Under these conditions and upon the testimony of the officers of the Navy Department who were very closely examined by the committee, it was considered that the amount allowed in the report of the committee is very reasonable, the intention being to avoid a deficiency if possible.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator gave the amount expended in

Will he give it again?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Eight hundred and eighty thousand dollars.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator state the personnel of the Navy at that time?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will furnish that to the Senator. I can not state it at this moment.
Mr. LENROOT. Was it about 100,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, much lower than that; something like 55,000, my recollection is.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Taking the figures the Senator now gives us—55,000, costing $800,000—it is now proposed that 120,000, or a little more than double, shall cost $1,600,000. Does the Senator believe that transportation costs have increased about 300 per cent since 1916?

Mr. HALE. Two cents a mile was allowed for mileage at that time, and it is now 5 cents a mile.

Mr. LENROOT, I understand. Does the Senator say that transportation costs have increased 300 per cent?

Mr. HALE. One hundred and fifty per cent; from 2 cents

Mr. LENROOT. That is 150 per cent, yet here is an increase in the total of about 300 per cent. I wish to say that the subject of transportation is not very different in the Navy from what it is in the Army. Transportation is a subject, the ex-penditure for which can be controlled and ought to be controlled by Congress. There is only one fixed liability for transportation, and that is the transportation cost for discharged men and the transportation cost for newly enlisted men. With the exception of those two items, transportation is absolutely in the control of the department.

We have the same thing in the War Department, as I happen to know, being a member of the Committee on Military Affairs. The Secretary of War has told us that the subject of transportation can be controlled. The department can get along and they will get along with whatever Congress chooses to give them. It will mean, of course, that there will not be as many officers or as many men transferred from San Francisco to New York and from New York to San Francisco upon their own application; there will not be as much travel at the expense of the Government if this appropriation remains at $3,500,000; but it will not injure the efficiency of the Navy in the least degree,

I am very sorry to say it, I do not like to say it to the Senate, but it does seem to me that we have got to cut out the overhead if we are going to maintain a Navy and an Army of which the people of this country will approve

Taking it for granted that 40,000 enlistments will expire, I should say that the average transportation charge would not be over $25 a piece, and assuming that there will be the same number of new enlistments the aggregate travel allowance for those items would be $2,000,000.

Of course, the different departments want all the money they can get; they continue to make extravagant estimates; and we are not going to stop such expenditures unless we hold down the appropriations and refuse to grant deficiency appropriations. In other words, the departments have got to be forbidden to create any deficiencies except where the liability is created by law.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. Why does the Senator from Wisconsin think that the average transportation charge would be $25 and no more?

Mr. LENROOT. Well, the enlistments naturally come from the coast cities.

Mr. McCORMICK. What leads the Senator to believe that? The Senator surely knows the percentage of the men at the Great Lakes station as compared with other stations.

Mr. LENROOT. During the war I will admit, of course, that that percentage was large; but I think if the Senator will investigate the subject he will find that a very large proportion of the enlistments now come from along the different coasts, where the transportation charge is negligible. For instance, if the enlistment be in New York, there is no transportation or the charge is merely nominal. The Senator will admit that. The largest charge from the interior would be from Chicago to the Atlantic coast or from west of the Rocky Mountains to the Pacific coast.

Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury has indicated that in his opinion there are only two fields in which substantial reductions may be made; those are in the Army and in the The Army is trying to make reductions. The Committee on Military Affairs has been cutting out overhead expenses and limiting the appropriations which are to be made for civilian employees. I ask the Senator from Washington now how many civilian employees there are in the Navy?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think there are between 60,000 and 70,000.

Mr. LENROOT. There were something over 90,000 last February, were there not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not tell the Senator how many there were last February.

Mr. LENROOT. Taking the number to be 60,000, and the personnel being 120,000, does the Senator think that any kind of economy will warrant one civilian employee for every two of the enlisted personnel?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I rather think that would depend entirely upon the amount of work that may be carried on by the civilians. At the present time we have a very large construction program and a large repair program, and most of the civilian employees are engaged upon that work. If that is cut down, we should have fewer civillan employees; but if it is increased we should have more.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator from Washington how many clerical civilian employees there are in the Navy Department?

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin how many there are? He has studied this particular item. Suppose he informs the Senate about this matter.

Mr. LENROOT. I think I have a right to ask members of the committee for information upon a question to which they are giving their entire time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have answered a good many questions that the Senator has asked.

Mr. LENROOT. But, Mr. President, we are not going to have economy unless the committee having charge of the appropriation bills goes into these questions and limits appropriations

The Senator from Wisconsin is talking Mr. POINDEXTER. about something now that does not relate in any great degree to the appropriation which is pending before the Senate and to which he is addressing himself. The pending items is the appropriation for transportation.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true, but I have been confining my remarks during the few minutes I have spoken—and this is the first time that I have spoken--very closely to the bill.

Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. HALE. I can give the Senator from Wisconsin the number of clerical employees in the Navy Department.

Mr. LENROOT. I shall be very glad to have it. Mr. HALE. The number of clerical employees in the Navy Department is 12,058.

Mr. LENROOT. Has the Senator the figures as to the other employees?

Mr. HALE. The number I have given includes clerical, drafting, and technical employees in the Navy Department.

Mr. LENROOT. Has the Senator from Maine a list of the other special employees in the department?

Mr. HALE. It is not here at the moment, but I can obtain it for the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, to get back to this item, as the Senator thinks I should confine myself to it-and I am inclined to agree with him-the matter of transportation can be controlled. The transferring of officers and men across the country for some trivial reason ought to be stopped. It is being stopped in the Army; it is stopped to-day. The Secretary of War has issued the most rigid orders against any transpor-tation except that which is absolutely necessary. If the Congress is going to go on and grant items like this without any attempt to control them, of course we are not going to have any economy in this administration. I wish to make the general statement right now that, unless we make reductions in the appropriations for the Army and the Navy, considering the fixed charges with reference to interest upon our loans, with reference to the care of our soldiers, so that we may be able to reduce taxation in the next four years, Republican as I am, I want to say this morning that four years from now, when the votes are counted, members of some other party will do the cheering and not members of the Republican Party.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if his objection is based principally upon the 5 cents that is allowed for mileage for the enlisted men who are returned to their homes?

Mr. LENROOT. My principal objection is not based upon at. My principal objection is based upon the fact that I have no doubt the Navy is doing what the War Department did until recently, allowing transportation indiscriminately, so long as they had money in the fund with which to pay for it, without regard to economy.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, how much is the Senator allowed

Mr. LENROOT. I am allowed 40 cents a mile.

Mr. HALE. And the men in the Navy are allowed 5 cents. Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, we are very much interested in hearing the dialogue between Senators on the other side of the Chamber, but we can not hear anything except the answers of the Senator from Wisconsin. In order to enjoy the colloquy as it should be enjoyed and to profit by it as we should profit by it, we should hear the questions as well as the an-I ask, therefore, that the Senators asking questions will lift their voices so that we may hear them.

Mr. LENROOT. It is no answer, Mr. President, to say that Senators and Representatives receive 40 cents a mile for all of the travel that they have between Washington and their homes during the course of a year. The principal objection that I make is not to the 5 cents a mile allowed upon enlistment and the 5 cents a mile allowed upon discharge; that is only a part of the $4,500,000 which the committee proposes to appropriate. But what I do object to is the indiscriminate transfer of some officer who thinks he would rather serve upon some ship on the Pacific Ocean than at his station on a ship on the Atlantic Ocean, to serve his own desires. Tell me dollars out of the Treasury of the United States under this transportation item when the service can be carried on just as well without the transfer? My point is, this transportation matter can be controlled. We can get along without the extra $1,000,000 if the amendment is defeated. It is only a million dollars; and what is a million dollars? A million dollars is a drop in the bucket. That seems to be the attitude of many Senators; but it is the sum of the millions of dollars that is causing the tax burdens to-day, and, if it be true—and I am confident it is true—that the Navy Department can provide for all necessary transportation with $3,500,000, then the Senate is not justified in adopting this amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes. Mr. POMERENE, Is the increase of $1,000,000 based upon the recruiting and the traveling that will be necessary for a Navy of 100,000 men, as provided for in the House bill, or is it based upon a Navy of 120,000 men, as contemplated under the bill reported by the Senate committee?

Mr. LENROOT. I assume it is based on 120,000 men.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct.
Mr. President, I think I ought to say before the vote is taken on this amendment that, so far as the object of the Senator from Wisconsin is concerned, as he has stated it, I am sure the committee is in absolute and full sympathy. If it had been shown to the committee that more money is proposed to be appropriated in this item than will be required to meet the actual and necessary expenses to be incurred by the Navy Department for transportation and recruiting and the incidental items in a small amount which are supplemental to it, the committee would not have made the recommendation for this increase; but the recommendation is based upon tabulated figures of necessary expenses, and there has been nothing shown to the Senate by the Senator from Wisconsin or by any other Senator to indicate that in any way whatever the information furnished to the committee is incorrect.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment I will yield. The greater part of this appropriation is intended to pay the traveling expenses of enlisted men from their homes to recruiting stations, from recruiting stations to the points at which they receive their training, and from there to the stations to which they are assigned for service.

I have already stated that there will be a very large number of enlisted men discharged during the next fiscal year; in fact, the number will be much larger, which is a very important consideration, than during the current fiscal year or during preceding fiscal years, for the reason that since the period to which the Senator has referred the terms of enlistment have been reduced. Prior to the war the term of enlistment was four years. As we entered the war the term of enlistment was reduced to two years and three years and four years, it being left optional with the men as to what term they should enlist for. By reason of the short enlistment period there will be a greater number of expirations of enlistment during the next fiscal year than in preceding years.

The discretionary matter of which the Senator spoke con-cerning the travel of officers and the expenses which the Navy Department need not incur if they want to economize does not enter to any appreciable extent into this amount which is under discussion. If the Senator will permit me, I will give him some of the items that constitute the total of $4,500,000; in fact, according to the request and to the calculations of the Navy Department the items amounted to considerably more than that, but they were reduced by the committee in its report. I have already stated the estimates; I have already stated the expenses actually incurred during the current fiscal year, which amounted to $5,000,000.

In this item of transportation and recruiting, under the recommendations and the estimates of the Navy Department, there was an item for travel allowance of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment and for men discharged under honorable conditions prior to expiration of enlistment, 34,603, plus 9,600, or 44,203 men, not at $25 a man, as the Senator from Wisconsin has suggested, and I do not understand that the Senator gave that figure as the result of any examination or close calculation, but just as an offhand estimate. The figures that we have, which I understand are why there should be incurred an expense of several hundred based upon actual calculations of the known cost of the services required to be rendered, are $38.19 per man, making a total of $1,688,112,57

Another item is transportation for replacements of 44,203 men-that is, for men to take the places of those whose term of enlistment has expired, referred to in the first item.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question at that point? Does that 44,000 mean net loss or does it include reenlistments?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That does not include the reenlistments. The figures of 44,203 men do not relate to reenlistments. They relate to discharges from enlistment, men going to their homes whose enlistments have expired.

Mr. LENROOT. What was the total number of discharges-that is, at the expiration of enlistment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have just stated the total number 44.203

Mr. LENROOT. Do none of those reenlist?

Mr. POINDEXTER, Undoubtedly a great many of them will reenlist, and you have to pay them when they reenlist, when they are returning from their homes.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator mean if they do not go home at all? Suppose a man reenlists in foreign waters; does he get his travel allowance both ways?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand that a man whose term of enlistment has expired is entitled under the law to a travel allowance to his home.

Mr. LENROOT. And back? Mr. POINDEXTER. Not back unless he reenlists.

Mr. LENROOT. I say if he reenlists?
Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; if he reenlists he is entitled, then, just as a man who enlists the first time, to his travel pay back to whatever station he is assigned to.

Mr. LENROOT. He gets greater advantages, then, than Members of Congress do, because I never knew a Member of Congress to draw a travel allowance where the session ended one day and a new session began the next day.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have heard a good deal of discussion about that. I do not know what the fact is in that regard.

Another item constituting this amount is transportation for replacements of the 44,203 men, plus other losses, 23,160 mendesertions, deaths, retirements, and so forth-at $38.19 per man for reenlistments, and $53.83 per man for the first enlistment, $3,258,141.09. The Senator will notice the difference between the average amount allowed in travel pay for a new enlistment and that allowed to a man reenlisting. That difference, I am informed-and I have no reason at all to doubt it-is caused by the circumstance that a new man enlisting for the first time is sent to a training station, and he gets his travel pay to the training station. After he has completed his training he is sent to the station to which he is assigned for duty and gets his travel pay there, making the total greater than in the case of a reenlisted man, who does not go to a training station, but goes directly to his station of duty.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it possible that when a man enlists in the Navy and gets into the service, and his first station, we will say, is the Great Lakes Station, the Government then pays him 5 cents a mile from the Great Lakes Station to his ship? Is that true? Is that possible?

Mr. POINDEXTER. He gets his actual traveling expenses. Mr. LENROOT. That is less than 5 cents a mile. It is not. then, the same as when he travels from the place of enlistment to the training camp?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We are informed by the men who have charge of these accounts that the average cost of that service is $53.83, being 5 cents a mile under the law when the man goes to the training station, and his actual expenses from the training station to the station to which he is assigned for duty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator state what bonus the man who reenlists also receives?

Mr. POINDEXTER. One month's extra pay.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think we reach a point here where the same criticism can be made of the Navy that is made of the Army organization—that we are spending entirely too much money to convert the Army and the Navy into mercenary establishments.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? will state to the Senator that in the bill reported this morning from the Military Affairs Committee we are repealing the allewance for reenlistment, which amounts to $90 per soldier.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And my judgment is that that should also be done with the Navy. We ought not to offer inducements for men to reenlist. We ought rather to insist upon their going back to civil life, or at least offer them no inducement for reenlistment, and draw into the Army and into the Navy new men for training, so that both the Army and the Navy may be converted into schools. This method of offering men a bonus for reenlistment, and then giving them, in addition, travel pay, both going and coming, adds a large item of expense both to the Army and to the Navy, and, in my opinion, is a detriment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is another question that is not involved in the appropriation that is immediately under discussion. I will say in connection with it, however, that there has been very great difficulty in securing men for the Navy. I have already pointed out the number whose terms are expiring and the number of reenlistments has been very small. The number of new enlistments also has been very small.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I suggest that this is a very opportune time to do in the Navy bill what has been done in the Army bill-that is, repeal this bonus-because the fact is that during periods of depression of this sort there is always an excess of applications for enlistment in the Army, and I presume the same is true of the Navy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that is a situation that might very well be discussed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Florida. Mr. FLETCHER. In the Army the bonus or amount allowed on reenlistment, as I recall, was three months' pay, $90, which of course is a good deal larger than the item in the Navy. We are saving something over $1,000,000 by repealing that provision in the law. I understood the Senator to say that the bonus in the Navy was only one month's pay, which of course is not quite so large a sum, but it might be worth saving. ever, we are saving over $1,000,000 by striking out that bonus provision in the Army bill, which was three months' pay, or $90 for each man.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think, before acting on that, the matter ought to be investigated. It has not been taken up, as it is not involved in any amendment proposed by the committee to this bill. It has not been presented in any form whatever, and it ought to be inquired into.

Mr. FLETCHER. In connection with this item I assume, of course, that if the amount is not needed or required

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is not included in this item.
Mr. FLETCHER. No; but I say, in connection with this item, if the amount carried in the bill is not required for that purpose, it will not be spent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It will not be spent, of course.
Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Florida whether he has known any time during the last eight years when an allowance for transportation was not spent by the department to which it was allowed?

Mr. FLETCHER. I can not answer as to that; but of course they are not obliged to spend the money simply because we appropriate it. If they want to economize, they can do so.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the acting chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee that if he makes his investigation among the officers of the Navy, he will probably find, as the Committee on Military Affairs has found, that officers of the Army will always insist on retaining the bonus paid for reenlistment, because they want to avoid the burden of training new men. The very thing which I think they should be compelled to do is the thing which the officers of the Army desire They want these old men, because it is not necessary to train them; and I want to say to the Senator that it seems to me that that question is involved in this item, because the reenlisting of men appears to involve the payment of twice the amount of travel allowance that would be necessary if new men were enlisted and not reenlisted.

Mr. POINDEXTER. New men, of course, have to be trained. There is a great advantage in having old men reenlist. One reason for the number of men that is requested for the Navy is the predominance of new men and their total unfitness for naval service until they have gone through a period of training. I readily understand the attitude of naval officers and Army officers that the Senator from Nebraska speaks of, and for that reason in almost every instance the estimates and the requests from those officers for appropriations have been modified to a very considerable extent by the committee.

I want to add just one or two other items that constitute this amount.

In addition to the discharges and the enlistments and the re-enlistments, there is included transportation for men in the service between ships and stations at the calculated amount of an average sum of $6.36 per year per man for 120,000 men, or $763,200.

Transportation of enlisted men of the Naval Reserve Force to and from duty, with subsistence and transfer en route, or cash in lieu thereof, actual expenses, $303,394.

Then there is included the expense of recruiting. Of course it is absolutely necessary that an organization for recruiting men should be maintained, and that amounts to $378,000.

Buildings are necessary for this purpose. For the rent of rendezvous and the expenses of maintaining recruiting stations, $264,574.

Mr. President, those constitute the items going to make up the amount estimated by the department.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question, please?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Gladly.
Mr. POMERENE. I notice in the report submitted by the Senator from Washington, on behalf of the committee, this

The bill as it passed the House made appropriations on the basis of an enlisted strength of 100,000 men in the Navy. Your committee rec-ommends, and has so proposed amendments to the bill, making appro-priations upon the basis of 120,000 men as the strength of the Navy.

Was there any provision in the House bill which limited the naval force to 100,000, or is there any provision in the proposed Senate amendments which increases the strength to 120,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no direct or express provision either by the House or by the Senate committee.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, Mr. President, I suppose we should pass the bill as it is. What provision is there in this legislation which would indicate that these expenditures were to be made for a Navy of 100,000 or for a Navy of 120,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The limitation of the amount appropriated will necessitate a Navy with a personnel of not over

Mr. POMERENE. Then, in the Senate committee bill as it is, we are providing for very substantial increases, and in this particular item an increase of $1,000,000, and we do not know whether that is to be for a naval force of 100,000 or a naval force of 120,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; we know that, Mr. President, because it can not be paid out except under the scrutiny of the comptroller and of the Auditor of the Treasury for the Navy Department, for the purposes specified in this bill, under which the expenses are limited by law.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, Mr. President, if the provisions of the bill as it passed the House should prevail, these expenditures may be incurred for a Navy of 100,000 or a Navy of 120,000, without any restrictions whatsoever upon the Navy Department. Is that right?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The only restriction, so far as the law is concerned, outside of the physical restriction of the amount of money there is to do the work with, is the law which authorizes 143,000 men. That is the authorized strength of the Navy. Mr. POMERENE. Let me make another suggestion-

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would like to interpolate a remark right here, in order that there may not be any misunderstanding. I got the impression, from some remarks the Senator from Ohio and other Senators made the other day, that possibly they were under some misapprehension as to the basis of the appropriation recommended by the Senate committee as to the personnel in the Navy. It seems that they spoke of it as an increase in the Navy. It is not contemplated by the Senate committee, in fixing this amount, that there should be any increase of the Navy. The only change that was made in the bill by the Senate committee was an increase in the appropriation made by the House, for the reason that the House appropriations were made upon the calculation of a reduction of the Navy of 20,000 men.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think the question which asked during the colloquy to which the Senator from Washington refers was not quite as accurate as it should have been: but I based my inquiry upon statements which the Senator from Washington had made in his report, which I read just a

It seems to me that the Senator from Washington, by the statement he has just made, indicates another weakness in this bill, namely, that under present legislation there can be a Navy of 143,000, instead of 100,000, as provided for in the bill as it passed the House, or 120,000, as provided for in the estimates of the Senate committee bill. So that if the Navy should see fit to recruit up to the legal strength of 143,000, as a result we would have an enormous deficit at the end of the fiscal year.

I was about to make this suggestion to the Senator. He has indicated that one of the reasons for the increase of $1,000,000 upon this particular item is the fact that the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs contemplated a Navy of 120,000, instead of 100,000. Would it not be much better for the Senate to take its sense as to whether it wanted a Navy of 100,000, or a Navy of 120,000, or a Navy of 143,000? It would shed at least a little light upon this question in the minds of some of us who feel that we ought to have a program of economy here, instead of these extravagant appropriations, as they seem to me,

I do not understand how any Senator can vote with satisfaction to himself on this very question as to whether we shall increase this item $1,000,000, when we do not know whether the Navy will be 100,000 or 120,000 or 143,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We know it can not be over 120,000, because they will not have money for more than that.

Mr. POMERENE. How do we know that? They will be coming in on a new deficiency bill, calling attention to the large deficit, because there was, it may be, an increase of the Navy over and above the 120,000.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Washington whether it is his purpose to place a limit on the personnel in this bill by way of an amendment, or is he going to permit the bill to pass in its present form with respect to that question, so that, as suggested by the Senator from Ohio, the same personnel which now exists might be maintained and a deficit be presented from time to time to meet the expenses of the increased personnel?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is not the purpose of the Senator from Washington to propose that amendment, because he is not authorized by the committee to do it. The law fixes the authorized limit.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Washington accept an amendment, if it shall be tendered by some other Senator or by myself, limiting the personnel to 100,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not say at this time that I would accept it. I have no authority to accept it.

Mr. KING. I understand that. Would the Senator accept an amendment limiting it to 120,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The purpose of the bill is to limit the Navy to 120,000. That is what it is now. Mr. KING. I will say to the Senator, so that he may be advised, that before the debate shall have been concluded I shall offer an amendment restricting the personnel to 100,000.

May I inquire of the Senator, in view of the fact that the appropriation bill for last year, under the head of "Bureau of Navigation," carried only $3,500,000, if he feels there is a necessity now of an appropriation of $4,500,000? I think I understood the observation of the Senator that a number of enlistments would expire, which might necessitate some increased expenditures; but, as I understand, the expirations last year were as great as the expirations in the current year, if not greater, because at the height of the war we had more than 500,000 in the Navy. Certainly there must have been a large number of persons who have withdrawn from the Navy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, we are not put to the necessity of acting on conjecture and speculation as to that. That is a matter of record in the Navy Department, and the fact is that the expirations during the current year were very much less than they will be during the coming fiscal year. Furthermore, the amount provided last year was not $3,500,000, but a total of $5,000,000, or $500,000 more than the amount carried in this bill.

Mr. KING. I have before me the bill for the last year. Mr. POINDEXTER. There was another bill, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KING. A deficit?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; of a million and a half.

Mr. KING. To recur, I have before me H. R. 13108, Sixtysixth Congress, an act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and under the head of Bureau of Navigation, and under a subhead "Transportation and recruiting," the same heads which are found in the present bill, and under which heads the same items carried in the pending measure are delineated, the appropriation was $3,500,000. The Senator now advises me that, notwithstanding that very large appropriation, there was a deficit.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A deficit caused by actual expenditures.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator this question: Does the testimony before the committee indicate whether the department can in any degree control this matter of mileage? It seems to me that we ought to ascertain what the department is doing in that particular. Is it sending men clear across the continent, and sending men back across the continent? We found in some of the investigations before the Committee on Military Affairs that that has heretofore been a fault.

Rall

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Navy is administered much more efficiently and economically than is the Army.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What has the evidence shown? indications are that the average distance traveled per man is 760 miles. If the recruiting can be done near the seashore, that seems to me like a very long average distance per man.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator can get some idea about that, I think, from the figures I gave a moment ago, which seem to me to be quite significant, that the average travel pay for men discharged going to their homes is $38.19, and the mileage in that regard is not a thing that the Navy Department can regulate. They can not determine where a man's home is. The men go to their homes, wherever they may be. The average for men newly enlisted going from their homes to the recruiting station, and from the recruiting station to whatever place of duty is assigned them, is $53.83, while the average travel pay of men in the service, which is the class of men the Senator is now referring to, transferred by the Navy Department from one post of duty to another, which is a matter under the control of the Navy Department, was only $6.36.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That was on the theory that every one of the 120,000 men was given travel pay.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; it averaged $6 for 120,000 men.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; the entire number.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. An average of $6 for 120,000 men. Of course, there were a great many of them who received no allowance of that sort. Now, I want to ask the Senator this question: Does not the Navy Department control the points at which it can make enlistments, and does not this indicate that on an average it is making the enlistments 760 miles from the place at which the men will be needed? It seems to me that is a matter the committee ought to investigate. It has been found that all of the travel-pay allowance, both in the Army and the Navy, is consumed every year, and is it not possible for the Navy, as well as the Army, to make its enlistments at such points as will not involve such a heavy burden upon the Gov-ernment? An average distance of 760 miles seems to me entirely too great.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, one of the great naval training stations of the country is in the interior, the greatest we have, the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, and newly enlisted men are sent to that training station; then they are sent from that training station to the seacoast for duty. Of course, the distance there is necessarily quite large, something like 1.500 miles from the coast to the training station.

I think there undoubtedly must be some opportunity for economy along the lines the Senator from Nebraska has suggested, and I apprehend that some attention has been paid to that. I do not think there has been any unnecessary distance involved in the lines of travel marked out by the department. It has recruiting stations at various places in the country. The fact is that it has recruiting stations at every point where it was considered probable they could receive a sufficient number of desirable men to justify the maintenance of the stations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on agreeing to the pending amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. 'Mr. President, there is some confusion about the pending question. I ask that the amendment be stated again before we vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The Assistant Secretary. The amendment will be found on page 8, in line 14, under the heading of Bureau of Navigation, for transportation and recruiting, where the committee proposes to strike out "$3,500,000" and insert in lieu "$4,500,000."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, my attention has been called to a statement which I made that might easily be misunderstood. I stated that the mileage allowance to Representatives and Senators is 40 cents a mile, having in mind, of course, the round trip. The actual mileage is, as we all know, 20 cents per mile each

The Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] assured us that in 1916, with a personnel of 55,000, we appropriated, in round numbers, $800,000. For a little more than double that personnel it is now proposed to appropriate $4,500,000, an increase of 550 per cent. Mr. President, the country will not stand for that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the negative). I wish to inquire if the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Kellogg] has voted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted. Mr. SIMMONS. I have a general pair with that Senator. transfer my pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and let my vote stand.

Mr. COLT (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAM-MELL]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] and let my vote stand.

Mr. HALE. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Shields] to the junior Senator from Vermont

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (after having voted in the nega-five). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. Fernald]. I transfer my pair to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

I wish also to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] is paired with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS].

The result was announced-yeas 31, nays 39, as follows:

So the first committee amendment passed over was rejected, The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary. The next amendment of the committee passed over will be found on page 22, line 6, in the total for the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he will have any objection to voting at this time upon the item on page 30, which covers the question of increased personnel. I merely suggest it because of the fact that the debate, which has gone on with reference to the amendment upon which we voted, would be largely applicable to the item to which I refer and which is found on page 30, involving an increase from $72,421,647 to $87,798,447. Is there any reason why we should not take a vote upon that item at this time?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We passed over several other amendments preceding that one.

Mr. BORAH. I will state my only object. The amendment to which I refer is so nearly akin to the other that it occurred to me it might be well to vote upon it at this time. However, I do not wish to interfere with the Senator's desire in the matter.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should be very glad if we could vote upon the amendments passed over in order as they come up.

Mr. BORAH. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment of the committee will be stated again.

The Assistant Secretary. The next committee amendment passed over is found on page 22, line 6, under the heading "Bureau of Yards and Docks, maintenance," where the committee proposes to strike out "$7,500,000" and to insert mittee proposes to strike out "$9,000,000."

Mr. BORAH. That is an increase of $1,500,000. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLT (when his name was called). Making the same announcement as on the last vote in regard to my pair and its transfer, I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). First transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Ransdell], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire if the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Shields] has voted? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. HALE. Making the same announcement as on the last vote in regard to my pair and its transfer, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (after having voted in the nega-ve). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I have general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. I inquire if that Senator has voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Wyoming has not voted. Mr. OVERMAN. Having a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. KENDRICK. I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] and vote "nay."

Mr. WALSH of Montana (after having voted in the affirmation of the contant from Navy Japany [Mr. Feb.

tive). I notice that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. Fre-LINGHUYSEN] has not voted. I have a pair with that Senator, and under the circumstances I am obliged to withdraw my vote.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLean] is paired with the Senator from

So the amendment reported by the committee was agreed to. Mr. KING. I desire to give notice that in the Senate I shall demand a separate vote upon the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state

the next amendment passed over.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 22, line 18, after the word "exceed," it is proposed to strike out "$150,000" and to insert "$250,000," so as to read:

Provided further, That expenditures from appropriations contained in this act for the maintenance, operation, and repair of motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles, including the compensation of operators, shall not exceed $250,000.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am astonished somewhat at the lack of generosity on the part of the committee. Nearly every officer, apparently, both in the Army and in the Navy, feels constrained to have an automobile and a chauffeur. I think it is unfair for us to deny them such advantages and luxuries. I can not at all understand why we should limit the amount to $250,000, and, in view of the last vote, I should feel like asking that it be increased to $300,000.

To be serious, Mr. President, I think that the amount allowed by the House in this case is entirely too much, and I sincerely hope the Senate committee amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the expenditure for the current year for this item was $600,000, and the committee cut it down to $250,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee,

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask some member of the committee how many automobiles the item provides for? How many officers will be provided with automobiles under it

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Navy has 391 and the Marine Corps has 115, a total of 506, of which 173 are passenger cars at the present time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is, $250,000 only provides for 173 passenger cars?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, no; it provides for all of the freight cars and all the trucks, and the pay of chauffeurs.

Mr. BORAH. This does not cover anything except passenger cars, does it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. The provision says "motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles." It is limited to passenger automobiles which are used by officers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask how many automobiles are covered by the $250,000 proposed to be appropriated?

Mr. POINDEXTER. One hundred and seventy-three.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. Where are those passenger vehicles operated?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are operated at all of the naval stations wherever they have automobiles at all. In some places they still use horses, but I think wherever the horses have been supplanted by motor cars this appropriation will I have in mind the navy yard at Puget Sound. The last time I was there they were still driving horses to haul passenger-carrying vehicles. There are some cars maintained here in the city of Washington.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This item is for passenger cars for naval officers only under the one heading "Bureau of Yards and Docks"; it does not include passenger cars provided for naval officers elsewhere. Am I right in that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is there any other appropriation in this bill for passenger-carrying motors for officers?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No.: thore is none.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; there is none.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is the item limited to automobiles used by officers at navy yards and docks?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it covers the entire appropriation, so far as the Navy is concerned, for this purpose,

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is limited to the heading "Bureau of Yards and Docks."

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it comes under that heading, but it is the only appropriation carried by the bill on that subject.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield. Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, this item does not increase the appropriation one cent. The House bill limited the amount that could be employed in connection with the motor-propelled passenger vehicles to $150,000. Some of the passenger vehicles covered by this item are used also for other motor-transportation purposes, for carrying various commodities. The pre-ceding clause in the bill prohibits the use of any of the money appropriated by the bill for the purchase of passenger-carrying vehicles, and unless the amount allowed by the Senate committee is provided it will be impossible to use all the motorpropelled vehicles now on hand. I repeat the item does not increase the appropriation; it is merely a question of administration. Under the limitation of the House bill it will not be possible to purchase additional passenger-carrying vehicles, and, as I have intimated, the carrying of passengers is not the only use to which they are put, for they can be used and are used a great deal for other purposes,

Mr. BORAH. For what purpose?

Mr. SWANSON. The Navy has so many passenger vehicles, which can be used for various purposes and to transport various A limitation has been put on by the House that no part of the appropriation contained in the bill shall be used for motor-propelled passenger vehicles except to the extent of $150,000. The Senate committee have simply increased the limitation of $150,000 to $250,000 without increasing the appropriation, as I understand.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know what the considerations were which led the committee to increase the limit on passenger vehicles from $150,000 to $250,000.

Mr. SWANSON. I was not at all the hearings of the committee, but my understanding in a general way is that they have these passenger vehicles, and all of them can not be used if the limit is not increased. We would simply have to scrap them, throw them away, and lose the money they cost. If they are operated they can be used to a considerable extent to transport things in the same way that a motor truck is used. There is no increase in the appropriation. It simply shows the caviling way in which people are fighting this bill. It is for the Senate to say whether they want to scrap these passenger vehicles, throw them away, and not be able to use them. They can not be used without somebody to run them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator imply that these passenger vehicles are to be used for the transportation of freight?

Mr. SWANSON. Some freight can be carried in them. The number of them has been stated. If you think it wise to put on this limitation without increasing the appropriation, it is left to the administration. They say that they can get along with $1,300,000 if you allow this amount to stay in. Without that they say they can not do it, as I understand.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator recall how much the bill of last year appropriated for this item?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not recall. I have not it here. If the Senator will look at one of those large bills it will be found there. The Senator from Washington can give that informa-

Mr. POINDEXTER. The expenditures were $600,000.

Mr. SWANSON. It is no increase at all, Mr. BORAH. How much did we appropriate?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars, as I recall.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that is it exactly. We appropriated four hundred and odd thousand dollars, and they have a deficit in that item of some two hundred thousand dollars. Mr. President, that disposes of the argument of the able Senator from Virginia, because apparently they would not pay any attention to it

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I know nothing about the merits of this matter, but it has been a somewhat notorious fact that during the course of the last three or four years the Government has been investing in an unusual number of automobiles, and we know that there is more or less of a public scandal here in Washington, because those automobiles are not used for governmental purposes. They are used for social They are a part of the perquisites of the offices held purposes. by these officers. Now, it may be necessary to have these 173 automobiles employed in Government service at the yards and docks of the United States Navy, but if it is necessary there ought to be some showing. The committee ought to make a showing, and reveal to the Senate why the House provision limiting the amount that may be expended for passenger vehicles to $150,000 ought to be increased to $250,000.

I am going to vote against the amendment until there is a showing here as to why the Government needs more than that number of passenger vehicles for governmental purposes around its vards and docks.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The committee has already made a showing, but I can give the Senator the details of the service which is covered by this limitation.

I want to say, in connection with the matter, that it seems to me that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], who I believe is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, without adverting in any unfriendly way to the War Department, bases his opinion very largely upon the information he has received in that committee. The conditions in the two services are entirely different.

I know personally of one naval officer who was the commandant of a very important naval station, and who was allowed a passenger car for the performance of his official The law prohibited him from using the car for any personal use, and he interpreted that strictly as meaning that he could not go to a store with his car to buy supplies for his family, or could not go to keep a business engagement; and the consequence was, rather than submit to humiliating limitations of that kind, that he put the car in a garage and did not use it at all. It so happened that he was able to buy a cheap car himself which was not subject to those limitations, and which he used for both personal and official purposes. I do not think there are anything like the abuses in the Navy Department, in the use of these official cars, that the Senator from Nebraska refers to.

It is estimated that during 1922 the cost of running a seven-passenger car, including a chauffeur, will be $225 a month, and that the cost of a five-passenger car will be $50 a month less. If the chauffeur is not required, the estimate will next amendment of the committee passed over.

be $120 a month less. On this basis, and assuming that onehalf of the five-passenger cars will not require chauffeurs, and that there will be two five-passenger cars to one sevenpassenger car, the limit of $150,000 would provide for only 27 seven-passenger cars and 54 five-passenger cars, with a margin of $2,580, in place of 173 and 333, respectively, which the Navy at the present time has, coming over from the larger establishment that grew out of the war. The committee considered that that reduction was uneconomical and would interfere with the business of the Navy at the very numerous stations which it is compelled to maintain. It therefore made an allowance of $250,000, which will provide, according to the figures I have given, for 45 seven-passenger cars with chauffeurs, and 90 five-passenger cars, one-half with chauffeurs and one-half without chauffeurs, leaving a margin of $4,300.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing

The Assistant Secretary. On page 23, lines 14 to 18, both inclusive, under the item "Navy yard, Charleston, S. C.: Dredging, to continue, $40,000," the committee proposes, after the numerals on line 14, just read, to insert:

The expenditure of the appropriation of $1,150,000 for the construction of a large dry dock, navy yard, Charleston, S. C., continued in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, approved July 1, 1918, is hereby suspended until July 1, 1924.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in regard to that amendment, so far as I am individually concerned, speaking for myself alone, upon a letter which I have received from the Secretary of the Navy, in which he states that in his judgment the object which the committee had in mind can be conserved by the Secretary of the Navy without this amendment, I have no objection to its being rejected.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the Senator states that the object of the amendment can be "conserved" by the Secretary of the Navy without the amendment. That is interesting, but not very definite. Will it be?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only have the statement of the Secretary of the Navy. The object the committee had in view was to gain time for a further consideration of the entire matter and a further examination into it. The Secretary of the Navy advises me that no expenditure will be made for this dry dock until a further and thorough examination into the question has

Mr. REED. Has the Senator the communication?
Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not have it at hand, but I can supply it to the Senator in a few moments.

Mr. SMITH. I have a copy of the letter, that I hand the

Mr. REED. The letter which the Senator from South Carolina hands me reads as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Washington, May 14, 1921.

Hon. Carroll S. Page,
Chairman Naval Affairs Committee,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: In regard to the naval bill, I wish to call your attention to the item providing for a dry dock at Charleston. The authorization of this dry dock was placed in the bill some time ago. The present bill as drafted provides that the dry dock shall not be built until the year 1924.

I would suggest to the committee that this restriction seems unnecessary. An emergency might arise in which we should want an early appropriation. If the authorization to build the dry dock remained in the bill without time limit and the emergency did arise, we could promptly avail ourselves of that authorization and proceed with work that might become very necessary.

I might add that there is no intention to ask for such appropriation, but it seems to me that the time limit should be removed from this particular item. We can then deal with any situation that might arise.

Sincerely, yours,

Edwin Denby.

Is that the letter the Senator from Washington had in mind?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; that is a copy of it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me that the attitude of the Secretary clearly is that the Navy Department should be left in a position to expend this $1,150,000 if they desire, and not to expend it if they do desire to take that course.

I do not know what the merits of this item may be. The Senator tells us that they propose to reexamine the question. If the question is one which ought to be reexamined, if the Navy Department is in doubt itself with regard to it, it seems to me very unwise to appropriate the money.

Mr. SMITH (in his seat). It is not an appropriation; it is an authorization. That is a misprint.

Mr. REED. What is the difference between an appropriation and an authorization?

Mr. SMITH. Under an authorization the appropriation is to be made in the future, but contracts can be entered into. An appropriation makes the money available on the passage of the act.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Did the Senator ask me a question? Mr. REED. I asked the Senator from South Carolina, who had spoken to me aside, what distinction he drew between an appropriation and an authorization? Of course, I understand that there is a technical distinction, but if we authorize the Navy Department to do something, and they do it, we will be pretty nearly compelled to make the necessary appropriation, it seems to me. I am not here contending against building a Navy; I want to make some remarks on that in a few moments; but I am in serious doubt about allowing the Navy Department to commit us to the extent of $1,150,000 on a matter on which they themselves at the present time have not made up their opinion. That is the way the question presents itself to my mind, and I would like to have some light on it. Of course, $1,150,000 is not worth stopping over in these days. I have had no statement yet which satisfies me in regard to it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

I am yielding the floor.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator from South Carolina, or the Senator from Washington, if there is actually any appropriation made for this purpose?

Mr. SMITH. No; it is an authorization.
Mr. LENROOT. And they would be required to come to Congress before they could proceed with any work?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; and I have the word of the Secretary that he will take that course.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not satisfied that there is no appropriation which is available.

Mr. SMITH. There is none.

Mr. KING. If there is no appropriation available, then the letter of Secretary Denby is misleading

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I would like to explain the situation. This is a mere authorization, and before the appropria-tion can be made the Secretary will have to come to the com-mittees of Congress to get the appropriation. He has said that he would make no effort under the law without appealing to

Mr. SMITH. He would come to Congress and ask for an appropriation under the authorization; that is all. Mr. KING. Does the letter indicate that the Secretary construes the present law, whatever it is, as not sufficient to authorize the construction of a dry dock, no matter how serious the contingency might be?

Mr. SMITH. He would have to get an appropriation before he could go further.

Mr. KING. Does the letter indicate that?

Mr. SMITH. Yes; the letter indicates that, and it says, "I might add that there is no intention to ask for such an appro-

Those are the words of the Secretary.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Missouri, if I understand his position. I think it is unwise to leave a matter of this character in the situation suggested by the Secretary of the Navy. If an appropriation has been made it should not be left suspended, like Mahomet's coffin, between heaven and earth, dependent upon the whim or caprice of some naval official. However, I do not care to go into a discussion of the matter.

It may be that a major naval base will be required at Charleston, S. C. It would seem that one will be required somewhere on the Atlantic coast south of Cape Hatteras or at a convenient and strategic point in the Caribbean Sea. The question is largely one of naval strategy, and I am awaiting with interest the report of the committee appointed to make an investigation and to recommend where such base should be established. The report was promised months ago, and I hope it will be ready at an early date. A subcommittee was appointed, consisting of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Ball], the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Keyes], and myself, to examine into the Charleston Navy Yard project, and a report has been sub-mitted. I do not care to go into that at this time. Before definitely passing upon the question of the location of the major naval base I desire to have the report of the strategy committee appointed by the Navy Department to pass upon this

But while I have the floor I want to make this general observation, Mr. President. There are too many naval bases and navy yards, too many docks, too much waste, too much overhead, just as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenboot] stated a moment ago. It is indefensible, Mr. President, that with the Navy which we propose to have for the coming year the overhead expenses should be between $300,000,000 and $400,000,000. With a personnel of probably a hundred thousand, with $90,-000,000 carried by this bill for construction, we will still have in the neighborhood of $400,000,000, the major portion of which will be used for maintenance.

No one can examine these items, Mr. President, and these stupendous totals without reaching the conclusion that the expense of our Navy is entirely too great. I do not see how it can be defended. The officers of the Navy Department and the officers of the War Department have not exhibited that spirit of economy which is necessary; indeed, there has been waste and extravagance, prodigal waste, in some of the activities of these departments. Congress seems absolutely powerless to pre-vent extravagance in the departments of the Government. Appropriations are enormous, and yet limitations are ignored and enormous deficits created. We are apparently powerless in the grasp of officialdom.

But appeals for economy made here fall upon deaf ears. Congress often declares for economy and threatens reductions, but it seldom carries out such threats. The votes on this bill indicate that no matter what showing might be made, if naval officials come before committees and ask for a given amount they usually get it. Congress too often abdicates its prerogative and becomes a registering machine of the edicts and demands of bureaucracy and the officials of the Government. In the days of German militarism the military cabal received what it asked for. It would seem that whatever the navalistic program demands is granted. There are items in this bill which I think ought not to be allowed, and the aggregate amount demanded seems to me to be indefensible.

I do not see any evidence of retrenchment in the bill. I see no evidences of economic reform in the administration of the Government since our Republican friends took possession.

I am not criticizing or speaking in a partisan way. reaucracy is stronger than either party and officialdom has the Republicans by the throat as it had the Democratic administration by the throat. You Republicans upon the other side of the Chamber are already confessing your impotency to cut the cord that binds you, and you will go on making these prodigal ex-I hope the result will be as implied by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, that four years from now some one else will come here for the purpose of effectuating

Mr. President, there is something somewhat disconcerting if not remarkable with respect to democracies and representative governments. In such governments there is more talk of economy than in monarchies and autocratic forms of government, but I sometimes think that republics are the most extravagant and expensive governments in the world. The action of bodies charged with making appropriations is not always consistent, or especially when compared with the views and private conduct of their members. Is there something in party action or mass action that develops a party or mass conscience? is the psychology of mass action or mass responsibility? It presents a phenomenon somewhat difficult to explain. Judge Dillon, in the preface to his work on municipal corporations, discusses the propensities of municipal bodies to support appropriations and measures which the members, if they had to act individually, would unhesitatingly condemn.

Municipal authorities have in years past enacted franchises and other measures that could not be defended in morals. Often men who were honest, whose characters were unimpeachable, have lost their former sense of honor when they were able to share the responsibility of their acts with others. It would seem that individual morality is stronger than group or corporate morality.

The pending bill calls for appropriations that are entirely disproportionate to the needs of the service or the benefits to be derived. We are still under the influence of war days and think in billions and see pictures of governmental opulence. Appeals for reductions will, I am afraid, prove futile. We made one gallant charge to-day and saved $1,000,000. But the next charge that was made we were defeated, and the following one we were routed. I presume the succeeding charges which will be made by those who would like to see some economies effected will result in the hopeless defeat of those who are trying to defend the

I hope that the Republican Party will practice economy, but there is no evidence as yet. In some departments increases will be shown. The promises of prewar expenditures will be unfulfilled. If the majority party can give the American people an economical and a wise administration, no one will rejoice more than I. I would rather see the Republicans in power and have them give good government to the people than to have the Democrats in power and have them give bad government. American people want good government. They want economy. The day ought to come when we can set our faces resolutely against these extravagant and extortionate demands daily made upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Washington what was the purpose of the committee in proposing the pending amendment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was the purpose of the committee to give further consideration to the matter before the money was

Mr. LENROOT. Did the committee understand that there was no appropriation for this purpose?

The committee understood that there Mr. POINDEXTER. was an appropriation.

Mr. LENROOT. That there was an appropriation?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was the understanding of the committee, and that is the fact as I understand it.

Mr. LENROOT. Here is a question of fact which it seems to me ought to be cleared up before the Senate votes upon the pending amendment. It is pretty clear that the committee must have understood that there was an appropriation, or there would be no purpose in the amendment. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] contends that there was no appropriation, but merely an authorization. If there is an appropriation, it seems very clear to me the amendment ought to be adopted. If there was no appropriation, of course, it is not necessary to legislate upon the subject at all, because before anything could be done

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will pardon me for interrupting him, I do not think there can be any doubt about the question whether there was an appropriation.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator is certain that an appropriation has been made?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. CURTIS. The letter of the Secretary indicates that no appropriation has been made and that the Secretary will not call for an appropriation until it is absolutely necessary; that only the authority had been given which would justify an appropriation if estimated for by the department, or rather make it in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If that was the idea of the Secretary, the Secretary was misinformed in regard to it. In the act approved July 1, 1918, for the navy yard at Charleston, S. C., there was provided for the construction of a dry dock, $1,150, 000, with a limit of cost of $4,000,000, and that has been continued in force until expended. My understanding of the atti-tude of the Secretary of the Navy is that he will not contract for the expenditure of this money until the opportunity has been given for a full consideration of the entire matter.

Mr. LENROOT. Right there I wish to ask the Senator from Washington whether it was not the theory of his committee that the committee and Congress should have an opportunity to make that investigation and pass upon it? Mr. POINDEXTER. That is correct.

Mr. LENROOT. But under the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, if the amendment is not agreed to, Congress will have nothing to say about it, Congress will have no control over it. and if the Secretary concludes, whatever might have been the opinion of Congress, that the work should go on, he is at liberty to expend the money. That certainly could not have been the theory of the committee and the theory of the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SMITH. The Secretary states emphatically in his letter that no expenditure will be made without the authorization of Congress even in this case.

Mr. LENROOT. The Secretary evidently does not understand at all from his letter what has been done by Congress.

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; he is thoroughly advised as to what has been done.

Mr. LENROOT. I submit that he is not, because the letter states that there is only an authorization, and the Senator himself in response to my question told me the same thing.

Mr. SMITH. It is practically nothing but an authorization. There is appropriated in this bill only $40,000 for ordinary dredging.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator from Washington has just told us, and has read from the previous appropriation act, that $1,150,000 was appropriated, and the Secretary may use it to-morrow

Mr. SMITH. No; that died with the other act. It was carried in the 1919 appropriation act and is not contained in this Mr. SMITH.

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator from Washington, stated that it has been continued and is in force to-day.

Mr. SMITH. I think the Senator from Washington was in error, because it was carried in the 1919 appropriation act but is not carried in this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Then what could have been the purpose of the amendment to prohibit the appropriation next year if it was not available?

Mr. SMITH. I do not think the amendment really would have accomplished anything at all, because the Senator knows enough about appropriations to know that the appropriation must be repeated in this bill to become effective.

Mr. LENROOT. Not if some other provision has been made making it available until expended, and the Senator from Washington states that that is what has been done.

Mr. SMITH. I think it was carried in the 1919 appropriation act, but it was not carried in the other act, and we have the word of the Secretary of the Navy that no action on his part will be taken without conference with the committee,

Mr. LENROOT. No; the statement of the Secretary of the Navy is that, if necessary, he would come to Congress and call for an appropriation, but if an appropriation already exists there would be nothing for Congress to act upon, and, of course, he would not come to Congress in that event.

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the Senator from Washington, with the permission of the Senator from Wisconsin, has he the act continuing the appropriation or making it available until it is expended?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; I have it in my hand.

Mr. CURTIS. What does it provide?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is the same act in which the appropriation was made.

Mr. CURTIS. Does it continue the appropriation until ex-

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not wish any misapprehension-Mr. CURTIS. No; we do not wish any misapprehension; we

Mr. POINDEXTER. In the act approved July 1, 1918, under the head of public works, which heading contains the appropriation to which I have just referred, the total appropriated for public works was $46,694,375, and it is then provided that—

The amounts herein appropriated therefor, except for repairs and preservation at navy yards and stations, shall be available until ex-

Mr. LENROOT. Why, certainly. Now, what does the Senator from South Carolina say?

Mr. SMITH. As I understand it, and after my conference with the Secretary, I was under the impression, and I still believe, that no action whatever will be taken in reference to this matter until the committee is asked to make an appropri-

Mr. LENROOT. But there has been an appropriation made.
Mr. SMITH. I say, until the committee is asked to make an appropriation; in other words, no contracts will be given out until Congress has acted upon it. I have that not only from the Secretary himself, but I have it in his letter to the chairman of the committee as well.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this matter has been the subject of controversy for a number of years. If Congress wishes to surrender all control over this project to the Navy Department and have nothing to say about it, then, of course, the suggestion that the amendment be not adopted is good; but if Congress does desire to retain control over it, if Congress is to determine the question of this navy yard, then the amendment ought to be adopted, because the Secretary of the Navy clearly was in error in his letter when he stated that there was only an authorization made and that in any event he would have to come to Congress for an appropriation. From his letter it is very clear that he proposes to make the investigation. He will come to the conclusion as to whether or not this shall go on; and Congress, unless the amendment is adopted, will be deprived of all control over it. Clearly, it seems to me, the amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I had understood that there had been no appropriation made for this particular enterprise; that there had only been an authorization for it. Upon that understanding I had made certain statements, but the language of the act does not admit of two constructions. There was an appropriation made; it is a continuing appropriation; and it is there subject to call whenever the Secretary of the Navy desires to use it. So it occurs to me, Mr. President, that unless this amendment is adopted, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has said, Congress has absolutely lost control of it.

Mr. SMITH. May I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BORAH. I yield, Mr. SMITH. It would be absolutely silly and useless for the Secretary of the Navy to start with that amount unless there was a sufficient amount to complete the project in any event, even though he were to disregard everything and go ahead, for the authorization calls for the completion of the project. Thinking in the emergency which confronted us the work was going to be commenced immediately, there was at that time an authorization for expenditure of the amount named. The emergency having passed, the Secretary could not go on and complete anything until he comes to Congress and gets the remainder of the authorization, which, under the terms of the act, amounted to something over $4,000,000.

For that reason he very properly stated that he would not attempt anything at all and would make no move until he came to Congress to get the proper appropriation looking toward the completion of the project; in other words, that he would submit the facts to Congress in order to ascertain whether or not they desired that the project should be proceeded with.

Mr. BORAH. Then the amendment does not change the situation so far as the enterprise is concerned. The only matter in controversy here is whether Congress shall hold the discretion to proceed with it or whether it shall permit the Secretary of the Navy to hold that discretion. He can go ahead and expend the $1,150,000 if he wishes to do so. While he could not complete the work with it, yet, of course, after the expenditure of $1,150,000, which the Secretary will have expended, acting according to his judgment, there will be no answer to the proposition when the matter gets back here, that, having expended $1,150,000, we ought to go ahead; the same as it is now said that, having spent 8 per cent upon certain unfinished ships of the Navy, we can not afford to stop; that having spent 8 per cent, we must spend the remaining 92 per cent.

So, Mr. President, it is a simple question. It does not make any difference to the enterprise in the State of the Senator from South Carolina if the Secretary of the Navy carries out his program because the completion of the project is to be held up until Congress acts. If the Secretary of the Navy does not act until Congress makes the final appropriation, of course the State of the Senator from South Carolina will not have derived any benefit.

Mr. SMITH. A committee or commission, known as the Helm Commission, is now investigating as to whether or not a dry dock shall be built somewhere in the South, either on the South Atlantic or on the Gulf, and all parties are agreed that, as the war emergency has passed, nothing will be done and no recommendation will be made until that commission reports. If it reports adversely to the proposition, nothing will be done; if it reports favorably, it may report for the location of a dry dock at some other place than Charleston.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin? Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. In view of the Senator's statement, I should like to ask him what possible harm can come from the adoption of the amendment, if the Secretary of the Navy has got to come to Congress in any event before he proceeds further with the project?

Mr. SMITH. It seems to me that in case the commission reports in favor of the construction of the dry dock and Charleston should be fortunate enough to be the place recommended, it would not then be necessary to get a law passed, for the authorization would already be in existence.

Mr. LENROOT. It is in existence now. This proposition is merely to suspend the appropriation.

Mr. SMITH. Yes; that is true as to the authorization; but we do not know when the commission will report or what conditions may arise. It is a mere authorization, and the Senator from Wisconsin knows that not a nickel will be spent on the project under this administration until Congress is advised.

Mr. LENROOT. But how under the Senator's own statement can the adoption of the amendment harm the project?

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I desire to say that I can easily see how the adoption of the amendment might occasion delay and, perhaps, prevent the completion of the project after it shall have been approved by what is called the Helm Commission. If the amendment is not adopted and the commission makes a favorable report as to the location of the dry dock at Charleston, the Secretary of the Navy, as soon as he decides that it is proper to do so, can -to-morrow or the next day-proceed with the work so far as the appropriation goes; but if he is denied the privilege of doing that under the amendment, even if the report should be made at an early date, he could certainly not proceed prior to July 1, 1924. In the meantime rival points, other places along the coast, might desire to prevent action by Congress. The Senator from South Carolina in the proposition as it now exists has a strategic advantage that I am not surprised he is not quick to yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington and Mr. DIAL addressed the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington. Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether or not the committee gave any consideration to the status of the money which had been appropriated for dredging a channel up to the Charleston dry dock. My recollection is that when the dry dock was provided for we incorporated a provision in the river and harbor act, conditioned upon the construction of the dry dock, appropriating, I think, about a million and a half dollars for dredging a channel there. If the expenditure of the money for the building of the dry dock is to be suspended, it seems to me that we should also suspend the payment of the money appropriated for dredging a channel up to the dry dock. Did the committee give that matter any investigation and ascertain what had been done under the appropriation for dredging?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is a matter in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce, of which my colleague is chairman.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that that is true.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand, however, that that appropriation is still in effect, and that a great deal of it has been expended. There is, however, a balance remaining which the department is still authorized to spend.

The original estimated cost of this project, according to the statement which I have here, was $7,540,000.

This amount of money contemplated a 40-foot channel 1,000 feet wide. Included in this amount was $1,000,000 for the purchase of a dredge. I am informed the department has since abandoned as unnecessary the project for purchasing the dredge.

The rivers and harbors act of 1918 appropriated $1,500,000 for this project. The 1920 annual report of the War Department states that to carry on the work for the next fiscal year will cost $1,900,000. In this amount was included $400,000 for reconstructing a dredge. The War Department now considers that it is possible that this expenditure will not be necessary. On inquiry at the War Department as to the probable cost of a 600-foot channel, 40 feet deep and 1,000 feet on turns, advice was given that while it would be necessary to make a careful estimate of this it was considered that the cost would be about a half of the original estimated cost; that is, $3,770,000.

Of the amount, namely $1,500,000, appropriated in the rivers and harbors act approved by Congress July 18, 1918, for dredging Cooper River, $995,296.49 has been expended.

In addition to the foregoing there is now covered by existing contracts and outstanding liabilities, $434,042.52.

Work on contract dated December 1, 1919, with the United Dredging Co. was started in November, 1920. Amount of this contract was approximately $259,927.

The work on this particular contract was 27 per cent complete on December 1, 1920.

The work on this particular contract was 27 per cent complete on December 1, 1920.

That is the report which we have from the Chief of Engineers of the War Department. Mr. JONES of Washington. In other words, practically all of the $1,500,000 appropriated is either expended or obligated, as I remember the figures the Senator read. Mr. POINDEXTER. Much the greater part of it has been expended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Of course that appropriation was made distinctly upon the condition that the dry dock was to be built. That was the only reason that the Committee on Commerce recommended the appropriation. I was thinking of proposing an amendment to the amendment of the committee suspending the expenditure of any amount heretofore appropriated in the river and harbor bill for that purpose, although, according to the report read by the Senator from Washington,

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask that the question be stated.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment to be added at the end of the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. At the end of the committee amendment, on page 23, line 18, it is proposed to add:

And the expenditure of any sum heretofore appropriated in the river and harbor act for dredging a channel to said dry dock is hereby sus-pended until the said date.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That, Mr. President, is simply intended to carry out the real purpose when the appropriation was made. As I said awhile ago, the river and harbor appropriation was made expressly upon the understanding and condition that if the dry dock is not necessary, if it is not to be built, that appropriation should not be expended. While the amendment, of course, can not interfere with the expenditure of money already utilized, it is intended to suspend the further expenditure of money, just as the committee amendment is intended to suspend the expenditure of money heretofore appropriated for the dry dock, for the same period of time that the committee desires to suspend the expenditure of the other

Mr. SMITH. I should like to state that in any event the dredging has to be done in that channel and some preliminary dredging work has been carried on. I wish to state further that there is a very small appropriation from the unappropriated balance carried in the current river and harbor act that would be used in any event to dredge the channel which is already in existence.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment I have pro-posed does not relate to any amount which may have been allotted under the lump-sum appropriation. The current river and harbor act does not provide any specific amount for the dredging to which the Senator from South Carolina refers.

Mr. SMITH. That is the point I am making

Mr. JONES of Washington. It relates to the appropriation made in the river and harbor act expressly for dredging a channel up to the dry dock. That is the act of 1918. I did not have the date of it until the Senator in charge of the bill

Mr. SMITH. I will explain to the Senator that was jointly done, because the dredging had to be done in any event, as he will see from the report. There was a very small amount left over from the amount appropriated for that purpose, and that was carried in a lump sum as an unappropriated balance to carry on the ordinary dredging to keep open the channel.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator is mistaken if he thinks that any legislation has been enacted under which the original amount of $1,500,000 could be expended for any other purpose than dredging a channel up to the dry dock, conditioned upon the construction of the dry dock. With what the department may have allotted out of some appropriations heretofore made for ordinary dredging to keep the channel in ordinary condition the amendment I have proposed has nothing to do. All that the amendment which I have proposed is intended to do is to suspend the payment of any part of the appropriation made by the act of 1918 for the express purpose of dredging a 40-foot channel up to the dry dock. It is not intended to affect the ordinary expenditure that may be necessary to maintain the present channel in its present condition.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, unless the Senators have some information to the contrary, it would seem to me that the original appropriation has already been expended.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It looks like it has practically been expended from the report read a moment ago by the Senator in charge of the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. The original appropriation in the river and harbor bill reads in this way:

Charleston Harbor and Channels, S. C.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $110,000; for improvement to provide a channel 40 feet deep and 1.000 feet wide, extending from the sea to the Charleston Navy Yard, $1,500,000: Provided, That this work shall not be undertaken until the proposed new dry dock at this navy yard, carrying a depth of 40 feet of water over the blocks, has been authorized.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The amendment I have proposed is not intended to interfere with the $110,000 item; it simply relates to the $1,500,000 which was based expressly upon the condition that the dry dock shall be constructed.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, there is already a dry dock at Charleston. The dry dock that we are speaking of here is an additional one, proposed to be built at some time in the future. It is necessary to get up to the present dry dock. Therefore the amendment of the Senator from Washington ought not to prevail.

In addition to that there is a very extensive naval base above the dry dock up the river. The Government has spent something like $17,000,000, I think, in providing those terminals, and it is necessary to dredge the river in order to get up to Therefore the amendment ought not to be agreed to.

In addition to what the Senator from Arkansas said about what would happen if this amendment should be agreed to, it would be necessary to come back here and have it repealed, and nothing could be done until 1924. The hands of everybody would be tied unless Congress should repeal it before that time, and we know how difficult it is to get laws repealed.

It does seem to me, in view of what has been done and all the money that has been spent and the great necessity there for dredging to this dry dock, that the hands of the Secretary of the Navy should not be tied, but we should leave the matter There have been various investigations and various reports. My understanding is that all the reports have favored this location, so it seems to me that we could well leave the matter to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. Nobody can be hurt. They have all branches of the Government, and can trust the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, as I gather the situation there, this channel is required independently of this particular dry dock. It is needed there because it is necessary to have a channel in order to reach the terminals and the base and also the present dry dock. I think it would be a mistake to undertake to suspend the appropriation for this channel carried in the river and harbor bill, because whether the particular dry dock mentioned in this bill is ever provided for or not this channel is needed in any event.

I think we ought not to adopt the amendment.

Mr. JONES of Washington, Mr. President, I desire to ask the Secretary to change the amendment I have offered so as to make it read as follows:

And the expenditure of any unexpended portion of the $1,500,000 appropriated in the river and harbor act of 1918 for the construction of a 40-foot channel to the navy yard is hereby suspended until said date.

That identifies it very clearly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would suggest to my colleague that while perhaps he is more familiar with the river and harbor appropriations than I am, if that suspension is adopted there ought to be some provision made to protect the contracts already entered into. It ought to be limited to the unexpended portion, or that portion which is not already obligated by contract.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I worded it "the unexpended ortion." I did not know that this provision was in the bill. portion." I have not examined the bill fully. I did not know that this amendment was here, and I take it that this could be taken care of in conference if anything further is necessary to protect the interests of the Government; but I have framed my amendment now so that it covers only the unexpended portion. I might put in the words "or unobligated." I will ask to insert those words, so that it will read "unexpended or unobligated

Mr. FLETCHER. "Unexpended and unobligated."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; "unexpended and unobligated portion" of the appropriation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment to the amendment as now proposed.

The READING CLERK, It is proposed to insert, at the end of the committee amendment, the following:

And the expenditure of any unexpended and unobligated portion of the $1.500,000 appropriated in the river and harbor act of 1918 for the construction of a 40-foot channel to the navy yard is hereby suspended until said date,

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I desire to say that this is the only repeal of an appropriation already made and not yet expended that I know of. They have singled out this particular place, and I feel that it is unjust to the country at large to tie the hands of the Secretary of the Navy in this manner. The subject was thoroughly investigated before the appropriation or the authorization was made, and it was thought to be neces-

We do not ask for any hurry about building a dry dock. We merely want the appropriation left as it is; and I feel that it is not treating our section in a proper way to take the action that is proposed. This is the only attempt I know of, and possibly the only attempt that was ever made, to repeal an appropriation after it has been authorized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Reading Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

So the amendment of Mr. Jones of Washington to the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I merely wish to say, in regard to the amendment, that it seems to me wholly needless in view of the letter of the Secretary of the Navy. I think it would be well to drop it from the bill, and leave the management of the matter with the Secretary of the Navy. So I shall have to vote against the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it may be that the Senator from Massachusetts has made the suggestion he has just submitted because he has the same understanding I have, and I desire to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if I am correct.

As I understand the situation at the present time, it is that $1,150,000 was appropriated in the 1918 act, and that it is a continuing appropriation. If this amendment is not adopted, then it will be wholly in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy to expend that $1,150,000, will it not?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; in the discretion of the Secretary.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, the letter of the Secretary of the Navy does not change anything at all. I suppose, without having written that letter, he would not have failed to exercise his discretion.

Mr. LODGE. He simply asks to have it left to his discretion, and I think it is well to do it.

Mr. BORAH. It was within his discretion before. There was nothing mandatory; there was nothing to compel him to ex-

Mr. LODGE. No; but it would not be in his discretion if this amendment were adopted.

Mr. BORAH. That is precisely it. In other words, we draw the discretion to us instead of leaving it to the Secretary of the Navy. If the Secretary of the Navy desires to go ahead and expend it, he may do so?

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Does not the Senator from Idaho think he ought to be permitted to do so, if he reaches the conclusion, after a second investigation of the matter, that the work ought to be cared for?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not. Mr. ROBINSON. That is the exact point of difference between the Senator from Idaho and myself.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely so. In regard to that item I take exactly the same position that I take in regard to these other items. I simply want to trim it down to the provisions of the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. President, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays. Mr. LA FOLLETTE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is not this the unexpended appropria-tion concerning which a bill was introduced by the Senator from Iowa to repeal the authority to spend this money; and is it not a fact that a committee of the Senate, after investigating the matter, unanimously reported in favor of the passage of the bill? Is it not also true that an effort was made to get that bill before the Senate day after day for consideration late in the last session, when a single objection made it possible to prevent its passage?

If that be true, Mr. President, and I am informed that it is true, then unless we adopt this provision as now amended and revoke the authority to spend $1,150,000 we will leave with the Secretary of the Navy the discretionary authority to expend $1,150,000 for a project against which a committee of the Senate has reported within the last three months. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. Ball] was the chairman of the committee which made the investigation; and I submit that in view of that report we ought to adopt this amendment and thereby make certain that this sum of money will not be expended.

I see the Senator from Delaware is here, and I would be glad, if the Senator from Idaho will yield further, to inquire of the Senator from Delaware what the facts are in this matter.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the brief report gives more definitely probably than I could give offhand just the condition

Charleston already has one very good dry dock, not large enough to take the present large dreadnaughts, but a very good dry dock. The committee found that the dredging of the channel 40 feet in depth and 1,000 feet in width, for a distance of 22 miles, which was provided for these large dreadnaughts, would probably cost from eight to ten million dollars. The lowest estimate of the engineer to keep that channel open was $500,000 per annum.

There was no bid made to construct the dry dock. Bids were authorized by the Government, but none were made. engineer in charge estimated that they probably could construct the dry dock for $8,000,000, but in addition to the construction of the dry dock it would require probably $2,000,000 for the equipment and additional wharfage. So the entire expense of dredging the channel for the 1,000 feet in width and 40 feet in depth, together with the dry dock, would be in the neighborhood of $20,000,000. I think probably at present it could be constructed for somewhat less.

The Secretary of War, notwithstanding the fact that we understood that no appropriation was to be expended on this project, did expend all made available by the Rivers and Harbors Committee, which was $1,500,000, and I received a letter, I think in February, stating that he thought the project was about one-tenth completed. If it was only one-tenth completed with the expenditure of $1,500,000, of course it would cost more than the $10,000,000. But he further said in the letter that he thought the other nine-tenths could be completed for about $3,000,000. So his latest estimate for the completion of the dry dock was between three and four million dollars, notwithstanding the fact that the letter stated it was only one-tenth completed.

Those are the facts. Their present dry dock is large enoughabout 560 feet, I think-to take vessels the size of the Utah. We have on the Atlantic coast 19 dry docks. We have on the Pacific coast only 4, aside from Pearl Harbor and Balboa. The Government has certain rights of use in the dry dock at Hunters Point, but the one at Hunters Point is the only large dry dock on the Pacific coast north of the canal. The others, with the exception of two, are smaller than the Charleston

The board appointed by the President to investigate the necessity of dry docks on both the Atlantic and the Pacific Oceans recommended that the Pacific needed the additional dry docks so much worse than the Atlantic that they would not recommend the construction of the large one at Charleston at that time. They wanted, further, to make more definite ex-amination of the southern waters, thinking probably a dry dock might be located farther south. There is a long stretch of water between Norfolk and the canal. Charleston is the only harbor, probably, available now. But it is 22 miles from deep water. The dry dock is about 7 miles above the city of Charleston, where the commercial docks are.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. What did the bill which the Senator reported favorably from the Committee on Commerce at the last session propose?

Mr. BALL. It provided entirely for the repeal of that appropriation, but the Senator from South Carolina and I discussed the matter very carefully, and we thought probably if this was merely held in abeyance for a few years, until the Pacific Ocean was properly cared for and the engineers had further time to examine the southern coast, it might be necessary to construct this to protect our coast. I can not give you the number of miles from Norfolk around, but it is a long stretch

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I would like to say to the Senate that a special expert committee was appointed to investigate the necessity of dry docks along the Atlantic seaboard. It developed during the war that we did not have docks of sufficient dimensions to take certain ships that we had. This expert naval committee proposed four, one to be located at Boston, which was completed, the Commonwealth dry dock, which the State itself started and the Government bought; one at Phila-delphia, one at Norfolk, and one at Charleston. The first three I mentioned were contracted for, and are now perhaps completed.

I want the Senate to bear in mind that from Cape Hatteras to Portsmouth, N. H., a distance of 700 miles, we already have !

18 dry docks. From Cape Hatteras to Galveston, Tex., a distance of 2,000 miles, there is one dry dock. That dry dock is of dimensions to take the smaller vessels.

In view of the fact that the southern coast confronted the South Atlantic, Caribbean, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Panama Canal, that committee thought a dock south of the dangerous

Cape Hatteras ought to be constructed.

Previous to the appointment of that expert naval committee there was a commission appointed, known as the Helms Commission, who were to investigate where to place a dry dock to protect the South Atlantic. Guantanamo was mentioned. That board is still investigating.

The authorization for the dry dock at Charleston, S. C., was made by experts appointed by the Navy Department regardless of anything like politics or sectionalism.

It would be interesting for me to call attention to the fact that north of Hatteras, on the North Atlantic seaboard, we have expended perhaps all that is now necessary, something like $700,000,000. South of Hatteras we have only one dry dock. that at Charleston, a small one, involving an expenditure for the coast south of Hatteras of only $60,000. So that the en-tire South Atlantic, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Caribbean Sea are without any adequate facilities for the larger naval vessels and the merchant marine.

In view of the fact that this authorization is now in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy for any recommendation he may make, and in view of the fact that he has asked the Senate not to suspend, by act, this power to act in the circumstances, and in view of the fact that none of us know what emergency may arise calling for the use of a dock in the South Atlantic—he recommends to the Senate, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said, that the matter be left to his discretion—that it will involve no appropriation, it will involve no expenditure of money, as the Secretary said in his letter, I sincerely hope, without any further discussion of the question, that the expenditure during these brief years will not be kept in abeyance.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, from information which I have received from the Navy Department, I believe it is intended to lessen the width of the channel, and therefore decrease the cost considerably.

I wish to correct the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island that the commercial docks are located down town. As a matter of fact, the naval base is above the dry dock, still farther up the river.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I hold in my hand the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs upon this project, and I wish to read the recommendations which that committee made:

that committee made:

After considering all the testimony, your committee is of the opinion that the work on the proposed project at Charleston Harbor—i. e., improvement of channel and construction of a large dry dock—should not continue at present, for the following reasons:

(1) No expenditure should be made until the navy-yard commission appointed under an act of Congress to investigate and report as to the necessity, desirability, and advisability of establishing additional navy yards or naval stations has made its final report.

(2) The cost of this dry dock at the present time, together with the necessary dredging, would be in the neighborhood of $20,000,000.

(3) There seems to be no urgent need for this vast improvement at Charleston. The yard has never been utilized to its full capacity, nor has the present dry dock been utilized to take care of ships of its capacity.

(4) The yard was originally intended as a yard for the repair of small craft, and it is the recommendation of your committee that it should be continued at the present time as such. To make it an economical yard, your committee was impressed with the need of additional wharfage.

That report is signed by Senators BALL, KEYES, and KING.

That report is signed by Senators Ball, Keyes, and King. Mr. President, I am very much surprised at the statement of the Republican leader, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], wherein he advocates a rejection of the amend-I have confidence in the Secretary of the Navy; I have confidence in the head of every department of our Government to-day; but is the Senator from Massachusetts willing, because he has confidence in the head of a department, that it shall always be without restriction? Is the Senator from Massachusetts willing, because we have confidence in the head of a department, that Congress shall not perform its duty? The Senator's own committee has had a bill here repealing this very appropriation, and now the Senator from Massachusetts suggests that if the Secretary of the Navy wants to go ahead with it and expend this $1,500,000, and obligate us to no one knows how many millions more, he is entirely willing to do so.

I am not willing. I am surprised that the Senator from Massachusetts is. It is not the way that we ought to start out in this administration in the making of appropriations and attempting to carry out a proper and a successful policy.

Congress ought to pass upon this question. It is too important; it involves too many million dollars to be delegated to anyone, no matter how much confidence we may have in him; and the amendment clearly should be agreed to in view of what has transpired, because it was first stated on the floor when the debate began that there was no appropriation, that there was merely an authorization, that nothing could be done with-out coming to Congress, and it took some time to get the facts with reference to that matter before the Senate and demonstrate that there was an appropriation. Then it was stated that the amendment was not necessary because the Secretary of the Navy would not undertake to spend a dollar without coming before Congress and asking for a further appropriation.

Now, the Senator from Massachusetts says that he is willing to let the Secretary of the Navy go ahead and spend this $1,500,000 and obligate Congress for fourteen or fifteen million dollars more for a dry dock for which his own committee, the committee of which he is a member, has reported against an appropriation and an authorization. The Committee on Naval Affairs has had a bill before the Senate proposing to repeal even that. That is the situation.

Of course, I understand very well that whenever the Senator from Massachusetts, the Republican leader, takes a position he carries with him a great many votes. Nevertheless, I do submit that he has not given any reason for the position that he now

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have been familiar with this project for a good many years and I have opposed the expenditure of money there. I am perfectly aware that sooner or later between Cape Hatteras and the Gulf of Mexico there will have to be some dry dock for the use of the Government, some harbor that our ships can use. This work was begun at Charleston, but I thought improvidently begun.

I am frank to say that when I made the statement I did, it was because I had entire confidence that the Secretary of the Navy would not involve us in any large project there without submitting it to Congress. I ought to have known, but I did not know until the debate came up and until I spoke, in fact, that that $1,500,000 was still unobligated and unspent. I knew that a large portion of the money for the channel had been spent. I thought the other had expired with the last appropriation act. I did not know that it was still available. I think some restriction ought to be placed on the expenditure of that money. I did not suppose that this involved us in the expenditure of a million more dollars. I thought the money, if spent and obligated, had ended with the last appropriation act, but in that I was mistaken and I wish to say frankly to the Senate that I did not so understand it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee as amended, on which the year and nays

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REED. I ask that the amendment as amended may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee as amended will be read.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 23, line 14, after the words "Navy yard, Charleston, S. C., dredging, to continue, $40,000," it is proposed to insert:

The expenditure of the appropriation of $1,150,000 for the construction of a large dry dock, navy yard, Charleston, S. C., continued in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, approved July 1, 1918, is hereby suspended until July 1, 1924, and the expenditure of any unexpended and unobligated portion of the $1,500,000 appropriated in the river and harbor act of 1918 for the construction of a 40-foot channel to the navy yard is hereby suspended until said date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] and vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Watson]. In his absence I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote. I vote "nay,"

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted. Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Montana [Mr. Walsh] to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. EDGE (after having voted in the affirmative). Has the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen] voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That Senator has not voted. Mr. EDGE. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Brandegee] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 28, as follows:

So the committee amendment as amended was agreed to. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next committee amendment passed over will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 23, after line 18, it is proposed to insert:

Naval station, Key West, Fla.: For the development of a submarine base, to complete, $800,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this amendment went over at my request. I stated at the time that certain facts had been given me with regard to it, but I did not then have them in such a condition that I could rely entirely upon them. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] what are the facts about this naval station? To what extent will the amount proposed to be appropriated complete the naval station at Key West?

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I understand the appropriation will complete the present development as proposed at Key West. There has been some reduction from the original plan. The situation is that the navy yard commission in its report dated December 30, 1916, gave it as its opinion that it was advisable to locate and develop a submarine base on the Gulf of Mexico. Following that, in April, 1918, the plan for this development at Key West was completed. The plan was approved by the commander at Key West and by the commander of the submarine forces, and also received the approval of the Secretary of the Navy. Then an item providing for this base appeared in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, and contracts were authorized up to the amount of $1,500.000. Under that authority various contracts were entered into.

The present state of the work is that living quarters for the enlisted men, bachelor officers, mess arrangements, storehouse facilities, and recreation facilities have been provided for a division of 10 submarines. Then, increased machine-shop facilities and power supplies are available to a limited extent. Proper berthing facilities have been started; the piling has been driven, but the planking has not entirely been put in. dredging of the basin is under way, but has not been entirely completed, although it has been partially completed. breakwater was built, but that needs to be covered over with marl in order to protect it and keep the water from going in and out and destroying it. That is the present situation.

Of course, unless the work is completed a great deal of what has been spent there will go for naught; it will be wasted. If it is not completed, we have got to cancel the contracts that are now outstanding, and the contractors, of course, will have claims against the Government for damages. It is estimated, on the part of the Navy Department as well as on the part of the contractors themselves, that practically the damage which would result from canceling the contracts and the consequent loss to the contractors-for they have brought their equipment and their machinery there and have made arrangements to go on with the work and have much material on hand, and so forth-will amount to very nearly as much as this appropriation; in other words, the Government will lose the benefit of the development of the base and will lose what it has put in, unless we carry on to completion this work that has been started and is under way. The estimate contained in the bill of $800,000 is the estimate of the department. They cordially recommend it. They say that amount will complete the work. I do not believe that it quite carries out the original plan. The Senator from Idaho probably has that in mind. A part of the original plan will be now abandoned. It is not considered so important as it was when the plan was agreed upon in 1918

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Florida understands that the extension has actually been abandoned?

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes. Mr. BORAH. And that this appropriation of $800,000 is not simply a step toward another appropriation?

Mr. FLETCHER. No; not at all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I shall not ask for a yea-andnay vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a moment ago I voted against striking out the clause relating to the navy yard at Charleston, although I had previously raised a question as to the propriety of that amendment which brought on some considerable debate. The amendment is to the effect that the Secretary of the Navy shall not expend any part of the $1,150,000 heretofore appropriated, and I raised the question as to why it was proposed to discontinue the appropriation. I did so in the hope that we might get some light with reference to the situation. cient statement, in my judgment, was made to the Senate to justify a discontinuance of the appropriation. About all that was done was to make it plain that a project once entered upon is now to be partially suspended. In my humble judgment this is a very unfortunate situation for the Senate to find itself in. It is a very regrettable thing if the naval authorities have not yet finally and conclusively determined whether a dry dock should be established at Charleston. If a dry dock is not to be established there, it is perfectly clear one should be established at some place on the southeasterly coast, because 2,000 miles of that coast is without a dry dock sufficient in size to accommodate our large naval vessels.

According to the best naval authorities I have been able to examine, the defense of the coast of Florida is of the greatest strategic importance, because, among other things, it commands communication between the Panama Canal and our eastern coast line. Upon that question I intend to address the Senate at an early date in support of a resolution which I offered some weeks ago asking the President to open negotiations with Great Britain and France to inquire whether they would consider relinquishing to the United States the control they now possess over the West India Islands and the Bermudas.

I want to say to the members of the Foreign Relations Committee that the resolution to which I refer has received no consideration by that committee, as far as I am advised; at least no report has been made. I hope a report will be made at an early date; otherwise I shall be obliged to move to take the matter from the committee.

While I am on my feet I want to address myself to the bill, and particularly to what is known as the Borah amendment.

If there is any one lesson to be gathered from this war and from the events which have followed it, it is that a nation which is able to defend itself has its rights respected; that if it is unable to defend itself, the equity and justice of its position amounts to but very little when arrayed against that justice is the cupidity or the interest of some great power or powers.

I am repeating what has been said so often upon this floor when I remark that in modern history there is no parallel for the outrageous treatment accorded China when her territory was secretly bartered away by her own allies at the very moment she was assisting them in their struggle for existence. More than that I say there are few instances in angle there. More than that, I say there are few instances in ancient history that will parallel this act in its wickedness, its atrocity, its chicanery, its fraud, and its treachery.

There are other examples growing out of this war, all of which teach us that it is the nation with a just cause plus the ability to defend that cause which receives consideration and fair treatment. If China had been able to rattle her sword, if she had been a powerful nation, England and France and Japan never would have dared repeat the performance of old which is summed up in the sentence:

"They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture."

I hold, therefore, to the theory that the United States must be prepared to defend itself against all comers; that if we are so prepared we will not be involved in wars except of our own choosing; that if we are not so prepared we may be plunged into wars of defense at any time.

We speak of expense, and we should speak of expense; but the interest that we are now compelled to pay upon a national debt accumulated as the result of one war, if expended for only two years of time upon a Navy, would have made the United States invincible upon the waters of the seven seas. I have no hesitation in saying that if the United States had possessed such a Navy, Germany never would have sunk an American ship, never would have fired upon the American flag, never would have wantonly murdered a single American citizen. She attacked us because she believed three things: First, that we were unwilling to fight; second, that we could not fight if we wanted to; third, that even if we had the ability and disposition to fight we could not get ready to fight in time to prevent her overcoming France and England.

If those three propositions had not been grounded in German faith, Germany would not have assailed us, and we probably never would have been engaged in this war.

Life is a terribly practical thing, and national life is as practical as individual life. We must meet conditions as they are, and not as we would have them. Men who go about dreaming and talking of the regeneration of man may, while they speak from well-intentioned hearts, do infinite damage to their country and to civilization.

WARFARE OF TO-DAY DEPENDS UPON FAST, ADEQUATE, AND WELL-PROTECTED TRANSPORTATION.

With that as a preliminary, I desire to remark that the importance of control of the sea has in the last century, in my judgment, multiplied a hundredfold. A century ago wars were restricted in their areas. An army could proceed only as far as it was able to carry its supplies by the slow oxcart or horse team over muddy roads, and therefore the size of the army and the field of its operations was exceedingly limited. When a nation sought to go farther from its base than a reasonably short distance, that nation found itself overwhelmed; and even Napoleon, the mightiest military genius the world has ever produced, wrecked his fortunes and the fortunes of France because he ventured into the heart of Russia. But if Napoleon had been situated as a modern military commander is situated, he probably would have overwhelmed Russia, and returned in triumph to his native land. If he had had back of his army a network of railroads, capable of bringing forward supplies and recruits, he could have continued to maintain his foothold in the very heart of the Empire of Russia. Lacking that, when winter came supplies became short and recruits could not be delivered to him, and he found himself driven out, not so much by the valor of Russian soldiers as by the adversities of nature and the onslaught of starvation.

But, Mr. President, all that has been changed upon the land. To-day every part of the habitable world is bound together by a network of railroads, so that it is possible now to move men a thousand miles within the time that an army formerly could be moved 50 or 100 miles. It is possible to bring up supplies with remarkable rapidity, so that an army can move from its base hundreds of miles where it formerly could move scores of miles, because its base travels along with it. It is possible to gather at every port of the world, at the borders of every country of the world, the wealth of food and clothing and munitions and supplies. This, then, means that for all practical purposes it may be said that every country's resources can be delivered at the seashore. It accordingly follows that control of the seas is a hundred times more vital to-day than a similar control would have been a century ago.

CONTROL OF THE SEA WON THE WORLD WAR.

Why, Mr. President, because she controlled the seas, Great Britain was able to mass the resources of the civilized world upon the battle fields of France. Because the United States and Italy and Japan found the seas open and unobstructed they were able to deliver their vast resources of men and metal and supplies to the aid of England and of France upon the battle fields of Europe. In this war women were knitting and men were working in the most remote parts of the world, and the materials they produced were being delivered within 30 or 40 or 50 days on the battle front.

The whole world was brought into requisition with all of its esources of money and of materials, and scores of countries, from those in the remotest north to countries far south of the Equator, contributed their quotas of men. All of that was possible because England controlled the seas. If the German fleet could have kept afloat, if her vessels had dared venture out upon the waters, it would have been impossible to deliver the war materials or the troops themselves.

You can not send troopships laden to the guards with human beings across 3,000 miles of water in the face of an enemy that is able to maintain even a few ships at large upon the seas. One single cruiser could send to the bottom in 15 minutes of time a dozen troopships carrying almost an army of men.

We talk of landing our troops in England and in France with the loss of only a few lives. Why was that possible? Because the English Navy had created a cordon around the North Sea, holding the German ships imprisoned therein. I repeat, if that German fleet had been upon the high seas, able to maintain itself in a battle with the British fleet, we probably would not have landed a single regiment of soldiers in France. If we had, the toll of death would have been so fearful that we would have paid more than it was all worth.

The nation that commands the seas is in a position of such frightful eminence and power that I am unwilling my country shall be in a position to become the victim of that power.

I do not say this for the purpose of stirring up any feeling toward Great Britain. I believe of all nations in the world we are more closely allied with Great Britain—by language, by blood, by traditions, and by law—than we are with any other country. But I recognize the fact that every Britisher is British. From the humblest subject of that land to the highest of its titled aristocracy they are British. The interest of their nation is dear to their hearts. They are a valorous and a wonderful people. May we always be at friendship with them.

WE SHOULD NOT BE CONTENT TO ALLOW GREAT BRITAIN OR ANY OTHER NATION A COMPLETE DOMINANCE OF THE SEA.

But there is another side to that problem. If we should be content, as some argue, to allow Great Britain to maintain a complete dominance of the sea, if we should trust them to that extent, then why should they not trust us with equal confidence to build as many vessels as we think necessary for our safety and defense? It will not do for you to say to me, "I am your friend. I love you with the sincerest affection, and therefore you should not fear me, though I go about armed to the teeth. But if you shall dare to take a single step toward arming yourself, I will regard it as an unfriendly act."

If this friendship and trust exists, it ought to be a mutual friendship and trust. If confidence can be reposed by us in the British Empire, then surely the British Empire can repose confidence in us, for, Mr. President, the history of the two countries strongly indicates that the greater trust ought to be reposed in the disinterestedness of the United States. We have had the power, sir, for nearly a century of time to extend our borders and to overrun Mexico. We have had the power for the last 40 or 50 years to overwhelm the South American countries. We have the power to-day to do it unaided and unassisted. Why have we not done it? Because the United States has never embarked upon an imperialistic policy. It has never sought to extend its borders by fire and sword. It does not undertake to subjugate other peoples. Wherever its flag has gone outside of the borders of the United States it has gone when it was borne by the hands of those who sought to liberate, and not by the hands of those who sought to carry the sword of enslavement.

On the other hand—and I speak now with all the kindliness which I am capable of expressing, in the gentlest manner in which I am able to put forth the thought—Great Britain's history not only for 100 years but for 200 years, aye, for 500 years, has shown that she is wedded to the policy of conquest. For centuries her armies undertook to overwhelm France. For centuries of time the English Channel was thick with vessels carrying English soldiers to invade French soil. For centuries of time she sought to carry out similar policies all over the world. Spain felt the stroke of her mighty arm, and Spanish possessions were wrested from the Spanish Crown and people. The West Indies are a part of that spoil. Canada is the spoil she levied upon France.

By this policy of Great Britain her dominion has been extended over one-third of the habitable world and over onethird of all the creatures God has put here to people His footstool.

She has repeatedly in controversy after controversy stood out for the last possible exaction of territory as against the United States. She endeavored to hold at the close of the Revolution every foot of territory in North America that she possibly could. Controversies existed for years between Great Britain and this then weak Republic over stretches of territory which we maintained she was without right to hold, but which she undertook to hold by the planting of her colonies and by the building of forts.

She continued that policy until at one time the campaign slogan of one of the political parties was "54-40 or fight."

I shall not stop to review that history to-day; I am only briefly referring to it. But following that, she interfered with us in a desire to acquire Cuba. She interfered with us when we sought to build the Nicaragua Canal in 1861, and before that. She interfered by claiming a right over part of the South American and Central American coasts. She is even now—or, if not now, very recently has been—asserting a dominance in the Mosquito coast. She holds islands which command, in my opinion absolutely command, the eastern entrance to the Panama Canal, and you might as well have no canal at all as to have it plugged up at one end.

In the war between the North and the South she opened her ports for the fitting out of piratical craft to prey upon the commerce of the United States and to sweep our flag from the ocean. She joined with France in the conspiracy to evade the Monroe doctrine and to establish a kingdom in Mexico, and we were obliged to submit to it until the war between the States was ended, and then they made their exit; but they did not make it until the shadows of American bayonets began to be cast across the horizon of the immediate future.

She undertook to violate the Monroe doctrine, and to establish herself in Venezuela during the Presidency of Grover Cleveland. Her statesmen at that time violently denied the existence of the Monroe doctrine and declared it to be a mere impudent American assertion. She yielded upon that matter when Grover Cleveland had delivered an ultimatum the violation of which meant war, and nothing but war.

This being the situation, while I desire to cultivate every friendly relation with Great Britain, while I hope, and I repeat, while I pray that these two great nations shall always remain at peace, I nevertheless am unwilling that the United States shall be in a position so that in 48 hours of time, or at the longest three weeks of time, her war vessels will be at the bottom of the ocean, or compelled to take refuge under the guns of American forts.

We might just as well look cold facts in the face. It is not any longer a question of valor. Valor will always count its part, but a very weak and a very cowardly man, backed by a dozen policemen, can overwhelm and overcome the most valiant man who fights single-handed.

But the Britisher is neither weak nor cowardly. He is brave, intrepid, and reaches the highest planes of courage.

It therefore follows that a little fleet, such as the United States possesses, is at a tremendous disadvantage in any contest with the mighty fleet of the mistress of the seas. Though our men be brave, aye, though we love to think them braver than the others; though they be skilled, and as Americans we love to think them more skilled than British seamen, although that is a very questionable assumption, yet if the commander of a British fleet is able to bring to bear upon a single American vessel three or four vessels of equal size or two or three vessels of superior tonnage and superior metal, the inevitable result happens, just as the smaller of two locomotives coming into collision upon a railroad track is bound to suffer most from contact with one of vastly superior weight.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will my friend from Missouri yield?

Mr. REED. Just let me finish this thought, please.

Modern battles are not mere questions of courage. They are questions that are settled by the weight of metal, by the superior speed of ships. A vessel that can shoot one mile farther than another vessel and can keep out of the other vessel's range can sink the other vessel without ever being hit. Dewey taught us that lesson at Manila Bay. He knew the range of the Spanish guns and he could outrange them, so he lay off just far enough that the Spanish could not hit him while he annihilated the Spanish fleet. Russia learned that awful lesson in her contact with Japan. I believe not a single Japanese ship went to the bottom, certainly none of her first-class vessels, and yet within a few moments after coming within range the Russian fleet was at the bottom of the ocean.

Therefore, if we maintain a Navy inferior in strength to the navy of Great Britain, we may at any moment, in case so disastrous a thing as trouble between these countries should occur, find ourselves in a position that our harbors could be seized or patrolled and controlled, that they could be embargoed, that our commerce could be swept from the seas, when Great Britain drawing upon the resources of the world could do us incalculable damage.

It is not enough, sir, to say that no nation can invade us. I confidently believe that no nation or combination of two or three nations can land enough troops on our soil to ultimately overcome us in a life and death struggle. But that our coast cities could be ravished, that our commerce could be destroyed, and that we could be pent up within our own borders, lest we have in our possession sufficient means to defend ourselves upon the waters, is undoubtedly true.

I yield now to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if the question before the Senate now is not whether we shall suggest to the President that he propose a conference with the very dangerous possible enemies whom he himself has selected for the very purpose of making those enemies less dangerous in the future?

Mr. REED. That is the very question I am coming to discuss, and if the Senator will bear with me I think I shall reach it in a few moments.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Georgia does not mean to characterize those nations as enemies? I presume he means rivals.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. It is not a question of what I think about it-

Mr. ROBINSON. Or anyone else.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I am asking the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will permit me, I have just about reached, or shall in a few moments reach, that point of my remarks, and I would prefer answering in the regular course.

marks, and I would prefer answering in the regular course.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. If I may be permitted to make myself plain, my idea is this: If it be treason, or virtually that, to request the President of the United States to confer with those possible future enemies—if it be treason, if it be undemocratic to do that much, how in the name of God can we ever start disarmament?

Mr. REED. If the Senator will bear with me I think he and I will be in perfect agreement in about five minutes. I am discussing the question as it exists, and I shall discuss it for the purpose of leading up to a discussion of the Borah resolution; that is, I am discussing it as I think it exists. Of course, there are differences of opinion.

Fourth of July talk is all right. It has done a great deal of good in this country. It has kept the fires aglow with enthusiasm and love of country in the heart of the American boy. It has made him the best type of youth that the world has ever produced. I hope to hear it continued, but I never want that confiding faith to end in some frightful disaster taught upon the field of war and the story written in the blood of sacrifice poured from the veins of unarmed men. I do not wish to see the spectacle ever presented of America standing with white lips, set jaw, and straining eyes, looking out over the seas in her imagination and picturing to herself a little American fleet, one-half or one-fourth the size of the fleet of her antagonists, and with breathless terror awaiting the news as to whether her gallant boys have gone to the bottom. I never wish to see that.

LEADING NAVIES COMPARED.

Without taking the time of the Senate to read it, I desire to put into the Record a very short tabulation showing the respective sizes of the navies of Great Britain, the United States, and Japan.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The tabulation is as follows:

Comparison of capital ship strength of the United States, Great Britain, and Japan in 1921 and 1924.

Country.	Year.	Capital ships (com- bined battle- ships and battle cruisers).	Total displace- ment.

Mr. REED. While the war was raging we heard very much talk that it would be the last war ever fought among civilized nations. We all hoped that would possibly eventuate, and when the representatives of the various nations of the world gathered around the peace table I sincerely trusted that there would be a quickly made peace with Germany in which that nation as a preliminary would be disarmed, that Austria would be disarmed, that Turkey would be disarmed, and that proceeding from that point the various nations would be required solemnly to obligate themselves to agree to a general program of limitation of armament to be adopted as a part of the very conditions of peace.

When I say disarmed, let me explain that I do not mean totally disarmed, for that is a dream that can not be realized. Total disarmament would mean that the white civilization of the world might be overwhelmed at any time by the vast hordes of other peoples. But it is quite one thing for the white nations of the world to be armed to defend themselves against a possible foe of a different color, and for the white nations of the world to arm themselves to the teeth against each other. Hence, I hoped that a sensible plan of limitation of armament could be agreed upon and that it would be insisted upon.

About the first announcement we had on that question came from certain British statesmen to the effect that they did not propose to consider the question of freedom of the seas, adding cynically that "Great Britain now has it, and proposes to hold it." Everybody understood that they were not talking of freedom of the seas for commerce, but that they were talking of the command of the seas by themselves.

A little later various of those statesmen in high authority stated that Great Britain in the future as in the past would put her reliance in her floating fortresses. So when finally the battle flags were furled and the peace conference met there was no serious consideration given to the question of limitation of armament upon land or sea except that the enemy who had been overcome should be disarmed.

Following that the action of all nations except Germany and Austria has demonstrated that they do not propose to cease building battleships. Japan is busily engaged on that program and we might just as well face that situation also.

NAVAL PROGRAMS OF OTHER NATIONS.

The appropriation of England for her navy this year—and I have figures here that I believe are indisputable—is $460,495,000. Her appropriation for her army is $531,575,000. With those figures before us it is idle to haggle about what kind of ships she is building. We may trust British seamen and the British Admiralty to see to it that she is building the best she knows how; and she knows how as well as any other nation on earth.

France, although she suffered in the World War beyond description, has appropriated, if we count the depreciated franc at 20 cents, the equivalent of $225,000,000 for her navy and $1,800,000,000 for her army. Just what a franc may actually be worth, as it works out for the cost of this program. I am unable to say as it works out for the cost of this program, I am unable to say.

Japan has appropriated for her army 347,500,000 yen and for her navy 538,500,000 yen. A yen is the Japanese dollar, I understand. It is actually worth, however, about 50 cents in our money, but Japan will probably produce these vessels—those, at least, which she builds at home—for 50 per cent of the price it costs us. So we might as well count the yen as a dollar when we come to balancing the results.

These are the naval and military programs of the nations I have named, and I am very sure that I have been able to give the Senate figures that are practically accurate.

The facts can not be disregarded. These ships are being built for some purpose. Let us say that the purpose of each country is to defend itself, nevertheless they are unwilling to leave themselves in the position they now are; they want to improve their ability to defend themselves. Every schoolboy knows that every nation now that engages in war insists that it is defending itself. No matter whether it strikes the first blow or the second blow, it protests that it struck in self-defense, and, as a matter of fact, we do know that a nation frequently must strike the first blow, although acting absolutely in self-defense. We also understand that it is the most foolish policy in the world for a nation under any circumstances to hold that it must wait until its soil is actually invaded, and then stand on its defense, when by striking a blow at a distance it can save its soil from invasion. We fought the German war in self-defense, and we fought it 3,000 miles from our shores. So much for that.

There was a dispute on the floor of the Senate within the last day or two as to the character of ships Great Britain is building. There have been various contradictory accounts printed in the newspapers and various statements made upon the Senate floor that have not agreed; but, Mr. President, the truth is that, outside the British Admiralty, no one knows exactly what Great Britain is doing. I have, however, some information here which, although I can not tell the source of it on the floor of the Senate, I shall be glad to communicate to any Senator privately. I can say that the information is the last word upon the question and, so far as it goes, is unquestionably and indubitably correct. A part of it is entirely public; I simply can not tell Senators the source of the collation. Here is a statement made by the first lord of the Admiralty of Great Britain, explanatory of the navy estimates of 1921–22.

Mr. POMERENE. When was it made?

Mr. REED. Just a few weeks ago. He was discussing the question of the replacement of obsolete ships, and stated:

Of these 30 ships the older types are becoming obsolescent and can not be reckoned as efficient fighting units for more than a few years longer. The need for their gradual replacement by modern ships embodying the lessons of the war can, therefore, no longer be disregarded. In this connection it must be remembered that no capital ship of the Royal Navy has been laid down and completed since 1916, and it is obvious that as the fleet is reduced in numbers the ships of which it is composed must be of up-to-date type and of the highest efficiency. The sum of £2,500,000 has, therefore, been included in these estimates as a first installment for "replacement" ships. Further details of the proposed expenditure will be laid before Parliament as soon as possible,

He continues:

He continues:

It can not be too strongly emphasized that in making this long-delayed beginning with the replacement of obsolete ships the Government neither commits itself to nor contemplates any building "programs" in answer to those of any other power. Indeed, it trusts that it may be possible, as a result of frank and friendly discussion with the principal naval powers, to avoid anything approaching to competitive building either now or in the future. But meanwhile it would be a dereliction of duty on the part of the Admiralty to allow the efficiency training or morale of the Royal Navy to deteriorate through neglect to provide it with material which is equal to the best and in which it can feel confident. It is also imperative to avoid an irrevocable loss of time and building facilities which might make it impossible to maintain our sea security should it be threatened.

In connection with this, I have information from the same

In connection with this, I have information from the same source that no other Government has been permitted to know exactly what the new type of British ship is to be; the information regarding that question is that it is as large, if not larger, than the Hood type of ship. The dimensions of ships of the Hood type are: Length, 810 feet; length over all, 860 feet; breadth, 104 feet; draft, 28½ feet; displacement, 21,200 tons; speed, 31.33 knots per hour.

Information which comes through the press is to the effect that the new ships being built are much larger than the Hood type; but as to that I have no information except that which is accessible to all Senators in newspapers and periodicals.

This, then, brings us face to face with the proposition that the "Mistress of the Seas" proposes to remain mistress of the seas; that Japan is rapidly increasing her armament upon the ocean; that France is doing likewise, and we may naturally expect more or less effort in that direction.

The lord of the British Admiralty, it is true, states that their program is not intended as a part of a race with other nations, and "he trusts it may be possible that, as a result of frank and friendly discussion with the principal powers, to avoid anything approaching competitive building either now or in the future." But in the meantime he states it is Great Britain's duty to continue preparation.

Mr. President, what is sound policy for Great Britain in this respect and under the circumstances I have discussed is sound policy for the United States. If they who already have a commanding position upon the seas can not afford to wait even an hour but must keep their anvils ringing and their factories smoking pending the hoped-for settlement or adjustment, then certainly that is the part of wisdom to be pursued by the United States

WE CAN NOT AFFORD TO REDUCE OUR NAVY UNTIL THERE IS A CONCERT OF ACTION BY THE OTHER LEADING POWERS.

I differ-I think I differ-from the position taken by the author of this resolution, known as the Borah resolution, in one respect. If I understand his position, it is that we should discontinue-or at least if we do not discontinue our building program we should hesitate in it, awaiting the result of a conference to be called in pursuance of his resolution. It is my opinion that we will strengthen the hope and make much more certain or probable the successful fruition of the policy suggested in the resolution if in the meantime we, if necessary, pay the price of continuing a large naval program, so that when our representatives, if this resolution is agreed to, shall meet to confer with those of France and Japan and Great Britain, the representatives of the other nations will understand by our act that unless they do come to an agreement we are prepared to go ahead, that we are going ahead, and that if necessary we will build a navy great enough to command the respect of every nation on this earth and to enforce our rights on every sea of the world. I think on that one matter I take a different view than the Senator from Idaho.

BORAH AMENDMENT THE LOGICAL SOLUTION FOR REDUCTION OF NAVIES.

Mr. President, coming now to the resolution itself, it has been claimed by all of these nations that they are not building for the purpose of menacing other nations, but only for their They have sought to justify the building of huge fleets by the argument that other nations are building huge I want to find out, the Senate of the United States ought to find out, and the country ought to find out whether or not those protestations are in good faith. The world ought to know whether or not there is any sincere purpose in the hearts of any of these foreign statesmen to lift from the peoples of the world the burden of maintaining immense arma-There is no occasion for us to indulge in dreams or ments. It is a question that can be settled about the council table, and settled very speedily. Either they will be willing to agree fairly to a program of restriction of armament or they will be forced to reject that proposition. I want that question put on the table of the world. question put on the table of the world's conference. the nation that will refuse to agree to a program of limitation of armament to take the onus of its act and to stand before the world responsible at the bar of public opinion and in the sight of Almighty God for its refusal. If they shall be willing to reduce armaments, I am willing to go to any reasonable length in order to produce that result, to any length that will not jeopardize our own country; but if they refuse to agree to a plan of limitation of armament, it will be, to me, conclusive evidence that they propose to put their trust in the might of their arms and not in the equity of their cause, and all the talk we have heard in regard to their willingness to disarm has been delivered in bad faith and for the purpose of deceiving us and other nations. When that proposition is made plain, if it unhappily shall be made plain, then I propose, as far as I am concerned, to use what little influence I possess to put the United States in a position where the combined power of the earth can never crush us.

So, Mr. President, I earnestly support the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho. It was wisely conceived. It brings to a sharp issue a question that may remain in nebula for years if the resolution is not passed, and I can not understand how any opposition to it should exist in this Chamber. Those of us who have had in the past great confidence in agreements between nations, going into a much broader field than this, ought to be satisfied to go at least this far. Those of us who have not had the degree of confidence to which I refer, nevertheless ought to be willing to go this far in order that the question may be once and for all settled. Are the nations of the world sufficiently enlightened and advanced and Christianized and have they enough good judgment and common sense to agree to limit the burden of armament and thus bring relief to their exhausted treasuries and their exhausted peoples?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state

the next amendment passed over.

The READING CLERK. On page 25, after line 14, it is proposed to insert:

Submarine base, New London, Conn.: Toward the completion of a submarine base at New London, Conn., $50,000. Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, did we pass over the Naval Hospital, San Diego, Calif.?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. I only desire to say that that was passed over at my request. I understand that it is purely a hospital proposition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Entirely so, and I think very much needed. There is a very large naval base there and a great number of men are gathered at that point.

Mr. BORAH. I withdraw any opposition to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee which has just been stated by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed over.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over is, on page 24, after line 22, to insert:

Submarine and destroyer base, Guam: Toward the development of a submarine and destroyer base, and for mine and ammunition storage, island of Guam. $1,499,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over is, on page 26, after line 3, to insert:

Naval air station, Sand Point, Wash.: Toward development for heavier-than-air equipment, $600,000; toward grading, filling, and clearing, $200,000; in all, $800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. Also the following:

Naval submarine base, San Pedro, Calif.: Toward development of a submarine base, $1,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. Also the following:

Naval supply base, Alameda, Calif.: Toward dredging, excavating, and grading, $1,500,000.

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept from the city of Alameda, Calif., free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States Government in excess of $1, a certain tract of land on San Francisco Bay, containing 5,340 acres, more or less, for use as a site for a naval base, being the land described in a certain deed made on the 5th day of February, 1926, by and between the city of Alameda and the United States of America. Also to accept free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States Government, in excess of $1, certain other land adjoining said tract, being the land lying between the southwesterly boundary line of said tract and the pierhead line in front thereof.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Washington had a talk with the Senator from Utah about that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In view of the absence of the Senator from Utah, I ask that that amendment be passed over again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over. The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over is, on page 27, at the top of the page, to insert:

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept from the city of Los Angeles, Calif., free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States Government in excess of $1, a certain tract of land in the harbor of Los Angeles, Calif., containing 225 acres, more or less, for use as a site for a naval submarine base.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. Also the following:

The Secretary of the Nary is authorized to accept from King County, State of Washington, free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States Government in excess of $1, a certain tract of land containing 400 acres, more or less, located at Sand Point on Lake Washington, for use as a site for a naval aviation base.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. Also the following:

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to acquire 1,000 acres, more or less, at or near Camp Kearny, Calif., for a site for a lighter-than-air aviation station and to pay for the same an average price of not exceeding $100 per acre out of any funds appropriated for aviation purposes.

Mr. BORAH. I ask that that go over in connection with the naval base at Alameda.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be again passed over. The Chair assumes that the amendment, in line 19, on page 27, must also be passed over.

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be done.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over at the request of the Senator from Idaho is, on page 30, line 22, after the words "Hospital Corps," where the committee proposes to strike out "$72,421 627" and insert "$87,798,447."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it will take some time to dispose of that amendment. We shall have to have a quorum here.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to that being temporarily passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment just read will be passed over. The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over is, on page 31, line 5 Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, all of those amendments on pages 30 and 31 should go over together, because they are all be passed over.

The Reading Clerk. The next amendment passed over is on page 34, line 10, passed over at the request of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. King], where the committee proposes to strike out "$3,500,000" and insert "$5,200,000."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in the strike of the strike out "$0,500,000".

ator from Washington whether that increase would be affected by the increase in the personnel?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; except in so far as the stores on hand are concerned. It is a mere matter of bookkeeping, establishing an account of the value of the supplies that are already on hand which were secured during the war and which are to be allotted as the occasion arises.

Mr. LENROOT. There is only an increase of $500,000 in the total.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment which has just been stated by the Secretary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. Also, on page 34, line 10, in the grand total, it is proposed to strike out "$9,000,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$9,500,000."

The amendment was agreed to.
The READING CLERK. The next amendment of the committee passed over is, on page 34, after line 10, to insert:

That the clothing and small-stores fund is hereby increased out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated so as to equal the value of the stock on hand in the clothing and small-stores account on March 31, 1921, as shown by the records of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts; and hereafter the clothing and small-stores fund shall be charged with the value of all issues of clothing and small stores made to enlisted men and apprentice seamen required as eutilise on first enlistment, not to exceed $100 each, and for civilian clothing not to exceed $15 per man to men given discharge for had conduct, for undesirability, or inaptitude, and the uniform gratuity paid to officers of the Naval Reserve Force.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment of the committee passed over is in the appropriation for fuel and transportation, on page 35, line 7, where the committee proposes to strike out "$17,500,000" and to insert "$25,000,000."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is an amendment upon which there was a great deal of discussion. Of course, I am perfectly willing to go ahead, but we shall have to have a quorum on it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to passing over the amendment temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment of the committee passed over is, on page 46, lines 18 and 19, where the committee proposes to strike out "$17,533,891.90" and to insert "$19,603,591.14," so as to read:

In all, pay, Marine Corps, $19,603,591,14.

Mr. LENROOT. Was the amendment on page 44 agreed to? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that the amendment on page 44, to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers, has already been agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. Then this is just a total. Why was it passed over?

Mr. LODGE. This is merely a total.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to ask the Senator from Washington a question with reference to the amendment on page 44, That increase is dependent on the increase in the personnel of the Marine Corps and the enlisted men of the Navy, is it not?
Mr. POINDEXTER. It was to provide for an increase of

Mr. LENROOT. I ask that the vote by which the committee amendment, on page 44, line 18, to strike out "$11,550,300.56" and to insert "$13,620,000," was agreed to be reconsidered, and that it be passed over to be taken up with the personnel question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment on page 44 was agreed to is reconsidered, and that amendment, together with the committee amendment on page 46, lines 18 and 19, will be passed over temporarily.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment of the committee passed over is, on page 51, line 3, under the subhead "Contingent, Marine Corps," where the committee proposes to strike out "$2,000,000" and to insert "$3,185,200."

The amendment was agreed to. The READING CLERK. The next amendment of the committee passed over is, on page 51, line 5, where the committee proposed to strike out "$9,348,950" and to insert the following: "$14,-381,002; and the money herein specifically appropriated for the maintenance of the Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with the existing law as maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

In all, for the maintenance of Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, $14,381,002; and the money herein specifically appropriated—

And so forth.

so as to read:

Mr. POMERENE. I ask that that amendment may go over. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over temporarily.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment of the committee passed over is, on page 51, line 13, after the words "Total, Marine Corps, exclusive of public works," where the committee propose to strike out "$26,882,841.90" and to insert "$33,-984,593.14."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This being a total, including items heretofore passed over, it will be passed over temporarily.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment of the committee passed over is, on top of page 52, to insert:

Increase of the Navy: The construction of two airplane carriers of the most modern type and equipment and most advantageous size is hereby authorized at a limit of cost of $26,000,000 each, including hall, machinery, armor and armament, and the sum of $15,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward their construction. The authorization for 12 destroyers heretofore granted is hereby revoked.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what is the effect of revoking the authorization heretofore made? That is to say, how much additional appropriation does this make; $15,000,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does not make any additional appropriation, but it removes the authority for the appropriation of about $26,000,000. The revocation of the authorization has no connection with the other part of the paragraph in which it is placed, except its location. It relates to a different subject.

Mr. BORAH. I see.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask the Senator whether any appropriation has been made for the 12 destroyers, the authority for which is hereby revoked?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No.

Mr. BORAH. This simply provides for a revocation of the authorization.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They have been authorized, and that authorization is somewhat similar to the dry-dock authorization that has been discussed to-day.

Mr. BORAH. I would like to have a vote upon that when we get to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator referring to the plane carriers, or to the revocation?

Mr. BORAH. To the plane carriers. Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Wisconsin was referring to a different subject.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I understood that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, just a word. This is one of the amendments of the committee I am in favor of, because I believe that if we are to have an efficient Navy, with the progress that is being made in chemical warfare and airplane development, it is absolutely necessary that we have airplane

While I shall favor this amendment, later on I shall move to reduce the appropriation of $90,000,000, I think it is, because I do not believe that we ought to go on with the completion of the battleships we are now constructing, which are not near completion, because I believe that it will be absolutely necessary to make provision so changing the designs of those ships as to make them airplane carriers as well, at least in part. So, while I am in favor of this, I hope that the appropriation here made for this new construction may be deducted from appropriations made later on in the bill to carry out the present program, to at least the extent of the appropriations here made.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator has stated the position which I occupy in regard to that matter precisely. In other words, I would like to see some of the battleship money transferred to this kind of work. I dislike very much to see the battleship program go forward together with this program, because I think the expenditure is entirely exorbitant. But if we could suspend building upon the six battleships of the Indiana type and utilize the money for this purpose, it would be precisely what I would like to see.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before action is taken upon this, may I inquire of the Senator from Washington what action is contemplated to coordinate the aerial service of the Army, the Navy, and the mail service? There has been a great deal of talk about bringing into one organization all aeronautical activity, particularly the constructive work necessary to secure airpianes. Does it not seem to the Senator that we might save great deal if provision were made in this bill or some other bill for the unification of all agencies engaged in the procuring of airplanes

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that question was before the Senate some time ago in the consideration of a bill that was reported by the Military Affairs Committee, submitted by the War Department, the object being for the control of aviation to be practically under the War Department. That is my opinion of what the object was of the principal parties who were promoting the legislation. But the Senate rejected the bill and it has not been brought forward again.

This bill contains a provision for the coordination of all aviation activities in the Navy Department. It does not undertake to include the Army or the Post Office Department. There is nothing in the bill to provide for such equipment as the Senator from Utah suggests in the way of Government backing, the purpose being to encourage and to patronize private airplane manufacturers, with a view of building up the industry on a much more economical and efficient basis than the Government can establish it.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, I hope nothing which I said conveyed the impression to the Senator that I favored the Government going into the business of manufacturing.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not so understand the Senator, but I understood that he was raising the question as to the appropriation carried in the bill for factories, but there is nothing of that kind.

Mr. KING. I had in mind rather the coordination of all departments of the Government that have to do with the operation of airplanes. It does seem to me that the time has come when, instead of having the Army and the Navy and the Post Office Department each buying its own equipment, duplicating work, each having its own mechanicians and experts, and so on, it would be far better and far more economical if there should be a coordination of all of these branches of the Government.

I can feel some apprehension that if we passed the bill in its present form it would tend to prevent an organization which would make for economies. Before making any appropriations' we ought to unify the agencies engaged in the acquisition of airplanes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On the contrary, Mr. President, instead of the bill tending toward the separation of these different services, it tends toward the unification of them in so far as naval aviation is concerned, accomplishing within the Navy the very purposes which the Senator from Utah favors. The Senate committee gave very careful consideration to the proposition the Senator suggests, of combining all the different aviation services under one head, and the difficulties and objections to that program which seemed to be absolutely insurmountable were pointed out. The naval aviation service is fundamentally different from the land service. Men in the naval aviation service are required to have knowledge of ships and of the sea which landsmen are not required to have, and unless they have that training, they will be absolutely helpless in the face of the conditions which naval aviators have to contend with.

Mr. KING. I do not agree with the Senator that the difficulties to which he has alluded are as powerful as indicated, It is likely that naval aviators must have some different training from that given to land aviators; but there can be no objection to the establishment of some governmental agency or interdepartmental organization that shall have general supervision over the question of aviation and particularly over the question of procuring equipment, air and sea planes, and the erection of manufacturing plants, if the Government is compelled to enter upon the manufacture of planes in order to supply the Army, Navy, and mail service. I see no reason why there should be so many purchasing agencies, so many supply depots, repair and construction plants, and the vast army of employees whose work and service overlap. There are too many fields and too much machinery; we seem unable to coordinate governmental activities. The policy is diffusion, the scattering of forces directed to the same general purposes, the creation of new bureaus and departments. If an evil exists, our only remedy is to create more machinery and furnish more positions for the people.

I am afraid if this provision remains unmodified it will tend to drive further apart the agencies in the various departments that are directed to aircraft and the general subject of aeronautics. There should be cooperation of all agencies directed to aeronautics, but this bill will strengthen the position of those who feel there can be no coordination of the aviation sections of the Government. Instead of trying to bring together those departments in matters that clearly could be controlled by one organization, this will in my opinion tend to divide and make more difficult the unification of the aviation branches of the Government.

I wish to inquire of the Senator from Washington whether or not he regards the matter now under discussion as a part of the paragraph found on page 51, "total increase of the Navy heretofore authorized, $90,000,000," and so on?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it is not a part of that.

Mr. KING. Because, if so, I wish to offer an amendment now to that paragraph.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; it is not a part of the preceding paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over will be found on page 52, after the amendment just agreed to, to insert the following:

The limits of cost heretofore authorized and below enumerated are increased as follows: Battleship No. 44, from $12,750,000 to $14,750,000; battleship No. 45 to battleship No. 48, both inclusive, each, from $15,000,000 to $17,000,000; destroyer tender No. 3, from $3,400,000 to $4,500,000; submarine tender No. 3, from $3,400,000 to $4,200,000; submarine No. 119 to submarine No. 122, both inclusive, each, from $1,750,000 to $1,925,000.

Mr. BORAH. May I inquire if that is a change of the law as it is now?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is only a change of the law in so far as the particular item of appropriation is concerned. will say to the Senator that those ships are nearing completion, that the original limitations fixed for them were established in 1916, and that the increased cost of labor and material since that time has made it practically necessary to enlarge the limitation in order to meet the Government contracts.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask this further question? Are these battleships, the increased price of which is provided for here, the ships which are now practically completed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are nearing completion.

Mr. BORAH. To what extent, would the Senator say? Mr. POINDEXTER. I think I can inform the Senator.

have the condition here as of May 10, 1921. Battleship No. 44, the California, being constructed in the Mare Island Navy Yard, is 96.5 per cent completed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator where the committee find the figures "$12,750,000" or the figures "$14,-750,000," because it is well known that the California has cost and will cost very much in excess of either of those figures.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator probably has in mind the armor and armament which is not included in those figures; that is, the guns which are very expensive and which are being constructed for that ship, all of which, together with the defensive armament, are not included in this item.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator state just what part of the completed vessel will be cared for by the appropriation of substantially $15,000,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The entire vessel, except the armor and armament-all the machinery and engines and the hull of the vessel and the complete equipment, except the armor and armament.

Does the Senator state that the difference be-Mr. KING. tween the vessel brought to the degree of completion which he has indicated and the vessel when completed for naval operations is the difference between that figure and $40,000,000 or $45,000,000, because the California will cost at least $40,000,000. It seems to me incredible that the armor, the defensive part of the vessel to which the Senator has just referred, would amount to the difference between substantially $15,000,000 and $40,000,-000 or forty million odd dollars.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is some uncertainty as to the caliber of the guns which will be placed upon some of these ships. Of course, the cost of the armor depends to some extent upon the final determination of that question. But the fact is nevertheless as stated, that the machinery and the hull of the vessels are included in the limitation of cost stated here. The additional cost for the completed vessel in commission is the cost of the armor and the armament.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether or not there is charged to this boat its share of the overhead of the maintenance of the Mare Island Navy Yard, or does the $14,000,000 or $15,000,000 carried by this provision merely provide for the machinery and the hull and the material to bring the boat up to that degree of completion before the protective armament and the guns are provided?

Mr. POINDEXTER. My attention was diverted and I did not catch the first part of the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. What I am trying to get at is what part of the overhead of the yard is charged to the ship. Is any part of it?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. KING. Or do they cover that by any kind of separate appropriation for the purpose—I do not say intentionally—of keeping down the bookkeeping cost of the boat?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; we do not do that. A reasonable proportion of the overhead expenses of the yard is charged to A reasonable the ship which is built in that yard.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator know that the upkeep of the navy yard at Mare Island, while it is perhaps the most economical of any yard the Government has and certainly the most efficient, must be tremendous? Indeed I have some figures here which show that we spend there annually a great many million dollars in wages and in the maintenance of the yard.

Mr. POINDEXTER. They are building two capital ships there now, and, of course, a very large number of men are employed in the construction of those ships. In addition to that it is a destroyer base, and a great deal of work is being done upon destroyers. Some destroyers are being constructed there. It is a very extensive manufacturing plant. That accounts for the cost of maintenance. The yard has made a good record. In fact, as to economy and efficiency of construction, they claim to have made the record of the United States. I do not admit that altogether, because I think the Puget Sound Navy Yard is fully equal to that.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I understood the Senator from Washington to say that battleship 44 is 96 per cent completed.

Did I correctly understand him?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Ninety-six and five-tenths per cent. Mr. WILLIS. I can not understand, if it is 96 per cent completed, how it comes about that an additional appropriation of $2,000,000 is necessary for the additional 4 per cent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This is not an appropriation,

Mr. WILLIS. It is an authorization.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; it is an authorization.

Mr. WILLIS. It is $2,000,000 of additional expense to complete 4 per cent of the construction. What is the total cost of the ship?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The total cost of the ship is the limit of cost stated here, which, so far as it can be figured out at the present time, is $14,750,000 for the hull and machinery, exclusive of armor and armament. I assume that a great deal of construction has been done upon the ship which is not yet paid for. Contractors complain a great deal about the delay of the Government in paying as promptly as they should, and that might account for it.

Mr. WILLIS. If 96 per cent is completed, it does not appear to me that it ought to take $2,000,000 additional to construct the remaining 4 per cent.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I see what appears to the Senator from Ohio to be a very natural question to ask, but if the Senator had had experience in settling up contracts with the Government, or if any of his constituents ever had such experience, he would readily realize that the amount of money paid out does not by any means indicate the amount of work done.

Mr. WILLIS. May I ask one other question? In the next item there is an increased authorization of some $8,000,000 for the four ships. Is that because of increased cost of material, or has there been a change in the plans of the ships?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There has been some change in the plans of the ships, but not as much in these ships as there has been in other ships in the program, because these ships are very far advanced toward completion. However, there have been some changes since the original limitation of cost was fixed. limitation was fixed in 1916 before we entered the war, and the Senator can readily appreciate the effect of the increased wages and cost of material upon the cost of construction.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand. I have heard some discussion about a change in the plans of some of the ships, to make out of them airplane carriers. Is that contemplated in this appropri-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all. I do not think that has been considered by the Navy, because these ships have proceeded to such an extent as to be impracticable for that use, so far as these particular ships are concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The READING CLERK. The next amendment passed over will be found on page 58, to insert section 16, passed over upon the request of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Fol-

Mr. BORAH. That went over at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE]. He desires to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Then I ask that it be passed over. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. In view of the lateness of the hour, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, May 19, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 18, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord is our refuge and strength, and underneath are the everlasting arms. Thy right hand has been merciful in its power, and may our names ever be written in its palm. Give inspiration as well as direction to all of our labors, that they may be acceptable in Thy sight. Look upon all those that mourn and touch them with Thy healing spirit. Give support to the bruised reed and lift up the heads that are bowed in grief. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, May 16, 1921, was read and approved.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE OF KENNAMER AGAINST RAINEY.

The SPEAKER. The papers in the contested-election case of C. B. Kennamer against L. B. Rainey, from the seventh congressional district of Alabama, will be referred to the Committee on Elections No. 3.

PENSIONS.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Pensions on the bill H. R. 4, known as the Knutson bill, and ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report to accompany the bill (H. R. 4) granting relief to soldiers and sailors of the War with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign; to widows, former widows, and dependent parents of such soldiers and sailors, and to certain Army

The SPEAKER. Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Are the pension bills similar to that always reported from the floor, or do they go through the box?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not advised.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I understand that a general pension bill reported by the Committee on Pensions is privileged and is usually reported from the floor of the House,

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not. The Chair thinks it comes through the basket in regular order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The reason why I make the inquiry is this: I wanted to make a point of order if it were submitted from the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it goes through the basket. The Chair submits to the House a letter from the Secretary

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, before passing that question, does the Chair rule that a report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions goes through the basket?

The SPEAKER. This is not from the Committee on Invalid

Pensions. It is from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Either of them.

The SPEAKER. The rule specifies the Committee on Invalid Pensions, but not the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I understand the question of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] covered both com-

The SPEAKER. No. The question of the gentleman from Tennessee simply referred to this bill.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be reported from the floor of the House.

Mr. GARNER. It has been reported. The ruling of the Chair did not set aside the fact of its being reported to the

The SPEAKER. It is reported as far as its being read goes. That has already been done.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent— Mr. WALSH. No point of order has been made. The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] said substantially constituted a point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will make the point of order. All the gentleman has to do is to drop it in the basket.

Mr. ROBSION. I ask unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the report be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, Mr. Speaker, we ought not to start and establish that precedent as to pensions. I object.

VISIT TO MARINE CORPS BASE AT QUANTICO, VA.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the letter from the Secretary of the Navy.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 13, 1921.

Hon. Frederick H. Gillett, M. C..

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Speaker: The Marine Corps east coast base is located near Washington on the Potomac River at Quantico, Va. It was there that its overseas regiments were trained during the war and where its expeditionary forces are now stationed. I am anxious to have the Members of the House visit Quantico so that they may have the opportunity to observe the work of the Marine Corps.

I am therefore writing to request you to extend to the Members of the House an invitation to go to Quantico on Thursday, May 19. The President has kindly placed the U. S. S. Mayhower at our disposal, and that vessel will get under way at the Washington Navy Yard at 8 a. m. on the above-mentioned date. The Members will be provided dinner and supper at Quantico, and the Mayhower will return with them to Washington in the evening, arriving probably not earlier than 11 p. m. Quantico, however, is on the Richmond, Fredericksburg & Potomac Railroad and there will be a number of trains available for those desiring to return at an earlier hour.

Arrangements will be made to issue an individual nontransferable card to each Member who desires to accept this invitation. These cards should be presented at the navy yard gate and at the gangway of the Mayhower.

Trusting that a large delegation will be able to make the trip, and with best wishes to you, I am, as always,

Very sincerely, yours,

EDWIN DENEY,

Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, I would like if I could have just a minute to speak on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HICKS. The invitation that has been extended by Secretary Denby, of course, is self-explanatory. I merely wish to give some information about trains. In the evening there will be a musical recital by the enlisted men, which, of course, will be very interesting; but in case some of the Members desire to return to Washington by train before the Mayflower leaves they can return by the train that leaves Quantico at 4.50, arriving in Washington at 6.15, and by another train which leaves Quantico at 5.16, arriving at 6.30; and in addition to the train and the ship, the roads from here to Quantico are extremely well built and transport by automobiles will be almost as comfortable a way of going down as by train or boat.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

Mr. HICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman if he can give the House, for the benefit of those who desire to accept the invitation, any idea or information as to the order of business to-morrow?

Mr. HICKS. I will refer that to the gentleman from Wyo-

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the deficiency bill has been reported. My understanding is that it will require two days, or part of two days, at least, to dispose of it, in all probability. We hope to dispose of the bill that is called up to-day before we adjourn, and then when we meet again, whether it be tomorrow or the day after, to take up the deficiency bill; if that is disposed of, it is about all I have anticipated we would do this week. It is therefore a question as to whether we shall recess to-morrow on account of the trip that has been suggested, or stand in recess over Saturday. Personally, either arrangement would be entirely satisfactory to me. But inasmuch as the Committee on Appropriations has reported its deficiency bill and they desire to take it up to-morrow, I feel as though I should not prefer a request that the House stand in recess to-morrow. However, if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations desires to prefer a request that the House stand in recess tomorrow, with the idea that we would take up the deficiency bill Friday and complete it Saturday, such an arrangement would be entirely satisfactory, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. MONDELL. If I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. This is all by unanimous consent.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman intend to pass an apportionment bill at this session; and if so, at what stage? Several legislatures are going to meet, and many inquiries have been made if we were going to have an apportionment bill; and if so, when,

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman from Texas will modify his inquiry a little. His inquiry directed to me was, Does the gentleman intend to pass an apportionment bill at this session? The gentleman from Wyoming does not, as the gentleman from Texas knows, pass bills, does not report bills, and it is not for him to say whether an apportionment bill shall be presented and passed. But if the gentleman desires the opinion of the gentleman from Wyoming as to what should be done, the gentleman from Wyoming will frankly say to him that, in his opinion, the House within a reasonable time, and certainly at this session, should report and pass an apportionment bill.

Mr. GARNER. Get the steering committee and the machinery in motion and the bill reported out, and when we have nothing else to do we can pass it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MONDELL. If I have the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. I notice that invitation was extended to 435 Members of the House, The gentleman indicated that the House might be in session to-morrow. If the invitation was accepted pretty generally, it would not be of much advantage to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to consider a bill unless he had a quorum present. Has the gentleman taken into consideration the fact that that might make the chairman a little more amiable toward a request the gentleman from Wyoming might make that we take a recess to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL, The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is entirely amiable, but I have no information as to his frame of mind on this matter. He is here and can speak for himself.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SEARS. Upon what subject?

Mr. MADDEN. Upon this subject.
Mr. SEARS. The gentleman has objected several times to Mr. SEARS. my addressing the House, but I have no disposition at this time to make any objection to his addressing the House.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will not feel called upon to adjourn to-morrow to go on a junket, for that There is an important bill from the Comis what it means. mittee on Appropriations that calls for appropriations for the United States Government activities, and of course the acceptance of an invitation to go to Quantico will simply add to the expense of the Government. It does not seem to me that at this time, when everybody outside the Government is trying to economize in every way they can, that we should add to the extravagant expenses of the Government.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Does the gentleman suggest that the administration ought not to have issued the invitation?

Mr. MADDEN. I have nothing to do with what they undertake; I am simply saying that I am opposed to taking the time away from the actual business of the House that ought to be considered.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. MADDEN. Not now. For myself I hope the House will remain in session and do the business that is before it. If they want to adjourn over Saturday, that is another thing. A great many Members of the House live only a few miles away and like to go home on Saturday. They are willing to work the rest of the week. I hope that nothing will be done in respect to this invitation that will prevent the House going on with the important business before us.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will yield, the gentleman spoke of going on a junket trip to-morrow. The gentleman is aware of the fact that it has become almost the universal practice to have a week end so that the Members may junket home. The gentleman from Chicago does not go home and the gentleman from Texas does not go home; they do not get any junket out of it. So if there is going to be a general invitation, why not have the recess to-morrow instead of Saturday?

Mr. MADDEN. When the Members go home over Saturday they go at their own expense. If they go to-morrow, they go at the Government's expense, and I am opposed to it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been requested to say that Members who desire to go on the trip to-morrow can get their tickets at the room of the Naval Committee of the House.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman from Iowa, or the gentleman from Wyoming, or the gentleman from Illinois a question. The gentleman from Illinois said that this would be a very expensive trip to the Government. What will be the items of expense that the Government will be put to if the Members of Congress go to Quantico to-mor-

Mr. HICKS. If I may be allowed, the Mayflower is in commission at the present time with a full crew, and the expense of going there and back will be merely the coal that will be The entertainment given to Members of Congress will be on behalf of the officers and not at the expense of the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS. And the Mayflower is going to Quantico, anyhow.

Mr. HICKS. That is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Then, what will be the items of expense? Mr. HICKS. Well, there may be a certain amount of wear and tear to the decks of the ship and some gasoline used in motors, but I can not believe that it will amount to much expense, and I believe that to go down there and see what the Marine Corps are doing will be a splendid inspiration to Congress and give us information that we all ought to have. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. I would like to ask the gentleman, who is responsible for all this expense that the gentleman from Illinois has discovered, who is responsible for issuing the invitation and starting it?

Mr. HICKS. The Secretary of the Navy, and I commend him for his thoughtfulness.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, with regard to the House accepting the invitation to go to Quantico to-morrow, I am convinced that a very large number of the Members of the House prefer to go down and visit this camp. A good deal is always said in the press and from the public platform, and sometimes on the floor of the House, in denouncing such visits as "junkets."

My experience has been that when committees can go to a place like Quantico, or any other place where there is a Government activity, and become acquainted with it by personal contact, seeing the things that are being done, and so forth, they are better able to pass judgment upon them afterwards, and upon similar things, than they are if they have to accept the statement of some Member of the House in respect to conditions, although the statement may be absolutely true and reliable. believe a vast majority of the Members want to go to-morrow.

I personally can not go. I shall present the deficiency bill as seen as I have the opportunity, but I would hate to present a deficiency bill that has as many intricate and troublesome questions in it as this one has when the House is not feeling very kindly toward the committee. If, therefore, some member of the Committee on Appropriations shall become responsible for denying the Members a right to take a trip of this kind, we might not expedite the transaction of Government business. shall not object, Mr. Speaker, so far as any request is made, but, not being interested, I do not believe that the request should come from me.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday next. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GOOD, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, reported the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, which was read a first and second time, and, together with the accompanying report, ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 2173) authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a private drawbridge over and across Lock No. 4 of the canal and locks, Willamette Falls, Clackamas County, Oreg.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 906. An act for the relief of Reuben R. Hunter;

S. 1060. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to punish, the transportation of stolen motor vehicles in interstate or foreign commerce," approved October 29, 1919;

S. 1072. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes;

S. 494. An act for the relief of Benjamine O. Kerlee;

S. 990. An act to provide for the sale by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of certain land in the District of Columbia required for a school site, and for other purposes;

S. 1358, An act to provide for maintaining the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy at its maximum authorized strength, and for other purposes;

S. 937. An act to reimburse Isaiah Stephens, postmaster of McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., for money and postage stamps stolen; and

S. 938. An act to reimburse S. S. Buzzerd, postmaster at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, W. Va., for cash stolen. The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 4586) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, re-ported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the H. R. 4075. United States

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 594. An act for the relief of certain ex-service men whose rights to make entries on the North Platte irrigation project, Nebraska-Wyoming, were defeated by intervening claims; and

S. 1479. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Washington & Old Dominion Railway, a corporation, to construct a bridge across the Potomac River.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday. The Clerk will call the roll of committees.

The Clerk proceeded with the call of committees, and called the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, the Clerk has called the Committee on Banking and Currency but once. It has been customary heretofore to call each committee the second time. I therefore expect that the Committee on Banking and Currency will be called the second time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the committee the second time.

The Clerk again called the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, let me ask if the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFanden], the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, is present?

Mr. MONDELL. I am informed that the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency does not expect to call up any bill to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call. Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, an important bill has been re-ported from the Committee on Banking and Currency, a bill in which the wheat and cotton growers of the country are very much interested. The law known as the Edge Act is very deficient in the matter of arranging foreign credits, and I do hope that the gentleman from Wyoming will use his influence with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Com-mittee on Banking and Currency, to get that bill before the House as soon as possible. It is of vast interest; it is a matter in which the farming industry of this country is very much interested, and I was in hopes that it could be passed to-day, within the hour.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the bill in question to which the gentleman refers is no doubt an important bill, although there is considerable difference of opinion as to whether it would greatly help the farmer and the cotton grower, as the gentleman's statement would seem to indicate. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce have a very important bill which they desire to pass to-day. It is not only of importance but presents a matter requiring early attention. The State Department is very anxious to have the matter considered at an early date. In view of these considerations, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency does not intend to insist upon the right of his committee to-day.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Does the gentleman have any idea that within the next week or two the measure to which the gentleman from Texas referred will be gotten up?

Mr. MONDELL. Just how soon we can reach it I can not say, but I trust within a reasonable length of time.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the floor leader, withdraw my request.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will proceed with the call of committees

LANDING OF SUBMARINE CABLES IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. WINSLOW (when the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce was called). Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I call up the bill (S. 535) to prevent the unauthorized landing of submarine cables in the United States, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person shall land or operate in the United States any submarine cable directly or indirectly connecting the United States with any foreign country, or connecting one portion of the United States with any other portion thereof, unless a written license to land or operate such cable has been issued by the President of the United States without alleense granted by the President of the United States without a license granted by the President may continue to operate without such license for a period of 90 days from the date of approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That the President may withhold or revoke such license when he shall be satisfied that such action will assist in securing rights for the landing or operation of cables in foreign countries, or in maintaining the rights or interests of the United States or of its citizens in foreign countries, or will promote the security of the United States, or may grant such license upon such terms as shall be necessary to assure just and reasonable rates and service in the operation and use of cables so licensed: Provided, That the license shall not contain terms or conditions granting to the licensee exclusive rights of landing or of operation in the United States: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to limit the power and jurisdiction heretofore granted the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to the transmission of messages,

SEC. 3. That the President is empowered to prevent the landing of any cable about to be landed in violation of this act. Any district court of the United States exercising jurisdiction in the district in which any cable is about to be landed or is being operated in violation of this act, or has been landed in violation of this act, shall have jurisdiction to enjoin the landing or operation of such cable, or to compel by injunction the removal of such cable. If a license to land a cable shall be granted under this act, and if the conditions of such license shall not be complied with, any district court of the United States exercising jurisdiction in the district in which such cable shall have been landed shall have jurisdiction by injunction to prevent the operation of such cable or cause the removal thereof.

SEC. 4. That whoever knowingly commits, instigates, or assists in any act forbidden by section 1 of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 5. That the term "United States" as used in this act includes the Canal Zone, the Philippine Islands, and all territory, continental or insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States of America.

SEC. 6. That no right shall accrue to any Government, person, or corporation under the terms of this act that may not be rescinded, changed, modified, or amended by the Congress.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act relating to the landing and operation of submarine cables in the United States."

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this S. 535 is a very important bill. The passage of the legislation proposed by this bill will affect very materially the internal interests of this country, and also the policy of this country in respect of all local cable matters in connection with foreign countries. The time for debate is not long. Members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce are very well advised as to all the features of the bill and the history connected with it. Several of them will explain the matters of particular interest to the Members, and they will take up the history of cable legislation, the matter of authority over cables, and other questions which are pertinent to the discussion of this bill. The report has been prepared on behalf of the committee by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Webster] and is a very informing statement of the general proposition. order that we may get at the bill without delay and with the least duplication of statement in reference to its provisions, I will now yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. Webster]. [Applause.]

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Speaker, the bill now under considera-tion undertakes to define a broad national policy with respect to the important matter of submarine cable landings and operation in the United States and to set up a suitable machinery to give expression to that policy. Briefly the bill contemplates that the President shall have the power to prevent the landing of cables on the shores of the United States unless the parties interested bring themselves within the provisions of this bill. It confers upon the President the power to grant licenses and to grant licenses upon conditions. It grants him the power to prevent the unauthorized landing of such cables. It empowers him to regulate the operation of cables to a certain degree and may be operated contrary to the provisions of the bill. The measure comes to the House at this time under a peculiar urge-the urge of an extraordinary emergency of very farreaching importance. It may conduce to clearness, Mr. Speaker, if the general situation is sketched in brief. The authority of the President of the United States to deal with the matter of submarine cable landings and operation has been asserted and exercised in this country for more than half a century. The first instance giving rise to the exercise of the power occurred during the administration of President Grant in 1869. In that year a French cable company, enjoying certain monopolistic privileges in France with reference to communication between that country and America, undertook to land a sub-marine cable on the shores of the United States. President Grant considered that he could not stand by and permit a thing of that sort to be done. He interposed objection and insisted that before this cable could invade our shores the monopolistic feature of the French grant should be abandoned, and that citizens of America engaged in similar enterprises should be accorded the same rights in France as the French company was seeking in the United States. In his message to the Congress in 1875 President Grant defined a wise, broad, and wholesome policy with reference to this matter. I believe it will be very helpful if we have these fundamental principles well in mind.

He said in part:

He said in part:

In the absence of legislation by Congress I was unwilling, on the one hand, to yield to a foreign State the right to say that its grantees might land on our shores while it denied a similar right to our people to land on its shores, and, on the other hand, I was reluctant to deny to the great interests of the world and of civilization the facilities of such communication as were proposed. I therefore withheld any resistance to the landing of the cable on condition that the offensive monopoly feature of the concession be abandoned and that the right of any cable which may be established by authority of this Government to land upon French terrifory and to connect with French land lines and enjoy all the necessary facilities or privileges incident to the use thereof upon as favorable terms as any other company be conceded.

I. No line should be allowed to land on the shores of the United States under the concession from any other power which does not admit the right of any other line or lines formed in the United States to land and freely connect with and operate through its land lines.

II. No line should be allowed to land on the shores of the United States which is not by treaty stipulation with the Government from whose shores it proceeds or by prohibition in its charter or otherwise to the satisfaction of this Government prohibited from consolidating or amalgamating with any other cable-telegraph line or combining therewith for the purpose of regulating and maintaining the cost of telegraph.

In the meantime, and unless Congress otherwise directs I shall not with for the purpose of regulating and maintaining the cost of telegraph.

In the meantime, and unless Congress otherwise directs, I shall not oppose the landing of any telegraphic cable which comples with and assents to the points above enumerated, but will feel it my duty to prevent the landing of any which does not conform to the first and second points as stated, and which will not stipulate to concede to this Government the precedence in the transmission of its official messages, and will not enter into a satisfactory arrangement with regard to its

Mr. Speaker, since the definition of this broad policy by President Grant, distinguished Secretaries of State and Attorneys General, among them Fish, Evarts, Frelinghuysen, Bayard, Blaine, Day, Hay, Root, Richards, Griggs, Wickersham, and McReynolds, have upheld the right of the Chief Executive to deal with submarine cable landings. There seems to be but a single break in this chain of thought, and that occurred during the administration of President Cleveland when Secretaries Gresham and Olney held to the contrary view, taking the position that there is no inherent power in the Executive to control cable landings. With that single exception, however, the policy has been uniform. It was renewed immediately after the termination of the Cleveland administration and has continued down to and including the time when Mr. Justice McReynolds, then Attorney General of the United States, re-asserted it. The exercise of this power now is challenged in the courts of the country, the facts giving rise to the litigation being briefly these: The Western Telegraph Co. is a British corporation enjoying monopolistic cable concessions in South America. It entered into a contract with the Western Union Telegraph Co. of this country under the terms of which the British company was to extend a line of cable from a point in Brazil to the island of Barbados. The Western Union Co. undertook to lay a line of cable from Miami Beach, Fla., to Barbardos, so as to connect with the British company's line and establish through communication between the United States and Brazil. In the effort to carry out its part of the contract the Western Union Co. made application to Secretary of State Colby for an executive permit in pursuance of the settled policy applicable to such cases. There is some controversy as to what transpired in detail, but there is no room for debate as to this naked fact: It did not receive the permit sought. Notwithstanding this, the Western Union Co. pro-ceeded to lay its cable without permission and without authority, taking the position that no permission was necessary.

At this point President Wilson ordered the Secretary of the authorizes him to bring about the removal of any cables which Navy to send a battleship to the point where the Western Union was carrying on its operations and to compel them to cease. Rear Admiral Anderson, in charge of a war vessel, proceeded to Miami, Fla., and there compelled the Western Union to stop its work in the laying of the cable. Whereupon the Western Union Co. applied to the district court of the District of Columbia for an injunction against the Secretary of the Navy, restraining him from interfering with the company in the laying of its cable. That case is now held under advisement in the district court. Later the United States of America in its governmental capacity, and as such, went to the Federal court for the southern district of New York and instituted an action against the Western Union Co., wherein an injunction was sought against the Western Union Co. restraining it from further attempting to lay the cable. The case was presented to the district court at length. Judge Hand, of that court, seems to have held that there is no authority vested in the President of the United States to control the matter of cable landings, especially where the case is one involving an American company which has complied with the provisions of the so-called post roads act of July 24, 1866. The case was appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the second circuit, and the opinion of Judge Hand was affirmed. The United States has appealed the case to the Supreme Court, where it has been fully presented, and is now under submission for final decision

It will readily be seen that if the opinion of the circuit court of appeals is sustained it will be on the theory that under the commerce clause of the Constitution the sole power over submarine cables-instrumentalities of commerce-is vested in the Congress. In consequence the President will be shorn of his power, the settled policy of the Nation will be cast aside, and unless some appropriate congressional action is taken to meet the situation the United States of America will be reduced to the humiliating spectacle of being the only nation in Christendom which does not have some machinery whereby it may protect its shores against invasion by foreign cable companies. That is the urge of this bill at this time. I sincerely hope that the Members of the House will be impressed with the seriousness of the situation and will not leave this Nation exposed to that humiliation.

It might be said in passing that there is broad room for difference of opinion as to whether this power does not already rest in the President. It is a mooted question, and save the litigation to which I have referred, has never been passed upon directly by any court.

I am inclined to the view, however, that whatever the law may be at this time, there can be little room for difference of opinion as to where the authority ought to be lodged. In all the countries of which I know the power to deal with submarine cables is an executive power. Frequently these cables are laid as the result of negotiations between this country and foreign nations, and it seems highly appropriate that the President of the United States shall be the spokesman for this country in conducting its diplomatic operations.

There has been some difference of opinion as to the details of the bill, but I believe the fundamental thought underlying the measure, that the Executive shall be clothed with ample power and authority to deal with this question, is approved by every thoughtful person who has devoted any attention to the question.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington

has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a brief question?

Mr. WEBSTER. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is there any other American company that desires to do business in this same territory that this company connects with?

Mr. WEBSTER. The All-American Cable Co. now has cable connection with South America on the western coast, and that company, too, is in the enjoyment of certain monopolistic privileges. It is the purpose of this bill to define a general and comprehensive policy which will place it in the power of the Chief Executive to protect the rights of the people of this country and of this Nation as such as to grants that are now in existence as well as those which may come into existence and to eliminate monopolistic or other objectionable features which in his judgment are inimical to the interests of this country.

It can not be truthfully said that a uniform course has been pursued with respect to the policy of denying the right to cable companies to land on our shores if they have monopolistic privileges abroad. Such has been the policy, but it has not at all times been strictly followed. As to the economic wisdom of the policy, I prefer not to go into it for lack of time.

The first section of this bill provides:

That no person shall land or operate in the United States any sub-marine cable directly or indirectly connecting the United States with any foreign country, or connecting one portion of the United States with any other portion thereof, unless a written license to land or oper-ate such cable has been issued by the President of the United States.

Some contention has been made that it is not within the power of the Congress to delegate this authority. It is said that if the Congress has the power to enact this law at all it has it in virtue of the commerce clause of the Constitution; and that under the A B C rule that legislative functions may not be delegated, the bill is open to attack on constitutional grounds. I have given careful thought to that question, and I know it has been considered by other members of the committee. I am convinced in my own mind that this bill is not open to that attack. We have the power to set up an executive or an administrative agency through which we may give expression to our legislative functions. The only objection is, have we so defined the rules and regulations as to save the bill against the criticism that it confers arbitrary power? But the courts of this country have dealt with this question many times. There is not a thing novel about that problem. The courts have recognized this directing and guiding principle, that if the subject being dealt with is of such a character that it is not practicable to set up definite guideposts and standards, the power may be delegated in more general terms and the courts will find the means to give expression to the legislative purpose. The agency created may be intrusted with very broad discretionary powers in cases of that kind. If a case can be conceived that comes within that broad principle, it is one dealing with an international problem such as the landing of cables upon our shores, each instance of which embodies new conditions, new facts, new circumstances, and new situations. I am convinced that this bill is not open to the attack I have just suggested.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. WEBSTER. I will yield. Mr. HUSTED. The Western Union Co., as I understand it, actually made application for permission to connect with the British cable at Barbados?

Mr. WEBSTER. Yes

Mr. HUSTED. And that request was denied?

Mr. WEBSTER. Yes. Mr. HUSTED. What was the objection to the Western Union connecting with the British cable at Barbados?

Mr. WEBSTER. I will be glad to answer that. discloses this

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman. Mr. WEBSTER. The Western Union Co. made application to Secretary Colby for executive permit to lay its cable.

At that time an international conference had been called to canvass the entire international situation with respect to submarine cable landings and operations. The Congress had passed an act authorizing the appointment of delegates to represent this country in that conference, and it was the thought of Secretary Colby that until that question had been gone over and fully considered the permit should be withheld. That was also the view of President Wilson. Subsequently some dispute arose as to whether the application had been denied or merely held in abeyance. But the fact remains that it was not granted

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WEBSTER. Certainly.
Mr. DEMPSEY. Does the gentleman see anything in this message of President Grant's that has any possible bearing on the question at issue in this bill? Does not President Grant simply deal with two questions, first, the landing of foreign cables, and second, restraining those who propose to connect their cables with our local companies and the landing of such cables, unless the monopolistic features are restrained and controlled?

Mr. WEBSTER. It has a much broader significance. There the President of the United States was called upon to exercise a power of doubtful existence in order to protect the shores of this country against invasion by foreign cable companies. not wish to see this Nation longer exposed to that hazard.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Yes; but I understand that this bill is proposed at this time with reference to the building of a line from Barbados to this country by an American company. that be in any way affected by the two precedents advanced by President Grant? What relation has that to the question raised here?

Mr. WEBSTER. The point made by President Grant was that this country would not allow a connection to be made here by a foreign company if the country from which it came would not allow an American company to lay its cables on their shores. In this case the line of the American company connects at Barbados with the cable of a British company, which has a monopoly in Brazil, and that principle will be involved because other American companies can not go into Brazil and enjoy the same privileges which the British company has there.

Mr. DEMPSEY. The logic of the gentleman's statement is this, that the landing of an American cable in Barbados is equivalent to the landing of a foreign cable in the United States.

Mr. WEBSTER. No. The landing of a cable in Barbados and connecting it up with the British company holding a monopoly in South America is the gist of the proposition.

They connect with any company that they Mr. DEMPSEY. come in contact with in the course of the cable they lay?

Mr. WEBSTER. No. The British company agrees to extend its line to Barbados, and the Western Union to the same point, for the purpose of connecting up and establishing through communication with monopolistic Brazil,

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. WEBSTER. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. As a matter of fact, are not all the Western Union cable lines owned by the English people and only leased by the Western Union Co.?

Mr. WEBSTER. I am not prepared to answer that question. Mr. MADDEN. I think we disclosed that state of facts in the hearings of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads during the discussion of the control of telegraph and cable lines

Mr. WEBSTER, I am not advised as to that matter.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBSTER. Yes.

Will the British company allow the Mr. JONES of Texas. use of its lines by any other American company in Brazil?

Mr. WEBSTER. Under the terms of the British grant in South America no company can lay a cable to South America connecting any two ports now served by the British company. The only way the Western Union can get in there is through the contract entered into with the British company.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Has the British company insisted upon that exclusive right?

Mr. WEBSTER. It has insisted upon it.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBSTER. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. There can be no question of the right of Congress to impose the prohibition provided for in section 1; but, as the gentleman says, it is a mooted question whether Congress has the right to delegate the authority conferred by the subsequent sections. Would it not be well to guard against possible adverse decision on such mooted question by inserting a provision that any part of this bill declared unconstitutional shall not invalidate other parts of the bill?

Mr. WEBSTER. In my opinion such a provision in a law performs no office at all.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Washington has again expired.

Mr. OLIVER. The courts have held that such a provision does perform an important office, and Congress has wisely inserted such a proviso in many bills passed during recent years.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves the balance of his time. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Denison] in opposition.

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, it is with some embarrassment and reluctance that I oppose this bill. It is a great deal easier to go along with my committee, to be a good fellow, and let the action of the committee be unanimous. But I am opposed upon fundamental grounds to this bill, and therefore I can not conscientiously vote for it; and I did not want to simply vote against it without expressing in my feeble way some of the reasons which prompt me to do so. Therefore I am going to make a few general observations upon the bill, without any attempt whatever to defeat it, but in order to call the attention of the Members of the House to some of its provisions and to the general policy which the bill embodies.

The Constitution provides that all legislative power shall be vested in Congress; and at another place the Constitution provides that the Congress shall have power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and between the different States. words, the Constitution places the power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States exclusively in the Congress.

Now, this question of the landing of a cable on our shores or the connecting of this country with another country by means of a telegraph line or a cable line is simply a commercial question, a question of commerce. Congress has so said in legislation, and the courts have so held in judicial decisions, so that we have involved here nothing but a question of commerce, foreign commerce, and we are now considering legislation that will regulate it.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Are not strategic questions involved in time of war?

Mr. DENISON. Not at all, because in time of war the President can, under his war powers, take over all cable lines and all telegraph lines, and everything else that is necessary for the public safety. There is no question of the national security inpublic safety. There is no question of the national securively determined by the securive volved here. This is purely a question of commerce.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it the gentleman's position that if the court upholds the contention of the Government that this legislation is unnecessary?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. And if the court upholds the contention of the Western Union Telegraph Co. it is the gentleman's position that we have delegated to the President authority that we have no right to delegate; that it is a matter within the regulation of commerce with foreign nations.

Mr. DENISON. That is practically my position. I think I can state it definitely. First, let me say that I am not particularly concerned with this lawsuit now pending in the Supreme Court between the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the Government. Let me say, gentlemen of the House, that that is a controversy growing out of competition between two cable companies, the Western Union and the All-American. This bill was prepared in the office of the attorneys of the All-American Co., the competitor of the Western Union. It was offered in the Senate by request, and so stated by the Senator who introduced The only witnesses who appeared before our committee for the bill were Elihu Root, attorney for the All-American Co., and a solicitor for the State Department.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. WINSLOW. Will the gentleman amend that by saying Elihu Root, jr.?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; Elihu Root, jr.; that is correct. Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I want to ask for information: While Congress is given the power to control commerce, is not this largely an administrative function? Of course, when Congress is controlling the commerce it must necessarily have machinery for carrying out its power, and if it can confer on the Interstate Commerce Commission administrative functions, can it not confer upon the President administrative functions?

Mr. DENISON. Yes; but that is not what we are doing in this bill. This bill does not merely confer upon the President administrative functions. It confers upon him arbitrary and plenary power, without any limitations or rules of guidance prescribed by Congress. I do not want to make a misstatement. When I said that one of the witnesses for this bill was Elihu Root, that was correct; but, of course, it was Elihu Root, jr., a son of Elihu Root, sr., and, as I understand, a member of the same law firm, but of that I am not sure. I think, however, that was stated in the testimony.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I believe that Elihu Root, sr., is an advisory member of the law firm that is counsel for the

All-American Co.

Mr. DENISON. So this is a contest between two competing companies that want to get the cable business of South America. The State Department has become involved in the matter, and therefore the State Department has come before the committee and urged this legislation. The Government and the Western Union got into litigation because the Western Union started to land a cable at Miami, Fla., believing it had the legal right to do so. They asked for a permit, following a long-prevailing custom, and the permit was held up, not denied but held up, until finally they got the cable laid and ready to connect with the shore, when the Navy Department sent down gunboats and stopped them.

Then the Government went into court. The case was fried in the district court and the Government's contention was not sustained. It went to the court of appeals and the Government was not sustained, and now the matter is in the Supreme Court, and a decision will be handed down prob-ably in about two weeks. The Western Union has made this investment and is ready to connect up its cable, as it has been advised it has a right to do. If it loses its contention, it will take its medicine and accept its loss; and if it wins, it ought to have the right to land its cable. This legislation is intended to anticipate the decision of the Supreme Court, so that if the Western Union wins in court it will not be allowed to land anyway. With that controversy I am not concerned. I was willing to help pass an emergency bill to prevent the landing until Congress can enact some comprehensive legislation. I do not care anything about the controversy between the two companies. What I am addressing myself to is the fundamental principle and policy involved in the pending bill.

Mr. WEBSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. Mr. WEBSTER. The gentleman has stated that there is nothing involved in this measure except a controversy between two commercial cable companies.

Mr. DENISON. No; I did not say exactly that; I said this is a controversy between the two cable companies, and the State Department has become involved in it.

Mr. WEBSTER. Does the gentleman want a hiatus to exist growing out of the affirmation of a judgment by the Supreme Court to the effect that the President has no authority in the premises because of the authority invested in Congress and then have Congress fail to provide for that condition of things?

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman from Washington evidently did not hear my last statement. I think I said that personally I was willing to pass an emergency bill to prevent their landing in case the Supreme Court's decision was in their favor, but I am not in favor of this bill as emergency legislation. It does purport to be emergency legislation, but is, in fact, enacted as a general policy, and I am opposed to it on fundamental grounds.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Certainly. Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In regard to what the gentleman from Illinois said about the Department of State being drawn into the controversy, is it not a fact that the reason it was drawn into it was because the Western Union made application for this permit and, pending the Government action, the Western Union undertook surreptitiously to land the cable and the State Department undertook to defeat it?

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman from Tennessee is not exactly correct. The Western Union did make application for a permit in accordance with the usual custom. It was delayed, and in the meantime the Western Union had brought the cable over from England and landed it at Norfolk in order to let off enough to reach from the shore to the 3-mile line; they paid the duty on that, and then sent it down to Miami to make the connection. Perhaps they had an intimation from the State Department that the permit would not be issued. At any rate, they had bought the 1,600 miles of cable in good faith, I think, and had brought it over on a cable ship, and when you get a cable on a ship you have to do something with it; the only place you can put it is in the sea.

But I do not want to be understood as taking any part in the controversy between these cable companies as to whether they have the right to land or not. The controversy involves the alleged general power of the President to control the landing of all cables on our shores, as well as the alleged right to lay the cables under the so-called post roads act of Congress of 1866. These have long been disputed questions. They are now before the Supreme Court. They ought to be finally settled by judicial decision. If the Government's position is sustained, then, of course, the Western Union can not lawfully land its cable. If the Government's position is not sustained, then the Western Union has acted entirely within its legal rights. I am not particularly concerned with that question now.

I am discussing this bill now on fundamental grounds. am opposed to Congress disposing of any more of the duties and powers that are conferred upon it by the fundamental law of the land. I have been criticized back in Illinois because Congress has in recent years conferred upon the President so many of its powers. I defended our actions here for the last three years upon the ground that we were at war and that it was necessary to confer these extraordinary powers upon the President in a time of emergency. I went over my district during the last campaign and defended my action in voting to confer these extraordinary powers upon the President during the war, but at the same time I told the people of my district that since peace has been restored and there are no emergencies jeopardizing our national security, I would not again vote to confer upon the President or anybody else the constitutional powers that belong to Congress itself.

Mr. WEBSTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. DENISON. Yes.
Mr. WEBSTER. Does the gentleman contend for the principle that the Congress itself shall exercise this power in each case, and if any cable company attempts to land upon our shores, that before we could interfere with it somebody must come to Congress and get a special bill passed?

Mr. DENISON. My position is that before any cable company should be allowed to land upon our shores it should first have to come to Congress for permission to do so, and I am going to tell the gentleman where I have very splendid authority for the position that I take. I want to call the attention of the House to a great change in the tendency of our times. In 1896 a French cable company wanted to land upon the coast of Massa-chusetts, as I understand it. This old question arose as to whether or not they had to have a permit from the President before they could do so.

The administration held, Mr. Gresham being Secretary of State, that there was no authority in the President under our Constitution, in the absence of legislation by Congress, to say whether or not a cable company should or should not land. That was the holding of that administration. The question attracted public attention and came to Congress. A bill was introduced covering the subject, and I am going to read you the bill, because I want the Members of the House to know how the House of Representatives and the Senate looked upon this question at that time. Here is the bill which was brought into the House with a unanimous report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and, as I understand it, was brought into the Senate with a unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce of that body.

Mr. BANKHEAD, Did it pass?
Mr. DENISON. The bill passed the House, but it did not pass the Senate, as the matter was otherwise disposed of; but it shows the attitude of the Congress at that time. The bill reads as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the shore end of any new submarine telegraphic cable line or system that shall be established after the passage of this act, which line or system shall be protected in any foreign country by exclusive landing rights or by any other special privileges or franchises, shall not be permitted to land or operate on the territory of the United States until the consent of the Congress of the United States shall have been obtained therefor. But this prohibition shall not apply to the renewal or renewals of any submarine telegraphic cable or cables now in operation.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. Mr. WINSLOW. W Will the gentleman kindly state the date of that bill and what were the causes that impelled its passage?

Mr. DENISON. A French cable company wanted to land on the shores of Massachusetts, as I remember it. The question of obtaining a permit to do so came before the President, and the Secretary of State at that time held that there was no law under which the President had any authority to either give or deny the permit. So the matter came into Congress. That was in 1896.

It may be of interest to read briefly an extract from a Senate report on that bill.

The report said:

For these reasons it seems desirable, in view of the great increase of cable business, that the methods by which permission is to be hereafter obtained to land and operate any cable, whether American or foreign, should be established by Congress.

The circumstances and conditions surrounding, as well as the character of these projects for laying a submarine cable, must of necessity be peculiar to itself, and any general law enacted would undoubtedly fall far short of covering all such projects so as to place them on an equal commercial footing or of fully protecting the public from unjust discriminations.

Your committee are of opinion that each salt

Your committee are of opinion that each cable company, whether American or foreign, should be required to apply to Congress for permission to land and operate any cable that may be laid subsequent to the approval of this bill. That requirement will give ample opportunity to Congress to ascertain whether the project is inimical to invested American capital and the business that has been established thereby, and to so regulate the conditions under which permission shall be granted on each application as to insure the best service to the general public for this most essential means of communication between the United States and the outside world.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield? Mr. DENISON. Yes. Mr. HUGTED. Is it the gentleman's understanding that under this bill the President may grant a license practically.

to any company he chooses or refuse a license to practically any company he chooses?

Mr. DENISON. He can.

Is the gentleman's objection to the bill HUSTED. grounded upon the fact that it is an illegal delegation of authority or merely an unwise delegation of authority, or both?

Mr. DENISON. My objection to the bill is that in my judgment it is subject to both of the objections stated.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. As I understand the gentleman, he is in favor of temporary legislation that will protect the Government in case the Supreme Court decides favorably to the Western Union.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. But is opposed to this bill as permanent

Mr. KINCHELOE. Under that state of facts the only alternative that we have in voting is either to vote for this bill or to take the chances of the Government suffering if the Supreme Court decides for the telegraph company. In other words, the situation which the gentleman is advocating is not before us.

Mr. DENISON. I can not help that situation. Of course, I do not think the Government is going to suffer at all in any

Mr. KINCHELOE. If we fail to enact any legislation at all, and we have to enact this or none, and the Supreme Court decides favorably to the Western Union, why will not the Government suffer?

Mr. DENISON. I do not think the Government will suffer all. Private interests may suffer because of advantages gained by their competitors. But the Government has no interests that will suffer in the least.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then what is the need of any legislation?

Mr. DENISON. It must be left to the gentlemen who are advocating this bill to show the need for the legislation. The only need that I can see is that if the Government loses its contention, then the Western Union Co. can land its cable and begin sending commercial messages to and from Brazil in competition with another cable company. Congress can enact legis-lation at any time that will regulate it after it has landed, so that there is no emergency, in my judgment, or any very serious need for this legislation now.

Mr. KINCHELOE. What emergency did the gentleman have reference to when he said that he would be willing to vote for emergency legislation?

Mr. DENISON. It is the one I have just mentioned; some may call it an emergency to let this American company land its cable without a permit from the State Department; that is all the emergency there is, so far as I can see.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. DENISON. I will. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Is it not a fact that the policy embodied in this bill is exactly in accord with the policy of the act that the Congress passed, almost without opposition, lodging with the Secretary of Commerce the authority to license radio companies and prohibiting anybody from engaging in the . radio business without having such a license?

Mr. DENISON. I am not familiar with that act.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. There is such a law that the Congress passed.

Mr. DENISON. I do not know what the regulations are as provided for in that act.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. The gentleman has stated that he believed in meeting this emergency with a specific offer of legislation-

Mr. DENISON. What specific offer of legislation?

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Something along the line of the bill which passed the House some years ago, and which the gentleman has read.

Mr. DENISON.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. But does the gentleman think that particular bill, if it passed the House, will meet this emergency?

Mr. DENISON.

Mr. DENISON. I certainly do. Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Until it could be passed by both Houses and be approved by the President and become a law, with a Supreme Court decision that would be favorable to the company it would be only a matter of hours before the cable was landed; and here is an entirely different bill and an entirely different policy, and does not the gentleman think that it would be a matter of a good many weeks and possibly months before the differences between the House and Senate might be recon-

Mr. DENISON. No; I do not think so. I think if there is really an emergency, as some seem to think there is, the emergency would appeal to the Senate just as much as to the House, and they could pass that kind of a bill just as quickly as this. This bill will have to go back to the Senate and differences will have to be adjusted.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Is not this designed more quickly to meet the emergency?

Mr. DENISON. I understand it is so designed, but it does not meet the situation any more quickly than would such a bill as the one which passed the House in 1896.

I have read what the Senate thought on that proposition in 1896, and I now read from the House report which accompanied the bill that passed the House:

the bill that passed the House:

It is therefore desirable that the method by which permission is to be obtained to land and operate any future cables, either American or foreign, should be established or well defined. The circumstances surrounding and the character of each project for laying a submarine cable are likely to be peculiar to itself, and any general conditions which might be established would fall far short of covering all of such projects so as to place them all on an equal commercial footing.

The object of this bill, therefore, is to require each company, whether American or foreign, to apply to Congress for permission to land or to operate any cable that may be laid subsequent to its approval. That procedure will give ample opportunity to the Government and to the Congress to ascertain whether the project is inimical to invested American capital, and the business that has been established thereby, and to so regulate the conditions under which permission shall be granted on each application as to insure the best service to the general public for this most essential means of communication between the United States and the outside world.

Mr. CHALMERS. If the gentleman will permit I just want

Mr. CHALMERS. If the gentleman will permit, I just want to state that the gentleman from Kentucky stated my position I would be willing to vote in favor of that bill of 1896, but unless there is some such adequate measure offered now I shall have to vote for this bill.

Mr. DENISON. Well-

Mr. BANKHEAD. If the gentleman will permit, is this the only instance in which the cable company has landed where a license was not obtained from the Executive?

Mr. DENISON. No; there are a good many cables now operating in the United States without any license at all.

Mr. BANKHEAD. This bill provides that any such cable now laid within the United States without a license granted by the President may continue to operate without such license for a period of 90 days from the date this act takes effect. The passage of this bill will effect the rights of other companies whose cables are already laid in this country?

DENISON. If we pass this bill as reported here the President will have the power to refuse to grant a permit to any company now operating in this country, and if such company continues to operate its cable without a permit after 90 days from the passage of this act its officers will be liable to a fine of $5,000 and to imprisonment for not more than a year.

Mr. JONES of Texas. What is the purpose of that? Mr. DENISON. The gentleman will have to ask those in favor of the legislation to explain that; I will not have the time. That is one reason for my opposition to the bill.

Now, I have presented in these two reports on the bill of 1896 the view that the House and Senate took of their duty in connection with this question at that time, namely, in 1896. that day the statesmen thought that Congress ought to itself function and ought to itself exercise its constitutional power of regulating foreign commerce and passing on requests for landing cables on our shores whenever such requests were made.

Now, every time a railroad company wants to build a bridge across a navigable river they have to come to the Congress for a permit to do that; but this bill transfers from the Congress to the Executive this constitutional power that the fathers placed exclusively in our hands. It just simply shows, gentlemen of the House, the tendency of our times. As far back as 1896 the statesmen of the country thought that Congress itself ought to exercise the constitutional powers given to it; but in these days the tendency is for Congress to pass the buck and get rid of the duties and the responsibilities which were conferred upon it by the Constitution; in these days the tendency of Congress seems to be to transfer to some one else all its constitutional functions except those of raising revenue and making appropriations. So we are creating commissions and bureaus until the cost of conducting our Government has become almost unbearable, and it is due largely to the fact that the legislative body is constantly by legislation of this kind transferring its own constitutional functions to the Executive, who has to perform them through bureaus and commissions,

In my humble opinion, the quicker Congress comes to a full realization of its own constitutional powers and responsibilities and limitations, and the sooner Congress stops delegating those powers and duties to the President and to commissions and boards and bureaus, the better it will be for the welfare of the Republic.

Mr. OLIVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLIVER. Will the second Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. OLIVER. The gentleman is in favor of legislation prohibiting the landing or operating of cables without application being first made to Congress and favorable action thereon?

Mr. DENISON. I am. Mr. OLIVER. Now, this bill could be so amended as to meet the objections the gentleman points out of enacting the prohibitive section, which is section 1, and giving to the President authority, pending final action by Congress on applications, to grant permits.

Mr. DENISON. It could be so amended.

That would meet all the objections the gentle-Mr. OLIVER.

man has advanced.

Mr. DENISON. As I stated a moment ago, in view of the fact some think there is an emergency here, I would be in favor of passing a law that would continue in effect 60 or 90 days and stop the landing of the Western Union cable until appropriate legislation could be enacted; but I could not have my way about it, and I am simply addressing my remarks to the bill as the committee reported it.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield for a hypothetical question?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. It will be a very brief one. It is conceivable that we might be in trouble with a nation, let us say Korea or China, and that that nation might be unfriendly to us. Owning a cable to Vancouver or Victoria, at a time when Congress was not in session; if it should undertake to lay a line between, let us say, Victoria and Seaftle, could not that line be put in before Congress could be called together?

Mr. DENISON. The law being that they could not put it in without the consent of Congress, all the President would have to do would be to send the Navy there and stop it, because they would be doing an unlawful act.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana. But, if the Supreme Court in the pending case should hold they could not do it-

Mr. DENISON. But I am advocating legislation requiring the consent of Congress to lay the cable, and if that was the law then no company could lay a cable on our shores without an act of Congress permitting them to do so. That is what we ought to do. In other words, I say that that is a legislative function under the Constitution. The power to regulate commerce with foreign nations is conferred on Congress, and Congress ought not to transfer it to the Executive or to anybody else, but ought to pass a law specifying plainly that no cable shall be laid connecting our country with a foreign country without the consent of Congress.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Has the gentleman prepared an amendment, or a motion to recommit, that will meet his views on this

Mr. DENISON, I have not. I presented my views to the committee and the committee did not accept them, and I am now simply stating the reasons why I can not vote for this bill.

Mr. WEBSTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. WEBSTER. I understood the gentleman to say that he is opposed to the principle that the congressional power should not be delegated to the Executive or anybody else. On what basis does the gentleman justify the conferring of power on the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate our domestic commerce?

Mr. DENISON. Congress has completely regulated the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission by legislation, We enacted comprehensive legislation regulating interstate commerce and created the Interstate Commerce Commission to administer that legislation. Would anybody in Congress have voted to give the Interstate Commerce Commission absolute power to control commerce between the States without any regulation or limitation whatever by legislation? Certainly we would not have done that. And therefore I am not in favor of giving the President this unlimited power.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. DENISON. I yield.

Mr. HUSTED. I am quite in sympathy with the gentleman's position that this bill in its present form is an illegal delegation of congressional authority. I can not reconcile the gentleman's position, however. The gentleman says he is opposed to permanent legislation of this character, but is in favor of emergency legislation. If opposed to permanent legislation, how could be favor emergency legislation to this same effect?

Mr. DENISON. I did not say I was opposed to permanent legislation on this subject, but I am opposed to this bill as permanent legislation.

Mr. HUSTED. I am presupposing a bill drawn along this

Mr. DENISON. I am opposed to it as permanent legislation because I am opposed to the policy.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will yield.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Is not the gentleman leaving the House in a position that does not exactly seem equitable when he presents a view, which is very forcibly presented and very persuasive, and yet declines to offer an amendment to the bill conforming to his view?

Mr. DENISON. Well, I think there is something in what the gentleman states, yet I do not know just what I ought to do. As a member of the committee, I can not disclose discussions that took place in the committee. I am not trying to defeat this bill. I simply wanted to explain my vote against it and present my views, and am taxing the patience of the House in so doing no doubt.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. You are not taxing my patience, but I believe it is a little unfair to the House to convince us that your position is right, and then give us no alternative between passing this bill and permitting a company, through the decision of the Supreme Court, to perfect something Congress would not want done; in other words, to unite a British monopoly to our shores with an American company. That is the substance of it, as I understand it.

Mr. DENISON. It is allowing a British company to connect with our shores through an American company. But while it does that you have got to look at it from both ends. allows an American cable company to break through a British monopoly in Brazil and go into every part of Brazil and connect American commercial interests with the business interests of that great country. If the Western Union is allowed to carry out its project, it breaks the British monopoly in Brazil, although its competitor, the all-American company, may suffer a loss of part of its South American business as a result.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If a bill is passed in conformity with your views, that would be an equal restraint on that company in this bill?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. I think there ought to be legislation on this subject, and I think Congress ought to itself function and retain control over it; and when any cable companies desire to come to this country they ought not to be permitted to land until Congress has by special act said whether they shall or shall not have the right to do so.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessec. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I would like to see if I understand the gentleman's position. He would favor legislation in each particular instance wherein it was desired by a cable company to land upon our shores, just as now required, as the gentleman pointed out with a great deal of force, in the case of building a bridge across a navigable stream, where we pass a bill every time such a request is made?

Mr. DENISON. Exactly. That is my view. Now, I am going to state briefly some other objections to this bill. I am opposed to it for this reason: You will notice in section 1 it provides that "no person shall land or operate in the United States any submarine cable," and so forth, so that it applies to cables that are and have been here perhaps for 20 or 30 years and that they can not continue operating without a permit from the President.

It provides that any such cable now laid within the United States without a license granted by the President may continue to operate without such license for a period of 90 days from the date when this act takes effect. In other words, there are comparatively few cables that are now operating by presidential permit. There are others that are operating by special acts of Congress. There are a number of cables that are operating by special acts of Congress. There are others that have been laid under the so-called post roads act passed by Congress in 1866. So that most of the cables that are now operating in this country have no presidential permit. Yet every one of them, if we pass this law, will have to apply to the President for a permit to operate, and if they do not get it within 90 days, then after that time they can not send a message or do a thing without committing a crime for which they may be sent to the penitentiary for a year or fined not to exceed $5,000.

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there on that point? Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HOCH. If we are to have a license system at all, does not the gentleman think that all cable companies should be compelled to submit to the same conditions? Would not that be done under the bill you suggest by congressional grant? If certain companies have come in without conditions attached, does not the gentleman think they should be compelled to comply with conditions?

Mr. DENISON. No. I think where a cable company has already landed and is operating by special act of Congress it should be allowed to go ahead and transact its business, and not be subjected to the danger of having its permit canceled, unless it be for some unlawful act that it does or something that it fails to do. In other words, let them go ahead and operate, unless they do something that will justify the cancellation of their permit.

Now, then, my next objection is-

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right at that point?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The remarks of the gentleman just made seem to be very cogent. The gentleman has studied this question more than the rest of us. We are novices. the gentleman think that fairness to the House would require him to prepare an amendment such as he thinks ought to be prepared to meet this emergency?

Mr. DENISON. Well, the gentleman asks a question that I can not very well answer.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I would not want to prepare an amendment to carry into effect the views of the gentleman, which the gentleman has just stated after much study, and yet the gentleman's views coincide with mine.

Mr. DENISON. I would be glad to have the gentleman offer an amendment, although I do not care to offer one myself.

Now, I call the attention of the House to the second section of the bill. Here is where the President is given such extraordinary power. It provides as follows:

That the President may withhold or revoke such license when he shall be satisfied, after due notice and hearing, that such action will assist in securing rights for the landing or operation of foreign cables in foreign countries or in maintaining the rights or interests of the United States or of its citizens in foreign countries—

Now, he is not only given power by this language to withhold a license where one is applied for, but he is also given power to revoke the license of any company that is licensed to operate in this country when he is satisfied of certain things. Here is what they are: First. That such action will assist in securing rights for the landing or operation of cables in foreign countries.

Now, that is not limited to this particular company, so that if we pass this bill in this form, here is what the President can do: He can say to the Western Union Co., "I desire to revoke your permit to do business because you connect up in some way with some foreign country"-perhaps Japan or some European country-" and that country will not treat our other American companies right, and therefore we will not let you do business in this country."

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.
Mr. HUSTED. Some gentleman said that if the powers delegated to the Interstate Commerce Commission were legal, then the powers delegated in this bill are legal. Now, in order to draw fair comparison would it not be about this: If you conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to say that the New York Central could not run, that the Pennsylvania could not run, that the Southern Railway could run under certain conditions, that the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western should not run except under certain conditions, then you would be delegating a power similar to the powers that are delegated here, and therefore I contend that nobody would say that such powers could be legally delegated.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; the gentleman is exactly correct. was going to come to that. The Interstate Commerce Commission could stop the operation of any interstate railroad if the commission thought that some State through which that railroad ran was enacting a law that was not just to other railroads. But would anybody vote for such a law as that? Yet in this bill you are conferring upon the President the power to cancel the right of any cable company to operate whenever, in the first place, he shall be satisfied that such action will assist in securing rights for the landing and operation of cables in foreign countries.

Now, the next instance is this: The President can revoke the license of a company whenever he shall be satisfied, second, "that such action will assist in maintaining the rights or interests of the United States or of its citizens in foreign countries." Whenever the President thinks that by canceling the permit of a cable company to operate he can assist in securing the rights or interests of American citizens in some foreign country, he can cancel their rights to do business in this country

In other words, suppose we had an American cable connecting this country with Japan. It might be that it has had this permit for years, and is doing a successful business; and yet the President may conclude that we may have some people who are interested in a mine in Japan whose interests are not being properly protected there, and therefore he will simply try to protect those interests by canceling the permit of this cable company to do business. That will not do.

That is absolutely in my judgment illegal, and if it is not illegal it is in my judgment immoral. It is not right to confer such a power on the President, authorizing him to destroy a business that may be perfectly straight and honest, a concern that may have had the right to do business for years, in order to promote the interests of other citizens who have no connection at all with cables in some other country. What do you think of

Mr. DEMPSEY. And where the company has committed no offense.

Mr. DENISON. Yes; the right to cancel a permit is entirely outside of anything the company may have done or not done. It gives to the President an arbitrary power, which he can use whenever in his judgment he thinks he can accomplish some ulterior purpose

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If a ship company having docks in this country were operating a line of carriers across the Atlantic, would the gentleman say that it ought to be within the power of anybody to cancel the permit of that company even if it had vested rights, when it was necessary for the welfare of the country

Mr. DENISON. Well, the gentleman says "the welfare of the country." Who would say when it was necessary for the welfare of the country?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. That is all this bill is.

Mr. DENISON. Who would say when it is for the welfare of the country? That is but one of the minor provisions of this bill.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The President. Mr. DEMPSEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes. Mr. DEMPSEY. Has the gentleman ever heard of vested property interests being destroyed by summary action of the Executive without any hearing, without any trial, without any legal process, absolutely at his say so, because he believes that they should be destroyed?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not want to take the time of the gentleman from Illinois, but I want to say that if Congress could do it they would do it that same way.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, no.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does the gentleman believe that by the prohibition act, or by the constitutional amendment, we had the right to destroy vested property in breweries and distilleries all over the United States?

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I shall not have time in the hour allotted me to discuss that question. [Laughter.] If my colleague from Illinois does not recognize the difference between legislation or a constitutional amendment affecting intoxicating liquors and legislation conferring upon the President the power to arbitrarily destroy the property of cable companies, operating under special act of Congress or under general legislation of Congress, I can not in the short time I have explain the difference so he would understand it.

I am opposed to the bill for the further reason that in my humble judgment it authorizes the President, in effect, to destroy property belonging to private individuals without due process and with no provision for compensation. I know there is room for difference of opinion among lawyers in regard to I have read the decisions and I can not get it out of my mind that we are authorizing the taking of private property without due process and without any provision for compensa-tion. To that extent it is very doubtful whether this legislation will be held to be legal or in accordance with the protection and guaranties of the Constitution.

But, aside from that question, even if we can do it constitutionally, I do not think Congress itself ought to authorize anyone to destroy property rights without due process and without making compensation, as can be done under the provisions of this bill. In other words, the right of a cable company to do business when its operation has been perfectly lawful, amounts to property of great value. Hundreds of millions of dollars have been invested in this business, and I do not think Congress ought to confer upon the President the power to act arbitrarily and injure or destroy those rights when the companies may not have done anything or failed to do anything. I do not think the President or anyone else ought to have that right in order to accomplish some other purpose, such as protecting the rights of somebody else in some other country.
Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES of Texas.

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Could not this matter be covered by general legislation which would apply to all cable companies. and require them to comply with the conditions before they entered any ports?

Mr. DENISON. That was done once. That is one of the contentions of the Western Union Co. In the post roads act of July 24, 1866, there was this provision:

Any telegraph company now organized, or which may hereafter be organized, under the laws of any State, shall have the right to construct, maintain, and operate lines of telegraph through and over any portion of the public domain of the United States, over and along any of the military or post roads of the United States which have been or may hereafter be declared such by law, and over, under, or across the navigable streams or waters of the United States; but such lines of telegraph shall be so constructed and maintained as not to obstruct the navigation of such streams and waters, or interfere with the ordinary travel on such military or post roads. travel on such military or post roads.

Now, the Supreme Court in construing that held that the word "waters" includes the 3-mile limit in the ocean, and therefore the Western Union has contended that under that general act they had the right to lay their cables through the waters out to the 3-mile limit.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DENISON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, that law applied only to business transacted in the United States. The bill before the House is for business transacted throughout the world.

Mr. DENISON. This post roads act simply gives general authority to lay telegraph lines over and under the waters of the United States

Mr. MADDEN. The bill that the gentleman has read the provision from has nothing to do with cable messages, but to the telegraph system within continental America.

Mr. DENISON. The Supreme Court has held that it applies to cables as well as to telegraph lines. That is one of the questions now before the Supreme Court. Of course, I do not know how the court is going to construe it, but, at any rate, a number of cables have been landed under authority of that law and are now being operated under that authority, and the question whether they can continue is before the Supreme Court now. It may be that the court will hold that it does not apply to this

Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Walsh). The gentleman has six minutes remaining.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the general policy of this bill. I believe Congress ought to itself retain and exercise the powers it will confer upon the President by this bill. I think other provisions of the bill, to which I have not had time to allude, are unfair and unwise. I would support a bill that would prohibit any cable from being landed on our shores and connecting with any foreign country without the express consent of Congress and upon such terms as Congress might desire to impose.

Mr. Speaker, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dempsex].

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill confers a naked and arbitrary authority on the President to prevent the landing of cables and to revoke the rights of all companies which are at present doing bus ness in the United States. We have had a similar bill before this Congress recently, a bill which dealt with similar rights, providing for those rights, and that is the general water power bill. It is well that we should examine that bill and see what Congress did in dealing with a subject of this kind. The rights are precisely similar; in one case it deals with inland waters and in the other with the waters of the ocean. It is simply dealing with the rights of waters which are navigable, and that is all there is to it.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DEMPSEY.

Mr. HUSTED. The Constitution makes absolutely no distinction in the matter of regulating commerce between the States or fore gn nations; it all comes in under the same provigion of the Constitution, and the same power applies equally to find that instead of dealing in this offhand way with the matter, instead of the drastic and arbitrary provisions of this bill, all necessary and appropriate provisions were inserted. us see what those provisions were, what the situation here is, and what we are threatened with.

Mr. DEMPSEY. That is a very helpful suggestion. If the

The charge is freely made that this is a contest between two companies, and that this bill is to leave the decision to be made privately, behind closed doors, without hearings, without publicity, without all of the things that safeguard the Executive and save and prevent scandal. Let us see what was done in the general water power bill, dealing with a subject of this kind. First, a written application must be made to the three Secretaries who have control. Immediately upon the filing of that application a public notice is required to be given through the press, and then the applicant has to do certain things. He must begin the construction of his work within a stated time, while the President under this bill could grant a license without limit as to time, a license for all time, and there would be no compulsion upon the part of the applicant to even begin his work. One company, therefore, that wanted to prevent competition, could very readily obtain a license and then never do anything about it. Next, in addition to beginning the work, under the general water power bill the applicant is compelled to complete the project within a certain time. Besides, in order to insure a permit, the applicant must submit himself to regulation either by the public service commission of the State in which he operates or by the Interstate Commerce Commission as to rates, so that the rates shall be just and equal and shall be controlled by a commission which has supervision of matters of that kind and is familiar with them and can deal with them intelligently and adequately. No such provision is made here. It is all left to the arbitrary, unguided action of the Chief Executive, who has no time to devote to any such purposes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CHINDSEY. Yes.
Mr. CHINDBLOM. What Cabinet officer would this come under, in all probability?

Mr. DEMPSEY. I would say that the commission should be formed as in the case of the general water power

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; I mean now as the bill stands.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Probably the Secretary of State.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Of course, the President would have to refer it to somebody.

Mr. DEMPSEY. There is no provision in the bill for referring it to anybody. We can simply guess at what might be done, without direction that anything shall be done, and one man's guess is just as good as another man's guess, and it has no basis whatever in this legislation. Go through the water power bill and you find page after page protecting those who apply for the license, protecting the Government, protecting the consumers, protecting those who use the water power, protecting them in the minutest details, making it all subject to publicity, making it all subject to established rules and regulations, and providing for every contingency in so fair a way that men who are to invest their millions of money are able, with abundant and adequate information, to know just what they are going to do, how they can do it, and how long they are going to be permitted to do it. All of those things, each and every one, are lacking in this bill. It is easy enough to point out, you say, what should be done, but you do not propose a remedy. I propose a remedy, and that is to send this bill back to the committee and permit them, in the light of the general water power bill. which furnishes an exact course to be followed, to produce such a bill as will meet the situation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hawes].

Mr. HAWES. Mr. Speaker, I am impressed with the idea that the two last speakers had their minds concentrated on a domestic situation. This question is essentially one for the State Department, as our foreign relations exceed in importance other considerations.

The Western Union Telegraph Co. contracted with the Western Telegraph Co., a British concern which has a monopoly of interport communications in Brazil, to connect the United States by cable with Brazil by way of Barbados; the English end to be from Brazil to the Barbados, and the American end from Miami Beach, Fla., to the Barbados.

The Secretary of State, pending negotiations then in progress, refused to issue a license to the Western Union to land on the Miami Beach.

This company attempted to land without such license and was gentlemen will turn to the general water power bill, they will prevented from doing so by an American warship.

tempted landing was a violation of American tradition and the established policy of the Presidents of the United States from Grant to Harding. So that back of the destroyer that watches the 3 mile limit off the coast of Florida, there are 50 years of American precedent proclaiming the power of the President to license or withhold license for cable landing.

This power is exercised and watched with zealous care by all the great nations of the world, and is by them exercised for the benefit of the great foreign nations not only in matters of government but in matters of news communication and trade.

For illustration: England has a restricted policy regarding the landing of cables on her shores. She demands the control over international rates and, where formerly her permits were for 31 years, they are now limited to five years.

France and Japan have similar restrictions and regulations. There is but one broad question involved in this bill, Shall a private citizen or a corporation dictate or obstruct the foreign policy of this Government, or shall it be directed by the President, through our Secretary of State or some other agency selected by him?

The last Secretary of State, following the almost unbroken precedents of his predecessors, exercised this power and brought on this controversy, and the present Secretary of State demands that the power shall be retained and so clearly expressed by Congress that it will never be disputed.

Congress has the right to exercise this power, but it must be delegated for execution to the Executive or some commission created by act of Congress.

I am therefore disappointed that the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Denison], in his objections to this bill, did not point out the proper depository for the power that we know should be exercised.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWES. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Why could not a commission composed of, say, three Secretaries exercise this power under practically the terms adopted by the Congress in both branches in the general water power bill, and why is not that absolutely in point, and why would it not answer the purpose which the gentleman is raising in every way?

The gentleman asks a question that the West-Mr. HAWES.

ern Union asked of our committee.

Mr. DEMPSEY. But I did not get my question from the Western Union.

Mr. HAWES. This is a power that Congress may exercise, but if Congress delegates this power it must be to that branch of the Government which is in direct diplomatic conversation with the foreign nations of the world.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Oh, yes; the Secretary of State I suggested. HAWES. If the gentleman suggests that the power should be vested, as the Western Union suggested, in the Postmaster General, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of Commerce, there would seem to be no objection, but it would be a power delegated by this Congress to some other agency to exercise, and the wisdom of our committee was that the power could be exercised by the President, and he could, if he wished, call to his assistance the Secretary of State, the Postmaster General, and the Secretary of Commerce.

As the Executive now conducts our intercourse with foreign nations and-subject to congressional check-directs our foreign policy, there can be but little dispute as to where the power should be lodged.

Where a Government function can be performed by the State upon the fundamental question of local self-government, I shall vote to retain the exercise of that power in the State.

Where a Government function can be controlled by Congress, I shall vote to retain that power in the hands of Congress.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. HAWES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HUSTED. Does the gentleman happen to know whether this bill in its present form has been approved by the present Secretary of State?

Mr. HAWES. I do.

Mr. HUSTED. It has been?

Mr. HAWES. It has been approved. I consider this an administration measure, and as a Democrat it gives me great pleasure vigorously to support it, because I may disagree on other matters. [Applause.]

Where a question arises as to extending the power of the Executive, I should lean toward its retention by Congress, But where the exercise of the power is one that clearly does not belong to the State and must be delegated by Congress, its proper depository is in the Executive: And where the executive power which it seemed to possess by tradition and precedent is questioned by a private corporation, it then clearly becomes the duty of Congress to without delay settle all uncertainty and place the power with the President in a manner which can not be disputed.

In the present controversy the dignity of the State Department must be preserved, and in its transactions with foreign nations it can not successfully conduct the affairs of our people when its authority is questioned, its warning ignored, or its ruling set aside by an American citizen or an American cor-

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAWES. I hope those who have charge of time will let me finish my speech. However, I yield,

Mr. DENISON, I was simply going to suggest to the gentleman from Missouri, if this properly belongs to the Department of State, then Congress can not deprive it of it; they still have it, because if it properly belongs to it the Congress can not by its action take it away from it.

Mr. HAWES. The gentleman is familiar with the history of this case, which is that for 50 years the Executive has asserted that he possessed this power, and it has not been disputed by any foreign nation or by another branch of the Government, and is now for the first time disputed by a private corporation.

If there is haste upon the part of private enterprise, may we not presume that that haste is no greater or of more competing need than that of a great National Government?

If we are in doubt upon the subject, is it not wise to decide that doubt in favor of the Government?

When this law passes, all American citizens and foreign nations can have a hearing before a proper officer, who, while considering the contentions of private enterprise, can also give thought to the benefits which will accrue to all the American

If he exercises this power arbitrarily, wrongly, or unfairly, Congress can in future legislation correct the wrong and provide

If this undisputed authority gives to the President the power of trade by an appeal to international comity, he will be in a legal position to do so.

If he desires to secure cable communications upon which no foreign power can "listen in," so that we can safely discuss affairs of state with officers abroad, he can do so. If he wants to break a British monopoly in a friendly nation in the interests of American enterprise, he will have some power with which to

With this power the Executive can trade and also, upon occasion, retaliate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HAWES. I have been interrupted so frequently that I have hardly started my speech.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I hope to get recognition in my own right later, and if the gentleman from Massachusetis desires me to yield to the gentleman, I will yield five minutes

Mr. WINSLOW. If agreeable, I will yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is recognized for five additional minutes.

Mr. HAWES. During the early part of the war the immense German cable service was cut by our English, French, and Japanese allies, and this cable service has not yet been restored to Germany and probably will not be restored at the present time. England has taken over a portion of it, France another portion, and Japan still another portion.

It would seem that the United States had at least an equity.

in the old German service, and this power given to the Executive carries with it an implication that it may be used to secure our share of the former German cable service.

Germany had two cables from Long Island via the Azores to Emden, Germany. These were cut in the English Channel and one landed in France and the other in England. Later the French Government operated one of these cables, and their final disposition has not been settled.

The German Dutch cable seized by the Japanese is now held by them through their control of the island of Yap. In diplomatic language, the least that can be said of these vast cable communications is that their ownership is still in controversy.

To what use the old German cables will be put is a subject all by itself and requires mention, not discussion, at this time.

This power to withhold, issue, or revoke cable licenses carries with it the unmistakable right to secure for us an equity in the German cables in both the Atlantic and the Pacific. But, in addition, it gives to the Executive an undisputed right to negotiate and trade for equal rights and privileges for our own citizens in foreign countries by controlling the American end of all cables reaching our country.

The controversy, therefore, between the Western Union and the All-American Co., by directing our attention to this matter, will ultimately force a consideration of matters relating to cable control and regulation.

Transportation by rail, highway, water, and wire are all matters that have a public aspect and can therefore not be left for decision exclusively to the private person or cor-

To the south we find many republics formed upon the plan of our own. Their call of friendship and trade reaches us with compelling voice. Our trade competitors have the support of their Governments in the strong rivalry which exists, of cordial intercourse and exchange of products.

Our citizens must be placed upon a parity and given equal opportunity with the citizens of any other nation, and must have back of them an energetic, cooperating Government influence to hold their own with the citizens of competing nations.

The right of visé, by which the sender of a message can regulate the route of delivery, should not be impaired.

Our shippers of freight in this country now have that right and it should be given in undisputed form to the sender of a message.

We must demand from foreign cable service at least the same consideration that they receive in the United States.

While the cable may be said to have originated in the United States, England now has almost a monopoly of the world's business; and, in addition, because of the skill of her workmen, has a monopoly of the manufacture of cables.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has again ex-

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to extend his remarks in the

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none,

Mr. HAWES. The United States should have a direct cable with every important center in the world. Both in times of peace and war our Government should have the means of rapid communication with its agents throughout the world, uninterrupted by the agents of any foreign power, and it can only have such service if the power of control of American cables is in the hands of the Executive.

Private and Government ciphers offer some protection in the matter of maintaining secrecy of confidential communications, but given a large number of messages, coming from the same source, the expert, by repeated comparisons, frequently secures the key, and the Government over whose lines the message passes reads the code.

Mail is too slow, so there is always the danger of State information reaching a trade rival or foreign Government agency.

Trade rests primarily upon having something to sell and an opportunity for sale, and sale to-day is controlled by each day's market price. The buyer must know this price daily. He must have an opportunity to make offer quickly, to make an inquiry that brings a prompt answer, and this can be done only by the radio or the cable.

Shipping is dependent largely upon cable service, and American ships should not be dependent upon English cables, and American captains should not be compelled to send their messages back home over an English line.

If we enter into competition for the world's trade we can not do it successfully without American-owned communications.

Practically all of our news service to the world passes over the wires of foreign countries, and this is particularly true of the Latin-American Republics, where, with the exception of the service partly rendered by the All-American Co., all of our news items go first to England and from there, over the English cables, to the Republics of the south.

Without additional cable service we can not compete with the English and French in giving the American viewpoint to the A common understanding and a daily news service brings that contact between nations which is necessary for successful trade, and we do not at present have that service with the Republics of South America.

American commerce has only developed as American news service has developed. There is a demand for increased service of this kind, but it is dependent upon the cable and the cable rate.

In the Pacific we are nearly helpless because the German service to China and Japan is discontinued, of which the English Reuter service has a practical monopoly since the German service was discontinued.

If this law is the first step which directs American attention and enables the American Government to build up American enterprise and places the power of the Nation back of American endeavor to compete with foreign monopoly in friendly nations. the effort is well worth the experiment.

Our newspaper copy and daily description of American life should reach Latin-American countries with the same facility and at equal price with the European news. The only reason why the world's news service is now largely in the hands of English and French syndicates is because those countries control the cables.

Cable communication for news should be supplemented by the wireless, and it should be the policy of our Government to permit, under proper restrictions and regulations, the uses of our radio service for this purpose whenever it is practicable.

News goes with the cable; trade goes with the news; and national honor goes with efficient Government service exercising a power that can not be disputed.

We ask that ship for ship and gun for gun the American Navy shall not be excelled by any other nation. Should we not add that in world communication we should not be excelled by any other nation? [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WINSLOW. I will. Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Has there been any arrangement made about time?

Mr. WINSLOW. I understood that at the end of the hour

Mr. WINSLOW. I understood that at the choved, under my control the previous question will be moved.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, if that is the plan I do not intend to object, but I was wondering whether there would be objection to extending the time a little while?

Mr. WINSLOW. The arrangement was made that way and it might disturb gentlemen if it is not carried out.

Mr. RAYBURN. I want to say the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] a moment ago stated that he expected to take the floor for an hour in his own right. He will not have an hour in his own right, or any time, except as the gentleman from Massachusetts yields him, unless by unanimous consent the time is extended. The gentleman from Illinois controls what remains of the one hour and the gentleman from Massachusetts The gentleman from Illinois controls what what remains of the other.

Mr. WINSLOW. The arrangement originally was that the time was to be controlled by Mr. Barkley and myself, but later on that was abandoned, and later yet Mr. Denison decided that he would like to exercise the option of an hour by virtue of his opposition to the bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. I did not wish that there should be any misunderstanding on the part of the gentleman from Kentucky as to whether he is to get any time, because he is not, unless by unanimous consent-

Mr. WINSLOW. By arrangement in the distribution of time Mr. Barkley was to have 15 minutes, and later he yielded 5 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri, so he now has 10 minutes, which I hope he will use. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Hoch].

Mr. HOCH. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, it is, of course, impossible to say much on a question of this magnitude in five minutes. The only serious attack that has been made upon this legislation is this: That while this power should be exercised somewhere, it should be lodged in the Congress rather than in the President. That is the only contention. I think that the gentlemen who urge that view fail entirely to emphasize the essentially international character of cable landings. The landing of a cable connecting this country with foreign shores is so essentially, so fundamentally, a matter involved in international negotiations that it would absolutely defeat the whole purpose of the legislation if we were to force them to come to Congress in each particular instance to secure the landing of a cable. Gentlemen, I shall not say anything just anti-British. No one finds any fault with Great Britain for looking after her interests, and you will find if you will look in the most cursory way into these matters that the British foreign office is always behind British business enterprise in any quarter of the world that you may go, and if we, in the furtherance of American business enterprise, are to be compelled to go to the slow and cumbersome processes of Congress, which many times may not be in session, we will absolutely lose out in the race for the world's business. Take this particular instance here in which this situation arises. Here is a British company that has a British monopoly in Brazil seeking entrance into the United States through the medium of a cable line from Miami to the Barbados Islands, halfway down to Brazil. Our Gov-ernment through its Executive has been in the course of nego-tiations to overcome the British monopoly in Brazil. Now, are we to put all this up to Congress and take away from the President the power to say that before they land and do business here they must give up the monopoly in Brazil? If so, as a practical matter you will have left no power with which to carry out the purpose in such international matters. Is it of no consequence to American business whether American messages are delivered over an American line or a British line? Reference was made to the All-American Co. I hold no brief for the All-American Co., but briefly here is the situation: Here is the All-American Cable Co., a company of American business men, absolutely controlled by American capital, which runs a cable down from New York to Panama and along the west coast of South America.

That company has sought to get into Brazil from the south. Now, then, what will happen if you permit this contract be-tween the Western Union and the British company to go into effect? Every message that I might want to send or that you might want to send from your home to Rio de Janeiro, for instance, delivered to the Western Union Co .- and remember that the All-American Cable Co. is solely a cable company and has no interior lines in the United States by which to gather -if you permit this contract to go through, then the message delivered for Rio de Janeiro from my home in Kansas to the Western Union will be delivered over the British monopolistic system to Rio de Janeiro. They insist that I would have no power to say that I want that message delivered, after the Western Union has started with it, over an American line, but carrying out their contract with the British company, after getting hold of that message they would deliver it over the British line into Rio de Janeiro. They deny the right of "via," directing otherwise.

I wish I had time to go more fully into that phase or aspect of the matter in controversy. While in a measure it is a contest between two great companies to control the future business of Brazil, one of the companies is controlled by American capital and the other is a partner of a British company controlled by British capital. And I prefer to have American messages carried over the line from the time the message starts from my hand to the time it is delivered in a foreign country, and all the way along the line, in control and under the super vision solely of American interests. [Applause.] And this particular controversy is but typical and suggestive of the situations which this legislation is to provide for.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOCH. I will.

Mr. DENISON. The gentleman just made the statement that the Western Union is controlled by British capital. I wish the gentleman would take that out of the RECORD.

Mr. HOCH. No; the gentleman misunderstood me, or else I spoke inadvertently. I intended at least to say that the British company at the other end of the line was so controlled, and that company would have the American message at the time and place of delivery.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley].

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House. every one will recognize that no matter how liberal we are in debate on Calendar Wednesday, no Member can hope to discuss the details of an important technical bill like this in the time allotted to any of us. I desire briefly to visualize the situation, as it occurs to me, that has brought about this legislation and the urgency for its immediate enactment.

I think it was testified that in 1919 Mr. Newcomb Cariton, president of the Western Union Telegraph Co., went to England, and while there he negotiated a contract with what is known as the Western Co., which is a cable company owned by British interests. Under the terms of that contract the British company were to build a cable from Brazil to Barbados, and the Western Union Co. was to build the rest of the line from Barbados to the United States. There are already cables reaching from Europe to South America, owned almost exclusively by British interests, not necessarily by this Western Co., but by British capital. Early in 1920, or perhaps before that, the Western Union Telegraph Co. made application to the State Department for a license to land the American end of this cable from Barbados to the United States at Miami, Fla. In March, 1920, the Secretary of State indicated to the Western Union Telegraph Co. that the license would not be granted, and that the State Department did not look favorably upon the landing in the United States of a cable, although owned entirely by American interests, that connected up with a foreign cable which at the other end connected with the company which possessed exclusive monopolistic rights in a foreign country. And by that I mean that no other company that might land in Brazil or connect its cable with any part of Brazil, where the Western British Co. now has a station, can collect messages from throughout Brazil and send them to the United States. They will allow an American cable, for instance, to land at one point in Brazil for the purpose of refreshing its current, but it is not permitted to gather messages or serve the people of Brazil in any way, and if that particular cable company desires to send to the United States over its line a message originating in Brazil it must send it over a foreign line that has the exclusive right to gather messages in Brazil.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Does the gentleman mean by that that the Government of Brazil has bestowed this monopoly upon the

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes, sir. The Government of Brazil has bestowed that exclusive concession upon the British Western Co., and the concession does not expire for a number of years,

Mr. BANKHEAD. And we have no treaty provision with Brazil for prohibiting the granting of such a monopoly?

Mr. BARKLEY. Apparently not. Not only did the State Department notify the Western Union Co. in March, 1920, but they also did the same thing in April, and the last notice was given in August, 1920, in which they advised the Western Union Telegraph Co. that they would not be granted the right to land this cable at Miani, Fla. They had their minds made up to land it anyway. Now, mind you, the Western Union Co. has cables now in the United States that are operated and which were landed under license or permits granted by the President.

The right of the President to issue a permit was never questioned wherever he acted favorably on an application, but where the permit was refused the Western Union Co. for the first time questioned the right of the President to do it, and went into court to test whether he has that right. The first action was brought by the Western Union against Josephus Daniels, then Secretary of the Navy, to enjoin his sending a battleship down there to prevent the landing of the cable. The Government instituted injunction proceedings in the southern district of New York to prevent the landing of the cable, and that question is now pending before the Supreme Court. The fundamental question to be decided there is not whether the Government has the right to regulate the landing of cables, not whether the Congress has the right to regulate the landing of fereign cables in the United States, but whether, Congress having given no power to the President, he has the power to prevent it. And if the Supreme Court shall render a decision upholding the contentions of the Western Union Telegraph Co., they have on the ground a cable ship that will land that cable in less than 24 hours. So that is the reason for the urgency for the enactment of this bill; that is the reason why it ought not to be permitted for a corporation or an individual or a combination of individuals to thwart the Army, the Navy, the Congress, the Supreme Court, and the President of the United States [applause] and land a cable upon our shores without any lawful authority. [Applause.] And if the Supreme Court shall sustain their contention and they do land, they land lawfully, because if nobody in the United States Government has the power to prevent their landing, and they land, then it is a lawful landing.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BARKLEY, Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Would the same result be accomplished if this bill were amended so as to prohibit the landing of such a cable or until Congress by legislation authorized such landing?

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, it would prevent the accomplishment of this landing or any other landing. But Congress would then have to pass a special act every time the question arose.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman

vield?

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I just wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Western Union Telegraph Co. recognized the right of the President to issue licenses, even in this instance, by making application to the President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes. The gentleman is right about that. They assumed that the authority that had been exercised by the President for 50 years was a lawful and legal authority, and, recognizing it as such, they made their application for a permit, and when the President refused to grant it, then they went into court and denied that he ever had the power either to grant or to refuse a permit.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Denison] has made a very able argument here against conferring this power upon the President upon constitutional grounds. But before I get to that I desire to say that there is not another nation in the world that has any cable communication with the outside world that does not have a law regulating the landing of cables on their shores. I do not regard it as being very vital or fundamental whether Congress shall retain the right to pass upon any individual case or whether that authority shall be delegated to the President. The fact is that the issuance of a license or a permit is an executive function. It is not a legislative function. We conferred that same power upon the Secretary of Commerce and Labor in 1912, and that law is still in force, except that the Secretary's name was changed to the "Secretary of Commerce' when we empowered him to issue licenses for radio stations in the United States that desired communication with the outside world. And there is no radio company or station anywhere in the United States now that can operate except under a license issued to it by the Secretary of Commerce. It might have been argued that in each case the Congress has the right to issue the license and fix the terms upon which the radio station may be operated; but these are merely executive and administrative functions and duties which the Congress confers. Nobody contends that the Congress has not the right either to permit or to prevent the landing of these cables in the United States. If we have the power to prevent, why, we have the power to prevent in each case the granting of a permit, and if we have the power to permit we have the power to permit in each case. But it is impossible for Congress to legislate in advance and provide for all the minutiæ and all the stipulations that will be necessary in providing for the landing of each cable in the United States. It may be that these powers may be arbitrarily exercised by the President of the United States. I presume if they are arbitrarily exercised by the President of the United States, and without reason, the courts will have the right to review the executive actions of the President and indicate those that are beyond his reasonable powers. But this cable or any other cable that is laid ought to be laid under regulations and under a license, and the terms ought to be stipulated in the permit.

This question arose, I think, in 1869 because a French cable company desired to land its cable in the United States, and the French Government at that time had given to certain interests the right to a cable monopoly in France, and no American cable could land in France upon the same terms that the French cable was proposing to land in the United States; and President Grant, exercising what he thought was his right, refused to allow them to land, because reciprocal rights were not enjoyed in France by American cable companies.

This bill proposes to give the President of the United States the same power. If any cable is about to be landed from a for-eign country that refuses to deal fairly and reasonably and impartially with an American cable company, the President will have the power to prevent the landing of that particular cable until the country from which it is projected shall grant to the American interests the same right to land cables in their country on terms of entire equality with all other cables that may be landed there.

Gentlemen, I am sure, will realize the importance of this measure not only in South America but in all the world. We are seeking to expand our commerce. The matter of cable communication is vital in the extension of commerce, and that is why the British Foreign Office is behind every cable company that starts out from a British possession and lands anywhere in the world. The terms of the contract between the British company and the Western Union practically amount to a monopoly in the United States of the messages that are to be sent by the British company from South America. They are all to be sent here through the Western Union. All the messages that are to be sent over the British cable to South America are to be sent from here by the Western Union, and all the messages that are to be sent from Brazil to the United States are to be distributed throughout the United States by the Western Union telegraph lines; so that the effect of the contract that has been made between these two links of the same concern, for all practical purposes, is to create a monopoly in the United States, and the only other avenue of escape is to use the facilities of the Postal Telegraph Co., which does only about 15 per cent of the telegraph business of the United So that the effect of the landing of this or any other cable similarly situated will be to permit a foreign cable, beginning in a country that may be unfriendly to American cablesbecause granting a monopoly to a foreign concern-will be to permit a foreign cable to use the Western Union Telegraph Co. as a cat's-paw to get into the United States, when no American company can land in Brazil to do business in Brazil.

Not only that, but if this thing goes through and the contract is carried out and their plans are permitted to be developed and completed, they will sew up all South America by reason of this monopoly. They already have a line of communication running around not only the eastern coast of South America but also on the western coast to Lima, Peru, and they are projecting a line running from Lima to Colon, which would encircle all South America by these foreign connections, and then they would use the Western Union in this country as the neck of a telegraphic bottle that would encircle the entire continent of South America.

I hope this bill will be enacted; and if it is I think the interests of all the people of the United States will be conserved. [Applause.]

DYES AND CHEMICALS.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objec-

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Gentlemen of the House, there is in the caucus room of the House Office Building an extremely interesting exhibit this week. It is of the coal-tar chemicals, showing their vast importance, both in time of peace and war, and showing the interdependence of the dye industry with the making of explosive and poisonous gases, perfumery, and medicine properties. I believe gentlemen can get more information in half an hour over there than they can get in reading volumes. It proposed to have two illustrated lectures, one to-morrow night and one Friday night, on these general subjects, and I would strongly advise every Member who possibly can to see the exhibits and attend the lectures. It will be of immense advantage when we come to discuss the chemical schedule in the coming tariff bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the bill just passed. The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the cable bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

BRIDGE ACROSS THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (S. 82) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto authorized by the act of Congress approved June 5, 1920, to be constructed by the counties of Pembina, N. Dak., and Kittson, Minn., across the Red River of the North at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak., are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

Sec. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Speaker, the general bridge act requires that the construction of a bridge be started within a year from the time the act authorizing it by Congress goes into effect. The law requires also that the bridge should be completed within three years. Congress authorized the construction of this bridge some time ago, but because of the abnormal conditions and the expense it has not been started. This bill simply renews the permission to start the bridge at any time within a year from its passage, and extends the time for its completion for three years from its passage,

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the

a joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk reported the title of the joint resolution.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED,

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4586. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order heretofore made, the House adjourned until Friday, May 20, 1921, at 12 o'clock neon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 19, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following

Our Father, we bless Thee that our lives are in Thy hands. Thou dost determine the bounds of our habitation. humbly ask that at this time with sorrow sitting in high places Thy great consolation may be had. We thank Thee for the distinguished service rendered by him so high in position and so large and faithful in purpose. God grant that at this time there may be realized by the widow's heart that her Maker is her husband.

Speak, we beseech of Thee, to all in affliction. May we understand much more clearly that the life has come to us and immortality better realized through the gospel of Thy grace, in Christ Jesus. Amen.

On request of Mr. Lodge, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Tuesday, May 17, 1921, was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DEATH OF CHIEF JUSTICE WHITE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the following communication:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, May 19, 1921.

The VICE PRESIDENT.

SIE: I am directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to notify the Senate, through you, that the Chief Justice of the United States died in this city at 2 o'clock this morning.

I have the honor to be,

Very respectfully,

JOSEPH MCKENNA,

JOSEPH MCKENNA, Justice, Supreme Court.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, with a very deep sense of public sorrow mingled with a most unfeigned feeling of personal grief I rise to make the formal motion of recognition by the Senate of the loss which has befallen the country in the death of the Chief Justice of the United States. He filled one of the greatest offices which it is permitted to man to hold. None, I think, among civilized men surpasses it in dignity and power. late Chief Justice honored his great place quite as much as the office honored him.

He brought to his high duties not merely the training of his profession but that of the statesman, of the man versed in public affairs, and in that great tribunal both equipments are alike necessary. He was devoted to his work, learned in the law, high-minded, impartial, always fearless in every scene of life, and a lover of his country in every fiber of his being.

His modesty was equal to the greatness of his place, and no one who knew him I believe ever spoke of him without some accompanying word of affection. He was a great lawyer, a fine character, and always human and sympathetic. We do not forget that he went from this body to the court which he was so long to lead and adorn. It is our privilege to number him among those who have greatly added to the renown of the Senate of the United States. But he did his life work in the great court of which he was the head, withdrawn of necessity from the dusty ways of men; but he never forgot that he was one of them. He administered justice and declared the law. higher task can be imposed upon any man. No larger praise can be bestowed than to say that Chief Justice White met his great task in full measure, and, as we can now say by the closing grave, with a victorious spirit to be always hereafter admired by his fellow countrymen.

Mr. President, I move that a committee of six Senators be appointed by the Chair to join with such committee as the House may appoint to attend the funeral of the late Chief Justice and to take such other steps as may be necessary in regard to the funeral ceremonies.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, the State of Louisiana is in very deep sorrow to-day over the death of her most distinguished son. For the past 30 years, since the late Chief Justice became a Senator in this body from Louisiana, he has shed more luster upon that Commonwealth than any other citizen. In fact, I may say, sir, that for the last 50 years he has been easily the most prominent citizen of that State, if not the most prominent in all its history.

Mr. White occupied many prominent positions in Louisiana before coming to the United States Senate, and filled all of them For the past 10 years he has been the head of the highest judicial tribunal on earth. The United States Supreme Court is the only court which has the power to nullify the acts of the highest legislature of the land. No other court, so far as I am informed, of a sovereign country has that power.

Chief Justice White filled the high position with the greatest credit to himself and to his country. His influence was very marked upon the judicial system of the Nation. I doubt, sir, if any Chief Justice or member of that court since the days of John Marshall had greater influence upon the judiciary than had Mr. White. It was a marked tribute to this great man when he, a citizen of the far South, an ex-Confederate soldier, and a Democrat in politics, was selected to be Chief Justice by Mr. Taft, the Republican President. It was a tribute, sirs, not only to Mr. White but to President Taft himself, for he is a great jurist, and he could have been influenced by nothing but the remarkable fitness of Mr. White for that position. He recognized him as preeminently the man for the place, and, seeking to do the best that could be done, he selected him.

Mr. President, one of the striking characteristics of Mr. White was the beautiful, simple, Christian life that he led. His life was as pure and innocent as that of a little child. He was a sincere, devout Christian. His mighty intellect, certainly one of the greatest intellects of this or any other age, taught him to love God and to obey the laws of God and man. He lived that kind of life all the time from his birth 75 years ago to his death, and that beautiful life, sirs, should be an inspiration to all men, especially in this day when there is so much of agnosticism, infidelity, and indifference among men in both low and high places.

Mr. President, there are many things which might be said about Mr. White, but I think I have said enough. I wish to add to my remarks brief resolutions of respect adopted this day by the Louisiana delegation in Congress. With permission, I shall add them without reading.

By unanimous consent the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The following resolutions were adopted at a meeting of the Louisiana delegation in the Senate and House of Representatives:

"Resolved. That in the death of Edward Douglas White, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, the most powerful judicial tribunal on earth, the Nation has lost one of its most illustrious, useful citizens, and Louisiana her most eminent son. No member of this court since the days of Marshall has exercised greater influence on the judiciary of his country, or more richly earned the title of the great Chief Justice.

"Resolved, That the clean, Christian, religious life and good example of Justice White for 75 years, in many trying positions as private citizen in his native State, member of the supreme court, United States Senator, Associate Justice for 17 years of the United States Supreme Court, and 10 years its Chief Justice, is an inspiration to all men who love God and country and believe in humble obedlence to divine and human law.

"Resolved, That Louisiana is justly proud of this great man whom she loaned to the Union for many years, and deeply laments his loss. As Members of Congress from Louisiana, speaking in her name, we voice these sentiments of respect and honor toward our beloved dead."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators who favor the mo-tion made by the Senator from Massachusetts will say "aye." It is unanimously agreed to, and the Chair appoints as the committee named in the motion the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood], the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Ransdell], the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Broussard], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Chief Justice of the United States that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, May 20, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, May 20, 1921.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. J. Muir, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, we thank Thee that Thou art the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, and hence Thy mercies never fail; and that we are the recipients of those mercies as the days go by. Be pleased to be with us this day. Direct our paths according to Thine own good pleasure. Remember our land, our President, and all related to the Government of this great Nation. humbly ask in Jesus Christ's name. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. Curtis and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

NONIMPORTATION OF CONTAMINATED SHAVING BRUSHES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill to prohibit the importation or inter-state sale of shaving or lather brushes containing horsehair which might be contaminated with anthrax, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the supreme court judges of the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and read, as follows

A petition to the Congress of the United States.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 17, 1921.

Washington, D. C., May 17, 1921.

The undersigned, your petitioners, who are for the time being "the supreme court judges of the District of Columbia," as so described in the act of Congress approved June 20, 1906, entitled "An act to fix and regulate the salaries of teachers, school officers, and other employees of the board of education of the District of Columbia" (34 Stat. L., p. 316), respectfully petition your honorable body to be relieved from making any more appointments of members of the board of education of the District of Columbia.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. FLETCHER presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Mr. File Chilk presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, as follows:

Joint resolution in the nature of a memorial to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Florida in the Congress of the United States of America with reference to the establishment of reservations for the purpose of preserving, protecting, and propagating food fishes on their natural breeding grounds in the State of Florida.

Whereas numerous of the waters, including lakes, rivers, bays, and estuaries lying within the boundaries and coming under the jurisdiction of the State of Florida, comprise and contain natural breeding grounds for food fishes; and

Whereas the use of scines, gill nets, and other devices and equipment on said breeding grounds have damaged, and in some instances totally destroyed numbers of different species of food fishes local to the waters of the State of Florida, and has seriously depleted the general supply of food fishes in the State, which is one of its greatest natural resources; and

Whereas unless some immediate steps are taken to prevent the continued destruction of the State's food fishes by the present existing improper practices, the entire food fish supply of the State will at an early date be completely exhausted: and

Whereas the past attempts and the present efforts of the State toward the protection and conservation of this great natural resource have and do meet with the serious objection of volitical preferments and their undesirable local influences; and

Whereas the United States Government through its Fish Commission is desirous of assuming jurisdiction over and control of all such portions of the waters of the State of Florida as are natural breeding grounds for food fishes in the State, for the purpose of making said natural breeding grounds within the State of Florida on their natural breeding grounds within the State of Florida on their natural breeding grounds within the State of Florida is the owner of said natural bree

Whereas such assumption of jurisdiction over the natural breeding grounds of food fishes in the State of Florida by the United States Government will result in material benefit, not only to the State of Florida but to the United States at large, in that it will vastly increase the supply of food fishes of which the State of Florida is one of the United States' greatest producers: Therefore be it

Florida but to the United States at large, in that it will vastly increase the supply of food fishes of which the State of Florida is one of the United States' greatest producers: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That our Senators and Representatives in the Congress of the United States of America be, and they are hereby, requested and empowered to procure the passage of an act of Congress placing any waters lying within the boundaries of the State of Florida and under its jurisdiction which are designated by the United States Fish Commission as natural breeding grounds for food fishes under the jurisdiction and authority of the United States Fish Commission, and giving and granting power to said commission to make such reasonable regulations as it may deem necessary for the purpose of preserving, protecting, and propagating said food fishes on said breeding grounds, and fixing suitable penalty for the violations of said regulations, reserving therein, however, the privilege to private individuals to take, catch, and appropriate any of such food fishes with and by no other means than with hook and line, or cast net which shall not exceed a length of 9 feet or a spread of 18 feet. Be it further Resolved, That before the United States Government shall assume jurisdiction over any of the natural breeding grounds for food fishes in the State of Florida for the purposes above expressed, the breeding grounds to be controlled by the United States Fish Commission shall be selected and designated by the said United States Fish Commission through its proper agents by physical markings on the boundaries of such reservations can be certainly and definitely located, and also by written selection or designation, which said written selection or designation a her part of the State of Florida, and the original or a certified copy thereof filed with the Secretary of State. Be it further Resolved, That this resolution shall not be construed to constitute an abandonment by the State of Florida

Mr. FLETCHER also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Florida, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE,
STATE OF FLORIDA,
Tallahassee, May 17, 1921.

Hon. Duncan U. Fletcher,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY Dear Sir: I am inclosing herewith certified copies of house memorial No. 2 and of joint resolution No. 296, both of which have recently been passed by the legislature.

Yours, very truly,

H. CLAY CRAWFORD. Secretary of State.

A memorial to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States of America, asking that the American Railway Express Co. be required to furnish the strawberry growers of Florida express re-frigerator cars to transport their strawberries to northern markets similar to the service now given Louislana.

frigerator cars to transport their strawberries to northern markets similar to the service now given Louislana.

Whereas there is grown in the several counties of the State of Florida annually many thousand bushels of strawberries; and

Whereas the only present method of transporting said strawberries by carload lots is by freight refrigerator cars, which is very unsatisfactory and disastrous to the strawberry growers of Florida because of the long schedule by freight refrigerator service, and if the American Railway Express Co. is not required and ordered to furnish the strawberry growers of Florida express refrigerator cars to transport their strawberry crops annually to the northern markets the strawberry growers of Florida will be forced to abandon the growing of strawberries and the State of Florida will lose one of her largest and most valuable sources of revenue: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida, That the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States of America be, and is hereby, requested to require and order the American Railway Express Co. to furnish the strawberry growers and shippers a sufficient number of express refrigerator cars to transport and carry their strawberry crop annually to the northern markets.

Resolved futher, That our Representatives in Congress be, and are hereby, respectfully requested to use every honorable means to have the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States of America to order and require the American Railway Express Co. to furnish the strawberry growers and shippers of Florida sufficient number of express refrigerator cars to transport and carry their strawberry crop annually to the northern markets.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be instructed to mail a copy of this memorial under the great seal of the State to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States of America and to each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress of the United States.

STATE OF FLORIDA,
Office of Secretary of State, 88:

Mr. FLETCHER also presented a telegram signed by Davis Forster, chairman national executive committee, American Legion, of Orlando, Fla., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ORLANDO, FLA., May 17, 1921.

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Senator, Washington, D. C.:

The following resolution was adopted and referred to national executive committee by the State convention of the American Legion, which convened in Orlando to-day:

which convened in Orlando to-day:

"Whereas the American Legion stands for justice and right and self-determination of all the people of earth; and

"Whereas from all the information that can be obtained the plebiscite which was recently held in Silesia failed to show that such right was given and upheld to the people of the said Province, but it appears that said plebiscite was conducted and carried on by the Germans through methods that produced fear and failed to show the true sentiment of the vast majority of the people living in that part of Poland; and

"Whereas it appears that large numbers of persons who were not citizens or inhabitants of the said Province of Silesia were brought into the country for the sole purpose of swelling the German vote: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved. That the convention assembled of the American Legion

Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the convention assembled of the American Legion of the State of Florida do hereby protest against the annexation of silesia to Germany as a result of the said plebiseite, and that the Senators and Representatives of the State of Florida at Washington, D. C., be requested to use such influence as they can bring to bear to have another plebiseite called in said Province where the right of self-determination may be justly and lawfully enforced, or that some other means may be devised which would guarantee a fair and impartial vote by the majority of the citizens and inhabitants of the country."

Please give copies to other Representatives from Florida.

Chairman National Executive Committee.

Mr. BROUSSARD presented a resolution adopted by the constitutional convention of the State of Louisiana on the 9th of May, 1921, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION OF LOUISIANA, 1921.

Resolution 127.

Resolution 127.

Whereas the Interstate Commerce Commission, through its interpretation of the transportation act, 1920, has indicated its purpose to assume for itself full and exclusive authority to regulate the railroads and all instrumentalities entering into the field of transportation, and thereby to divest the legislatures of the several States of substantially all power to regulate the intrastate rates and service of the railroads within the respective States; and

Whereas in conformity with this policy and acting upon what it claims to be the inient of Congress in the enactment of section 13 (4) of the transportation act, 1920, the Interstate Commerce Commission has made orders which seek to compel increases and other changes in intrastate rates in a number of States, without regard or heed to the protests of the governments of those States; and

Whereas the authority it has assumed for itself permits the Interstate Commerce Commission to wield the greatest power ever exercised by any body in peace times, which if allowed to take its logical course must inevitably develop into a bureaucratic system repugnant to the American theory of government; and

Whereas it is unjust and unnecessary to permit the development of a system which will compel a citizen of Louisiana or any other State either, to forego relief for local transportation problems or seek it solely through the Interstate Commerce Commission at Washington at great expense in time and money; and

Whereas before the passage by Congress of the transportation act, 1920, there was no serious conflict between Federal authority in the regulation of interstate commerce and State authority in the regulation of interstate commerce; and

Whereas all government, whether through Federal or State agency, is directed to the sole end of promoting the welfare and happiness of the people, it is our firm conviction that it is neither sound nor practical government to deny to the people of the several States the undisputable benefits of State regulation of commerc

States: Therefore be it

Resolved by this constitutional convention, That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully petitioned to so amend the transportation act, 1920, as to protect and preserve the powers of the several States with relation to intrastate rates, services, and facilities, and the local affairs of the common carriers within the States, and to make such amendment or amendments in language so plain that the authority of the States in their respective territories shall be maintained without opportunity for misinterpretation. And be it further Resolved, That the secretary of this convention be, and hereby is, directed to transmit a certified copy of this resolution to each United States Senator and each Representative in Congress from Louisiana.

Adopted by the constitutional convention of the State of Louisiana on the 9th day of May, A. D. 1921.

HEWITT BONAUCHAND President of the Convention.

O. H. SIMPSON, Secretary of the Convention.

Mr. BURSUM presented a resolution adopted at a meeting of the governors of the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation (to accompany Senate bill No. 1853) and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

as follows:

Whereas the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming have by appropriate legislation authorized the governors of said States to appoint commissioners representing said States for the purpose of entering into a compact or agreement between said States and between said States and the United States respecting the future utilization and disposition of the waters of the Colorado River and the streams tributary thereto; and Whereas the governors of said several States have named and appointed the commissioners contemplated by the legislative acts aforesaid; Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be, and it is hereby, requested to provide for the appointment of commissioners on behalf of the United States to act as members of said commission. And be it further of the United States to act as members of said commission. And be starther

Resolved, That the proposed draft of a bill for presentation to Congress, a copy of which is hereto attached, be offered as a suggestion for legislation for the purposes aforesaid. And be it further

Resolved, That Gov. Thomas E. Campbell, of Arizona, and the governors of the other States in the Colorado River Basin, or such representatives as they may severally designate, be, and they hereby are, authorized to present this resolution to the President and to the Congress of the United States.

We, the undersigned, do hereby certify that the foregoing resolution was adopted by unanimous vote at a meeting of the governors of Arizona, California, Colorado, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, and Wyoming, held at the capitol, at Denver, in the State of Colorado, on the 10th day of May, 1921.

He also presented a resolution of the International Brotherhood Welfare Association, of Cincinnati, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation empowering the Department of the Interior to proceed with public works in connection with the reclamation of waste and arid lands, and such other public works as will furnish useful employment, which was referred to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

EDUCATIONAL MOTION-PICTURE THEATERS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. On behalf of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen] I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD a resolution of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America relating to vocational education, together with the names of the parties who joined in the passage of the resolu-

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, with the names appended, as follows:

At a meeting of the officers and the executive committeemen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, held Tuesday, May 17, at the Hotel Washington, Washington, D. C., the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, having had always in mind the promotion of all projects of public welfare through the medium of their screens, do hereby offer their services to the people of our country in exhibiting in their theaters, free of charge, at special performances, a series of motion-picture films touching upon and dealing with vocational education. The object of these films is to ald young men and women in the high schools or other educational institutions of similar grade and character and to assist all other persons in determining the vocation for which their talents and inclinations seem to fit them best, the intent being to visualize all important industrial and scientific pursuits, as well as the activities of trade, commerce, and agriculture in such a manner as to place before the spectators a fair and complete picture of each subject.

"We invite the cooperation of all persons interested in advancing the cause of vocational education."

The national officers present at the meeting were: Sydney S. Cohen, of New York, president; E. T. Peter, Dallas, Tex., treasurer; Sam Bullock, Cleveland, Ohio, executive secretary; M. Van Praag, Kanass City, Kans., recording secretary; C. C. Griffin, Oakland, Calif., first vice president; Joseph Hopp, Chicago, Ill., second vice president; C. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. Dak., fourth vice president.

Members of the executive committee present were: C. L. O'Reilly, New York City, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York; John S. Evans, Philadelphia, Pa., president of the Motion Picture Owners of New Jors, Philadelphia, Pa., president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Northern Ohio, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Northern Ohio, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Northern Ohio, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Northern Ohio, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Northern Owner

Mr. OWEN subsequently said:

Mr. President, the resolution introduced this morning, at my request, by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Jones] and printed in the Congressional Record by order of the United States Senate, is of such far-reaching patriotic importance I am impelled to call it especially to the attention of the Members of the Senate who were not present.

The meaning of this resolution of the officers and the executive committeemen of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America of May 17 at Hotel Washington, in Washington, D. C., is that the owners of 17,000 motion-picture theaters open their theaters, free of cost and at some considerable expense to themselves, to the young men and women of the high schools and other educational institutions of America, and will exhibit films dealing with vocational instruction.

The purpose is to enable the young men and women of America to visualize all important industrial and scientific pursuits'as well as the activities of trade, commerce, and agriculture in such a manner that they may wisely and happily choose their own life activities.

The motion-picture theaters are entitled to very great credit for their generous, patriotic, and wise contribution to the welfare of our young people and to the thanks and warm appreciation of Congress and of the country.

The Bureau of Commercial Economics, under the management of Dr. Francis Holley, is in position to furnish these educational and vocational films, and is doing this work as a labor of love and pure altruism. This bureau is now circulating very many millions of feet of instructive films gratis. No one ever pays to see these films. No patriotic organization in America in altruism is doing more splendid and useful work than this great bureau that will unselfishly furnish these films to the 17,000 motion-picture theaters whose doors are open, without expense, to the youth of the Republic to view these educational films.

LADIES' MOUNT VERNON ASSOCIATION,

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, recently there has been a good deal of talk around Washington about the Government acquiring, by purchase or condemnation, Mount Vernon. I feel a deep interest in that property and a great pride in the part that a patriotic lady of my State played in organizing the Ladies' Mount Vernon Association and purchasing that property and preserving it intact to the present time. This lady was Miss Ann Pamela Cunningham, of my county of Laurens in South Carolina, who was the first regent and whose memory will be forever cherished.

I hope we shall hear no more of this talk of the Government taking the property from that association. association purchased it and has preserved it until the present time. At that time the place had been cut up and a great deal of the land had been sold. The household furniture had been sold and scattered. These patriotic ladies went to work and bought the main property, all that portion which had been sold off, which could be had, and collected all the furniture that they could find.

I have here an editorial from the Spartanburg Journal and Carolina Spartan, of Spartanburg, S. C., setting forth a good history of this property, which I desire to have printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the editorial will be printed as requested.

The editorial is as follows:

[From the Spartanburg Journal and Carolina Spartan, Tuesday, May 17, 1921.]

"TRYING TO DEGRADE MOUNT VERNON.

"'Officers of patriotic organizations of the District,' we are told by the Washington Post, are advocating that the Federal Government take over the financial care of Mount Vernon and that 'the general feeling was expressed (by the so-called officers of patriotic organizations, presumably) that the place rightfully should be controlled by the Government.' The Post says further that Col. James A. Drain, commander of the District Department of the American Legion, said last Friday night that 'Mount Vernon should be taken over by the Government as soon as possible.' And, continuing, Col. Drain was gracious enough to say this:

"The ladies who with great public spirit have taken care of the place deserve the greatest credit. The very nature and character of the estate, as the home of Washington and as his final resting place, however, make it highly desirable that it be owned by the United States Government. I am heartily in favor of the movement to abolish the fee required at present for entrance to the estate.

"Then Mrs. Francis X. St. Clair, State regent of the District, said that the proposition will be taken up at the next meeting of the District Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution-the meeting was to be held last night-and that she would introduce resolutions placing the organization on record favoring the Government purchase. That is such an easy way to do a patriotic thing—offer a resolution that the D. A. R. of the District would offer no objection if the Government should buy the property of some other organization. It would like to take 'pilgrimages of patriotic citizens there to pay tribute to the Father of his Country,' but without going through the form of paying anything at the gate out of its own precious pockets for keeping the grave of the Father of his Country green. Mrs. Francis X. St. Clair is reported by Mr. McLean's paper thus:

"I certainly think Mount Vernon should belong to the Government. It should be free, and open always to receive the pilgrimages of patriotic citizens who go there to pay tribute to the Father of his Country. To my mind it is decidedly un-American to charge an admission fee. The women should be left on the commission which would manage it in recognition of the work they have done in keeping up the house and grounds.

"Then Col. John McElroy, District department commander of the Grand Army of the Republic, said:

"It is an admirable idea. It ought to be done immediately, and I hope that Congress at the present session will pass legislation which will place this great national shrine under Government control. Steps should be taken at once to abolish the fee which is now charged for admitting citizens to the estate.

"Not to be outdone by the representatives of other 'patriotic (?)' organizations

"James J. Murphy, adjutant of the Department of the District, United Spanish War Veterans, unqualifiedly indorsed the proposition that the Government should buy the tract immediately and control it as a Government reservation. By appropriating money from general taxation funds, the Government could maintain the place, and thus do away with the objectionable fee, he said.

"But this it not all. President A. D. Spangler, of the Sons of the American Revolution of the District, is 'decidedly in favor of the Government taking over Mount Vernon and keeping it open free to the public. 'I feel certain,' President Spangler said, that the movement will meet with great favor everywhere and that measures providing for the necessary steps will be passed President Spangler was frank enough, after by Congress.' disposing of the property, to praise the manner in which the Ladies' Mount Vernon Association had maintained the buildings and ground, but insisted that 'the Government should control a place of such national historic interest.

It will be noted that all these patriotic persons seem to be of the grafting habit of mind. Col. Drain would 'abolish the fee required at the entrance'; Mrs. St. Clair would make the place open free always; Col. McElroy would 'abolish the fee'; Adjutant Murphy would 'do away with the objectionable fee'; and the representative of the Sons of the Revolution is decidedly in favor of the Government taking Mount Vernon and 'keeping it open free to the public.' And they are all in favor of an appropriation by the Government.

"So far as we know, Mount Vernon is not for sale. It belongs to the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association. It was built in 1743 by Lawrence, half brother of George Washington. On the death of Lawrence Washington and of his only daughter, George Washington inherited the estate and went there to live soon after his marriage in 1759. He died and was buried there in 1799. In view of the effort now being renewed in Washington by societies and persons wanting to get something for nothing, the following little story of the present owners of the property—the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association—taken from an up-to-date handbook of Washington' will be of interest:

'an up-to-date handbook of Washington' will be of interest:

"The associations of Washington with the place during his lifetime and the presence of his tomb here made Mount Vernon a shrine of patriotism. When in 1855 John Augustine Washington, being without means to maintain the estate, offered it for sale, a patriotic daughter of South Carolina, Ann Pamela Cunningham, resolved to save the Washington home as a permanent shrine of patriotism. With a high courage, which in its very daring augured success, she devoted herself to the tremendous task of raising the sum of $200,000 required for the purpose. In 1858 the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association of the Union was organized, with Miss Cunningham as regent, and vice regents representing 12 States. Contributions were solicited and popular support was enlisted. Edward Everett gave the proceeds of his lecture on Washington and of certain writings and thus put into the association treasury the handsome sum of $69,000 as his personal contribution. Wazhington Irving contributed $500. Thousands upon thousands of school children gave 5 cents each. The full sum was in hand before the end of 1859, and in 1860 Mount Vernon became the property of the association. A further fund was provided for permanent care and maintenance. Portions of the original estate that had been sold have been acquired again; buildings which had fallen into ruin have been restored; the deer park under the hill has been restocked; the mansion has been repaired; many articles of furniture and adornment have been restored to the several rooms; numbers of valuable relics and mementoes of George and Martha Washington and of their times have been deposited here. The restoration, equipment, and keeping of the respective rooms have been intrusted to the pious care of the women of the different States represented in the board of vice regents. The privilege of visiting Mount Vernon and the satisfaction of knowing that it is to be cherished for all time we owe to this ladies' association and beyond it to Ann Pa

'Dissenting from the view expressed by the State regent of the District that 'it is decidedly un-American to charge an admission fee, there being nothing more characteristically American than the charging of fees, the ladies of the Mount Vernon Association will rightly appraise the suggestion that the State regent of the District would consent to their continued management of Mount Vernon at the general expense, a suggestion which we have no doubt they would instantly reject should it be made to them with authority.

"We have said so much about this matter because of the very special interest South Carolina has in the Mount Vernon Association. The effort of the 'patriotic' organizations to open the way at the expense of the Government for the conversion of Mount Vernon, the home of Washington, preserved through the patriotic service and sacrifices of the women of the country for 63 years as a shrine to which all true men and women could go to renew their vows of loyalty to the principles of the American founders—we say that the effort of the 'patriotic' organizations of the District to desecrate this sacred place by making it the common playground for all undesirable Americans is too shameful to contemplate."

Mr. DIAL. I also have in my hand and wish to read a portion of the last address that Miss Cunningham made with reference to this particular subject, as follows;

Ladies, the home of Washington is in your charge—see to it that you keep it the home of Washington. Let no irreverent hand change it; no vandal hands descerate it with the fingers of progress. Those who go to the home in which he lived and died wish to see in what he lived and died. Let one spot in this grand country of ours be saved from change. Upon you rests this duty.

Mr. President, I consider that every patriotic citizen of the United States ought to feel under lasting obligation to this patriotic society, and I trust that the Mount Vernon property will be preserved forever in its present state.

A short while ago, about the time the Masons had a meeting in this city, some protests were raised about the pitiful sum of 25 cents being charged as an entrance fee to Mount Vernon. have no authority to speak for the Masons, as a whole, but being one of that organization I repudiate the imputation going out that any Mason in the world would object to paying the pitiful sum of 25 cents to visit that charming spot. I hope that it will not be spread abroad that the Masons originated the idea of the Government trying to take the property from the said association.

I do not feel that anyone can have any just objection to paying that small fee for seeing this historic place. It is a mere pittance; it is too small to be considered. It is not more than a great many people hand the waiter for serving breakfast. I trust that the words of Miss Cunningham will be heeded here, and that the property will be preserved in its present state

As my friend from Florida [Mr. Fletcher] suggests to me, the fee is necessary in order to maintain and keep up the prop erty and to have it looked after and preserved. No one should have any thought of objecting to the payment of so small a sum; its collection is not for the purpose of making money.

hope, at least, we shall never hear any objection of that kind in the Senate of the United States.

Not only that, but I desire to say I do not know of any law under which the Government could condemn that property unless, perhaps, it might want to take it for the establishment of a national park or for some purpose of that sort. I know of no law in pursuance of which we could condemn and take possession of the place where Washington was buried any more than we could condemn and take possession of the place where any other citizen of the United States happened to be buried. The property could not be condemned except on the theory of eminent domain. That would be possible, but it certainly would not be popular with right-thinking people, and we should dismiss the thought.

SANDA COURT STRUCTURE.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, about two years ago I called the attention of the Secretary of the Navy, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of State to a frame structure that had been erected in one of the inner courts of the State, War, and Navy Building. It is a frame building erected in entire disregard of any building laws, a structure which never would have been permitted in any city by any private concern, and, moreover, a great fire hazard.

At the last session of Congress I asked for information through a resolution tending to show that there was great neglect upon some one's part in not having that frame building removed. I have taken it up with the departments of the Government again, and they insist that the room is necessary, they urge me to call it to the attention of the Public Buildings Commission, of which I think some Senators are members.

In this connection I have just received a letter from the National Board of Fire Underwriters. They call my attention to the fact that in that building are contained some of the most important of our public documents, our important treaties, many original papers of the United States, including the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence, They suggest to me that steps should be taken at once to remove this fire hazard, which some day may destroy the building with its valuable papers. I send the letter to the Secrethe Senate, as well as for the governmental departments and the country. Those responsible for the continuation of this great risk must do so with the full understanding that if a fire should ever get underway the present condition of the build-ing would almost certainly assure its total destruction.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may we have order, so that we can hear the letter read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. Mr. CALDER. I ask that the letter may be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF FIRE UNDERWRITERS, New York, May 18, 1921.

Hon. William M. Calder,

Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Calder: It was discouraging to learn that in spite of your earnest efforts you had thus far been unsuccessful in securing the removal of Sanda Court from the State, War, and Navy Building. It is a most unfortunate situation and one fraught with much danger to a vast quantity of public records and documents. I can not but feel that if the matter were fully understood and the hazard appreciated some way would be found to provide space as a substitute for that still occupied in Sanda Court by the State Department, and so remove the only excuse for the continued existence of that wooden monstrosity.

I am informed that a bill has been introduced in the Congress authorizing the erection of a suitable building as a repository for all our public documents and records of historic value. This is quite proper; such a building should have been provided long ago. But at the best it will be several years before this desired object can be accomplished. In the meantime can we not at least arouse enough public spirit to safeguard the two most valuable public documents which this country possesses—the Constitution of the United States and the Declaration of Independence. As already explained to you in previous communications, they are really in peril, quite apart from the hazard produced by Sanda Court.

In my opinion, a small expenditure, probably not more than $10,000

Court.

In my opinion, a small expenditure, probably not more than $10,000 or $15,000, would amply protect these two documents without the necessity of removing them from the metal cabinet in which they are kept or even removing them from the library in which they are now placed; neither would the room be disfigured or seriously encroached upon, and there would be reasonable assurance that the building might suffer serious burn out without endangering them.

It is pretty certain that if the public realized the risk surrounding these cherished documents and the ease with which they could be protected the protest would be so insistent that a way would be promptly found to accomplish the desired object.

If a committee of three or five experienced fire-protection engineers were to be requested to spend a few hours inspecting the building, I am confident they would confirm my statements and remove any doubt as to my being an alarmist. The men should have knowledge of the behavior of fire in large buildings and also of fire-prevention construction.

Such a committee could decide upon details of construction to remove the existing hazard, and, considering the purpose of the work, they would probably be glad to serve for the bare cost of traveling expenses.

Do you not think there is some way that this can be brought about?

Young very trade.

IRA H. WOOLSON, Consulting Engineer.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, that letter is signed by a gentleman in New York who is the chief engineer of the National Board of Fire Underwriters, and probably one of the best informed men in America on fire protection. He has gone to great pains to examine the building, without any cost to the Government, and I earnestly urge members of the Public Buildings Commission, of which I believe the Senator from Utah [Mr. Smoor] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Swanson] are members, to take up the matter at once and safeguard against any possible loss to the Government through neglect in continuing that monstrosity.

I ask that the letter be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for their information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so referred.

INVESTIGATION OF CLOTHING INDUSTRY.

Mr. CALDER. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate Senate resolution No. 63, submitted by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], authorizing the Committee on Education and Labor to hold hearings and to investigate the conditions in the clothing industry in the United States

Mr. BORAH. The resolution having been passed on by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it will be so referred.

The amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CURTIS also submitted an amendment providing that in order to keep the expenditures for printing and binding within or under the appropriation for the fiscal year 1922 the heads of the various executive departments and Government establishments be authorized to discontinue the printing of any annual or special reports under their respective jurisdiction, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that in order to house all governmental activities in Government-owned buildings, no part of any money appropriated for the fiscal year 1922 shall be available for payment of rent in the District of Columbia, provided that such provision shall not be so construed as to affect any leases heretofore entered into for a period of more than one year, and that the Quartermaster of the Army be authorized and directed to do all the moving incident to carrying out the provisions of this section, intended to be proposed by him to the second deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS submitted an amendment, intended to be pro-posed by him to the Army appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 67, after line 24, insert the following: "For the preparation of plans, the initiation of work, including the employment of all necessary engineering, technical, clerical, and other services, and for any and every purpose connected therewith, for the development of hydroelectric power at Great Falls, in accordance with the report of Maj. M. C. Tyler in Senate Document No. 403, Sixty-sixth Congress, third session, $200,000, and the development of such power is hereby authorized at an expense not exceeding the amount of cost estimated in said report, and within such limit of cost the Federal Water Power Commission is hereby authorized to make any modifications or changes in the plans of said improvement as may be considered advisable by said commission."

Mr. CALDER submitted an amendment providing that upon the original enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, all members other than officers of various classes and members of the Fleet Naval Reserve, shall be confirmed in the lowest rating of their respective branches of the service, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed, The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 4803, the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The pending amendment is the amendment of the committee, on page 26, after line 9, to insert:

ment of the committee, on page 26, after line 9, to insert:

Naval supply base, Alameda, Calif.: Toward dredging, excavating, and grading, $1,500,000.

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to accept from the city of Alameda, Calif., free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States Government in excess of $1, a certain tract of land on San Francisco Bay, containing 5,340 acres, more or less, for use as a site for a naval base, being the land described in a certain deed made the 5th day of February, 1920, by and between the city of Alameda and the United States of America. Also to accept free from encumbrances and without cost to the United States Government in excess of $1, certain other land adjoining said tract, being the land lying between the southwesterly boundary line of said tract and the pierhead line in front thereof.

Mr. SMITH obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH obtained the floor.

Mr. BORAH. I ask the Senator if he would object to having a vote on the pending amendment before he proceeds? I understand there is not going to be any discussion on the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Do I understand that there is to be merely a viva voce vote or a roll call?

Mr. BORAH. A roll call.
Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I should like to accede to the request of the Senator from Idaho, but the matter that I desire to discuss this morning is more or less germane to and perhaps will influence to some extent some of us, at least, in the vote on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina will proceed.

Mr. SMITH addressed the Senate. After having spoken for

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed without amendment the bill (S. 82) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.

The message also announced that the House had passed with amendments the bill (S. 535) to prevent the unauthorized landing of submarine cables in the United States, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 123) to provide funds for the repair of the elevator in the Washington Monument, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also communicated to the Senate the resolutions of the House unanimously adopted as a tribute to the memory of Hon. Edward Douglass White, late Chief Justice of the United States.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 4586) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT ELEVATOR.

Mr. WARREN. I ask the Senator from South Carolina to yield to me for a moment, that a joint resolution just received from the House of Representatives to repair the Washington Monument elevator may be considered. The elevator has broken down, and the public is entirely inconvenienced. The President has asked that the matter receive early attention. The House has passed the joint resolution and I should like to have it taken up at this time.

Mr. SMITH. If it does not lead to any lengthy debate, I will yield.

Mr. WARREN. I will withdraw it if it leads to any debate.

Mr. SMITH. Very well.
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair) The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 123) to provide funds for the repair of the elevator in the Washington Monument, was read twice by its title.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the emergency making it necessary to interrupt the consideration of the naval appropriation

Mr. WARREN. The elevator can not be run at all. It will not take longer than the time required to read the resolution and vote upon it to pass it. People are disappointed every day when they come to Washington and can not go up in the Monu-

Mr. POINDEXTER. The elevator is out of commission?

Mr. WARREN. It is.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I reserve the right to object in case there should be debate over it.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that in the RECORD the joint resolution may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I am already instructed by that committee, if so referred, to ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WARREN. I report it back favorably from the Committee on Appropriations and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration, with the understanding that I shall not pursue the consideration of it if it leads to any debate.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $900 of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1922 for care and maintenance of the Washington Monument is hereby made immediately available, and for special repairs to the elevator and other mechanical equipment of the Monument, there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500, to continue available until June 30, 1922.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARREN. I ask that two brief letters from the President to the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the letters will be inserted in the RECORD.

The letters are as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, May 20, 1921.

Hon. James W. Good,

Chairman Committee on Appropriations,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C. House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Good: It has just come to my knowledge that the running of the elevator in the Washington Monument has been stopped because of wear in the machinery connected therewith. It is understood that the cost of such repairs as may be necessary to permit the operation of the elevator to be resumed will amount to about $900, but that the appropriation for the present fiscal year is so far exhausted that there is not a sufficient balance for this purpose, and the Deputy Comptroller of the Treasury has expressed an opinion informally that it would not be legal to have the repairs made now and pay for them out of the appropriation which has been provided for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

As many visitors will be prevented from ascending to the top of the Monument until the elevator is again running, it is submitted whether your committee would not authorize the payment from the appropriation for 1922 of the cost of making these repairs at once.

I should be glad if this matter could be acted upon favorably in order that the public may not be deprived any longer than is necessary of the facilities for visiting the top of the Monument.

Sincerely, yours,

Warren G, Harding.

WARREN G. HARDING.

THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, May 20, 1921.

Hon. James W. Good, M. C., Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dean Mr. Good: Referring to my letter of this date to you on the subject of permitting a portion of the appropriation for the care of the Washington Monument for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, to be used to pay for repairs which are needed at the present time to the machinery of the elevator, it appears that the sheaves upon which the cables of the elevator car run should be replaced with new sheaves and that other repairs to the clevator machinery should be made in order that it may be placed in first-class condition. It is estimated that this will cost about $2,500, and it is recommended that a deficiency appropriation for the fiscal year 1922 be provided at as early a date as possible, in order that the necessary replacement may be made during the present summer.

The regular appropriation for the maintenance of the Monument for 1922 will not permit of this extraordinary expenditure being made therefrom.

therefrom. Very truly, yours,

WARREN G. HARDING.

EMERGENCY TARIFF-CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me, that I may submit a conference report?

Mr. SMITH. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. The chairman of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the emergency tariff bill, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], is unavoidably absent from the Senate and he has asked me to submit the conference report.

I desire simply to say in presenting this report that there has been no substantial change whatever in the bill with the exception that the dye provision which was to continue for six months is amended to continue for only three months. I ask the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] if in view of this statement there would be any objection to asking unanimous consent for the present consideration of the report and disposing of the matter?

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not know that it was the purpose of the Senator to ask for the immediate consideration of the re-

Mr. SMITH. If it is going to lead to discussion I must ob-

Mr. McCUMBER. If it is going to lead to discussion I shall not insist on the consideration of the report at this time.

Mr. SMITH. It is being discussed now.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not going to discuss it. gest to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] that if he will withhold his request for a short time I shall be able to give him an answer as to its consideration to-day.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will just submit the report now, and we will take up the matter later.

The conference report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States: to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

> "TITLE II .- ANTIDUMPING, "DUMPING INVESTIGATION.

"Sec. 201. (a) That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter in this act called the 'Secretary'), after such investigation as he deems necessary, finds that an industry in the United States is being or is likely to be injured, or is prevented from being established, by reason of the importation into the United States of a class or kind of foreign merchandise, and that merchandise of such class or kind is being sold or is likely to be sold in the United States or elsewhere at less than its fair value, then he shall make such finding public to the extent he deems necessary, together with a description of the class or kind of merchandise to which it applies in such detail as may be necessary for the guidance of the appraising officers.

"(b) Whenever, in the case of any imported merchandise of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has not so made public a finding, the appraiser or person acting as appraiser has reason to believe or suspect, from the invoice or other papers or from information presented to him, that the purchase price is less, or that the exporter's sales price is less or likely to be less, than the foreign market value (or, in the absence of such value, than the cost of production) he shall forthwith, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, notify the Secretary of such fact and withhold his appraisement report to the collector as to such merchandise until the further order of the Secretary, or until the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in subdivision (a) in regard to such merchandise.

" SPECIAL DUMPING DUTY.

"SEC. 202. (a) That in the case of all imported merchandise, whether dutiable or free of duty, of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in section 201, and as to which the appraiser or person acting as appraiser has made no appraisement report to the collector before such finding has been so made public, if the purchase price or the exporter's sales price is less than the foreign market value (or, in the absence of such value, than the cost of production)

there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties imposed thereon by law, a special dumping duty in an amount equal to such difference.

(b) If it is established to the satisfaction of the appraising officers that the amount of such difference between the purchase price and the foreign market value is wholly or partly due to the fact that the wholesale quantities, in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers for exportation to the United States in the ordinary course of trade, are greater than the wholesale quantities in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country of exportation in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption (or, if not so sold or offered for sale for home consumption, then for exportation to countries other than the United States), then due allowance shall be made therefor in determining the foreign market value for the purposes of this

(c) If it is established to the satisfaction of the appraising officers that the amount of such difference between the exporter's sales price and the foreign market value is wholly or partly due to the fact that the wholesale quantities, in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all pur-chasers in the principal markets of the United States in the ordinary course of trade, are greater than the wholesale quantities in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country of exportation in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption (or, if not so sold or offered for sale for home consumption, then for exportation to countries other than the United States), then due allowance shall be made therefor in determining the foreign market value for the purposes of this section.

" PURCHASE PRICE.

"SEC. 203. That for the purposes of this title, the purchase price of imported merchandise shall be the price at which such merchandise has been purchased or agreed to be purchased, prior to the time of exportation, by the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported, plus, when not included in such price, the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, less the amount, if any, included in such price, attributable to any additional costs, charges, and expenses, and United States import duties, incident to bringing the merchandise from the place of shipment in the country of exportation to the place of delivery in the United States; and plus the amount, if not included in such price, of any export tax imposed by the country of exportation on the exportation of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any import duties imposed by the country of exportation which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any taxes imposed in the country of exportation upon the manufacturer, producer, or seller, in respect to the manufacture, production, or sale of the merchandise, which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States.

"EXPORTER'S SALES PRICE.

"SEC. 204. That for the purpose of this title the exporter's sales price of imported merchandise shall be the price at which such merchandise is sold or agreed to be sold in the United States, before or after the time of importation, by or for the account of the exporter, plus, when not included in such price, the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, less (1) the amount, if any, included in such price, attributable to any additional costs, charges, and expenses, and United States import duties, incident to bringing the merchandise from the place of shipment in the country of exportation to the place of delivery in the United States; (2) the amount of the commissions, if any, for selling in the United States the particular merchandise under consideration; (3) an amount equal to the expenses, if any, generally incurred by or for the account of the exporter in the United States in selling identical or substantially identical merchandise; and (4) the amount of any export tax imposed by the country of exportation on the exporta-tion of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any import duties imposed by the country of exportation which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any taxes imposed in the country of exportation upon the manufacturer, producer, or seller in respect to the manufacture, production, or sale of the merchandise, which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States.

"FOREIGN MARKET VALUE.

"SEC. 205. That for the purposes of this title the foreign market value of imported merchandise shall be the price, at the time of exportation of such merchandise to the United States, at which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country from which exported, in the usual wholesale quantities and in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption (or, if not so sold or offered for sale for home consumption, then for exportation to countries other than the United States), plus, when not included in such price, the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incldent to placing the merchandise in condition packed ready for shipment to the United States, except that in the case of merchandise purchased or agreed to be purchased by the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported, prior to the time of exportation, the foreign market value shall be ascertained as of the date of such purchase or agreement to purchase. In the ascertainment of foreign market value for the purposes of this title no pretended sale or offer for sale, and no sale or offer for sale intended to establish a fictitious market, shall be taken into account.

" COST OF PRODUCTION.

"SEC. 206. That for the purposes of this title the cost of production of imported merchandise shall be the sum of-

"(1). The cost of materials of, and of fabrication, manipulation, or other process employed in manufacturing or producing, identical or substantially identical merchandise, at a time preceding the date of shipment of the particular merchandise under consideration which would ordinarily permit the manufacture or production of the particular merchandise under consideration in the usual course of business;

"(2) The usual general expenses (not less than 10 per cent of such cost) in the case of identical or substantially identical merchandise:

"(3) The cost of all containers and coverings, and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the particular merchandise under consideration in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States; and

"(4) An addition for profit (not less than 8 per cent of the sum of the amounts found under paragraphs (1) and (2)) equal to the profit which is ordinarily added, in the case of merchandise of the same general character as the particular merchandise under consideration, by manufacturers or producers in the country of manufacture or production who are engaged in the same general trade as the manufacturer or producer of the particular merchandise under consideration.

"EXPORTER.

"SEC. 207. That for the purposes of this title the exporter of imported merchandise shall be the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported into the United States:

"(1) If such person is the agent or principal of the exporter, manufacturer, or producer; or

person: or

"(4) If any person or persons, jointly or severally, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, own or control in the aggregate 20 per cent or more of the voting power or control in the business carried on by the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported into the United States, and also 20 per cent or more of such power or control in the business of the exporter, manufacturer, or producer.

"OATHS AND BONDS ON ENTRY.

"SEC. 208. That in the case of all imported merchandise, whether dutiable or free of duty, of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in section 201, and delivery of which has not been made by the collector before such finding has been so made public, unless the person by whom or for whose account such merchandise is imported makes oath before the collector, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that he is not an exporter, or unless such person declares under oath at the time of entry, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, the exporter's sales price of such merchandise, it shall be unlawful for the collector to deliver the merchandise until such person has made oath before the collector, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that the merchandise has not been sold or agreed to be sold by such person, and has given bond to the collector, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, with sureties approved by the collector, in an amount equal to the estimated value of the merchandise, conditioned: (1) That he will report to the collector the exporter's sales price of the merchandise within 30 days after such merchandise has been sold or agreed to be sold in the United States, (2) that he will pay on demand from the collector the amount of special dumping duty, if any, imposed by this title upon such merchandise, and (3) that he will furnish to the collector such information as may be in his possession and as may be necessary for the ascertainment of such duty, and will keep such records as to the sale of such merchandise as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"DUTIES OF APPRAISERS.

"Sec. 209. That in the case of all imported merchandise, whether dutiable or free of duty, of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in section 201, and as to which the appraiser or person acting as appraiser has made no appraisement report to the collector before such finding has been so made public, it shall be the duty of each appraiser or person acting as appraiser, by all reasonable ways and means to ascertain, estimate, and appraise (any invoice or affidavit thereto or statement of cost of production to the contrary notwithstanding) and report to the collector the foreign market value or the cost of production, as the case may be, the purchase price, and the exporter's sales price, and any other facts which the Secretary may deem necessary for the purposes of this title.

"APPEALS AND PROTESTS.

"Sec. 210. That for the purposes of this title the determination of the appraiser or person acting as appraiser as to the foreign market value or the cost of production, as the case may be, the purchase price, and the exporter's sales price, and the action of the collector in assessing special dumping duty, shall have the same force and effect and be subject to the same right of appeal and protest, under the same conditions and subject to the same limitations; and the general appraisers, the Board of General Appraisers, and the Court of Customs Appeals shall have the same jurisdiction, powers, and duties in connection with such appeals and protests as in the case of appeals and protests relating to customs duties under existing law.

" DRAWBACKS.

"Sec. 211. That the special dumping duty imposed by this title shall be treated in all respects as regular customs duties within the meaning of all laws relating to the drawback of customs duties.

" SHORT TITLE.

"SEC. 212. That this title may be cited as the 'Antidumping act, 1921.'

"TITLE III .- ASSESSMENT OF AD VALOREM DUTIES.

"EXPORT VALUE.

"Sec. 302. That for the purposes of this title the export value of imported merchandise shall be the price, at the time of exportation of such merchandise to the United States, at which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country from which exported, in the usual wholesale quantities and in the ordinary course of trade, for exportation to the United States, plus, when not included in such price, the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, less the amount, if any included in such price, attributable to any additional costs, charges, and expenses, and United States import duties, incident to bringing the merchandise from the place of shipment in the country of exportation to the place of delivery in the United States, and plus, if not included in such price, the amount of any export tax imposed by the country of exportation on merchandise exported to the United States.

" REFERENCES TO 'VALUE' IN EXISTING LAW.

"Sec. 303. (a) That wherever in Title I of this act, or in the tariff act of 1913, as amended, or in any law of the United States in existence at the time of the enactment of this act relative to the appraisement of imported merchandise (except sections 2874, 2976, and 3016 of the Revised Statutes, and section 801 of the revenue act of 1916), reference is made to the value of imported merchandise (irrespective of the particular phrase-ology used and irrespective of whether or not such phraseology is limited or qualified by words referring to country or port of exportation or principal markets) such reference shall, in respect to all merchandise imported on or after the day this act takes effect, be construed to refer, except as provided in subdivision (b), to actual market value as defined by the law in existence at the time of the enactment of this act, or to export value as defined by section 302 of this act, whichever is higher.

"(b) If the rate of duty upon imported merchandise is in any manner dependent upon the value of any component material thereof, such value shall be an amount determined under the provisions of the tariff act of 1913, as in force prior to the enact### ment of this act.

"Sec. 304. That when used in this title the term 'Tariff act of 1913' means the act entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other pur# poses,' approved October 3, 1913. "TITLE IV.—GENERAL PROVISIONS.

"STATEMENTS IN INVOICE.

"Sec. 401. That all invoices of imported merchandise, and all statements in the form of an invoice, in addition to the statements required by law in existence at the time of the enactment of this act, shall contain such other statements as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe, and a statement as to the currency in which made out, specifying whether gold, silver, or paper.

"STATEMENTS AT TIME OF ENTRY.

"Sec. 402. That the owner, importer, consignee, or agent, making entry of imported merchandise, shall set forth upon the invoice, or statement in the form of an invoice, and in the entry, in addition to the statements required by the law in existence at the time of the enactment of this act such statements, under oath if required, as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"CONVERSION OF CURRENCY.

"Sec. 403. (a) That section 25 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 25. That the value of foreign coin as expressed in the money of account of the United States shall be that of the pure metal of such coin of standard value; and the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations of the world shall be estimated quarterly by the Director of the Mint and be proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury quarterly on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year.'

"(b) For the purpose of the assessment and collection of duties upon merchandise imported into the United States on or after the day of the enactment of this act, wherever it is necessary to convert foreign currency into currency of the United States, such conversion, except as provided in subdivision (c), shall be made at the values proclaimed by the Secretary under the provisions of section 25 of such act of August 27, 1894, for the quarter in which the merchandise was expected.

"(c) If no such value has been proclaimed, or if the value so proclaimed varies by 5 per cent or more from a value measured by the buying rate in the New York market at noon on the day of exportation, conversion shall be made at a value measured by such buying rate. For the purposes of this subdivision such buying rate shall be the buying rate for cable transfers payable in the foreign currency so to be converted; and shall be de-termined by the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and certified daily to the Secretary, who shall make it public at such times and to such extent as he deems necessary. In ascertaining such buying rate such Federal reserve bank may in its discretion (1) take into consideration the last ascertainable transactions and quotations, whether direct or through the exchange of other currencies, and (2) if there is no market buying rate for such cable transfers, calculate such rate from actual transactions and quotations in demand or time bills of exchange.

SUBMARINE CABLES.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 535) to prevent the unauthorized landing of submarine cables in the United States, which were, on page 1, line 8, to strike out "however"; on page 1, line 9, after "any" to insert "such"; on page 1, line 12, to strike out "of the approval of"; on page 1, line 12, after "act" to insert "takes effect: And provided further, That the conditions of this act shall not apply to cables, all of which, including both terminals, lie wholly within the continental United States"; on page 1, line 14, after "satisfied," to insert "after due notice and hearing"; on page 2, line 15, after "act," to strike out the remainder of the section and insert "When any such cable is about to be or is landed or is being operated, without a license, any district court of the United States exercising jurisdiction in the district in which such cable is about to be or is landed, or any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties, shall have jurisdiction, at the suit of the United States, to enjoin the landing or operation of such cable or to compel, by injunction, the removal thereof," and to amend the title so as to read: "An act relating to the landing and operation of submarine cables in the United States."

Mr. KELLGOG. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator what changes, if any, have been made?

Mr. KELLOGG. I can state them in a moment.

The only material change is that made by amendment numbered 4, excepting cables laid between portions of continental United States. The telephone companies thought the bill as passed by the Senate would interfere with their lines laid under rivers and harbors. There was no such intention, and I do not think the bill would have interfered with them, but such cables have been excepted.

The second amendment simply limits the right to bring a suit to the United States. I think it was limited in that way anyhow, but the House thought it should be made clear.

That is all there is to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH. I have not entered into this debate, Mr. President, up to the present time because I felt that, perhaps, the committee which had this matter in charge, as patriotic men, had investigated the situation and thoroughly ascertained the needs of the Government, and that the bill reported by them reflected these needs; but there are repeated in this bill certain evils and misrepresentations in reference to our coastal de-fenses and our naval bases that need to be brought to the attention of this body.

After the World War broke out, when we were swept into that maelstrom and the call came to defend this country from a possible overrunning by the forces that were rapidly gaining the ascendancy in Europe, when we thought it was our patriotic duty not only to defend the honor of the American flag which had been outraged upon the high seas but to carry our resentment as well as our defense against our enemy to the shores of a foreign country, and the summons came to the American boys to respond to the defense of America, it is not on the record that that section of the country which I in part have the honor to represent was derelict in its duty.

Ah, Mr. President, when that red line of battle was rapidly sweeping over the soil of devoted France and approaching even the shores of England, when the British had their backs to the wall and could go no farther, and France was bled white, the record shows that the Thirtieth Division, composed of southern boys, broke the Hindenberg line and let in the first ray of hope to the struggling and devoted armies of the Allies.

There was no sectional question then raised; but now that we come to the question of appropriating money gathered from all the people for the common defense of this country against a contingency that none of us knows when and where it may arise, is it possible that the old prejudice, the old sectional prejudice, will leave this country exposed to an enemy because some desire that no appropriations be made south of a given point?

I am going to submit to the Senate some figures and statistics covering the entire expenditures of our Government from its inception to the present day, showing where we have expended the money for the naval defense of America. Before I enter upon that, however, Mr. President, when, day before yesterday, the question arose as to whether or not we would continue an appropriation made in 1918 to provide adequate docking facilities in the South Atlantic and leave the question to the Secretary of the Navy and to a naval commission as to whether or not in their wisdom they would use the money, or whether its expenditure would be postponed for four years, the vote of the Senate was for postponement, and yet we are proposing to vote into this bill money for the immediate construction of battle-ships that in case of accident can not enter a harbor south of Cape Hatteras.

There has been so much misrepresentation as to the facilities at Charleston that for a little while I am going to devote myself not to what I, who would be a prejudiced witness perhaps, have thought or said about it, but what admirals of the Navy charged with the duty of investigating the question have had to say.

I have submitted to writing the preliminaries leading up to the matter, but I do not propose to lose the interest of those who are doing me the honor of listening to me by confining myself entirely to manuscript. This matter, however, is of such im-portance and involves a principle of such magnitude that I think I am justified in calling it to the attention of the Senate. If it is a common country, then let us commonly defend it. If we take the taxes from all the people to build dry docks and battleships, then protect all the people in every section. There has been shed on the sanguinary fields of France as much blood from southern veins as from the veins of those of any other section, and they will do it again. Thank God, south of Mason and Dixon's line, in that devoted center, is the purest and most unadulterated American blood in America to-day! If ever war or foreign foe should invade this country, or threaten its invasion, in every other portion of this country compatriots of theirs in great numbers would be found; but in my section of the country, thank God, the population is from the loins of those who sleep on the battle fields of the Revolution. Every step in the progress and development of this country has been nurtured by the blood of the forbears of the white population of the South, pure and unadulterated; and yet hear me when I come to what has been done for the common defense, when I come to the sordid material appropriation of money under the guise of the defense of the Government.

There has been so much misrepresentation, both intentional and unintentional, in reference to the Charleston Navy Yard and the general naval situation on the South Atlantic coast from Hatteras to Key West, and from Key West to Galveston, that I shall take the time of the Senate to go into this matter in more or less detail and at length.

In the first place, it might be well to consider what preparations have been made for defense on the Atlantic seaboard. I take it that the stupendous appropriation for naval purposes is primarily, fundamentally, for the defense of our country. Let us see how this work has been done.

From the beginning of Federal appropriation for naval purposes to June 30, 1919, there has been appropriated-listen; I want every Senator on this floor to hear this-there has been appropriated, from the first appropriation bill ever passed for naval purposes in this Government to June 30, 1919, north of Hatteras, $632,369,264.12. Let me repeat that. Up to June 30, 1919, there had been appropriated north of Hatteras, in a distance of 580 miles, $632,369,264.12. South of Hatteras to Galveston, a distance of two thousand odd miles, for all naval purposes in all the history of this country there had been appropriated $69,404,213.47; and that includes aircraft and other training stations, and so forth.

There are north of Hatteras at present 18 dry docks, including the 3 largest dry docks that are capable of berthing our largest capital ships and largest ships of the merchant marine. South of Hatteras there is 1 small dry dock; north of Hatteras there are 18 Government dry docks. North, in a distance of there are 18 Government dry docks. North, in a distance of will not vote to repeat and repeat the blue 580 miles, there are 18 Government dry docks. South of Hatteras, in a distance of two thousand odd miles, there is 1 small dock, located at Charleston, with a small floating dock at New Orleans. This coast line south of Hatteras is the base of defense of the South Atlantic, Caribbean Sea, Gulf of Mexico, and Panama Canal.

Now I want to get the location and number of these docks.

Portsmouth, N. H., 1 dock. Boston, 2 docks; South Boston, 1 dock; total, 3.

New York, 4.

Philadelphia, 3.

Norfolk, 6, 3 of which are Emergency Fleet Corporation docks on naval property.

South of Hatteras, Charleston, 1. Mr. President, under the act of Congress of August 29, 1916, a committee was appointed to investigate this whole situation and to report their findings to Congress. The following, in part, is the wording of that act:

The President is hereby authorized to appoint a commission of five officers-

And then it goes on to state what they shall do on the Pacific coast. On the South Atlantic-

Said commission shall investigate and report upon the necessity, desirability, and advisability of improving existing or establishing an additional navy yard or naval station on the Atlantic coast south of Cape Hatieras or on or near the United States coast of the Gulf of Mexico or in the Caribbean Sea, of a character adequate for the proper naval defense of that portion of the country. Said report shall contain all the information of like character as directed in the preceding paragraph relating to the investigation and report as to the Pacific coast.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SMITH. I yield. Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Is the Senator aware of the fact that the port of Brunswick, Ga., is one of the very finest in the South Atlantic and that it does not get one dollar under this bill or any other!

Mr. SMITH. Yes, Mr. President; unfortunately that is the ase. I hate to say this; God knows I do. If the facts did not force me to do it I would not do it, because I am the last one to stand here and even intimate sectional difference in this, the dawn of the world's resurrection from the late cataclysm of blood and murder.

Surely if the time ever was when North and South and East and West should join hands under a common flag for the hope and prosperity of a common country it is now; and the other day, when this question came up of the defense of 2,000 miles of the Atlantic seaboard, I did regret more than I can express to see that party lines were drawn almost to the vote.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator to call attention to one fact? There was an old established navy yard at Pensacola. It was a Government reservation of splendid development. There is no finer harbor in the country than Pensacola. A ship can come limping into that harbor on the darkest night drawing 35 feet of water. The entire American Navy can float in that harbor. That navy yard was abandoned when Secretary Meyer was Secretary of the Navy. The Government had bought a splendid dry dock at Habana, Cuba, right after the Spanish-American War and brought it to Pensacola and operated it there for a while. That dry dock was transported to somewhere in New Hampshire, or some other point in the North, and sold for about one-fourth of what it cost the Government, and the navy yard abandoned.

Mr. SMITH. Perhaps the reason was that Pensacola is located in the South.

This commission was to be composed of admirals of the Navy, or at least none below the rank of commander; so we had Rear Admiral Helm, George McElroy, W. L. Capps, Rousseau, and Chambers. These composed this commission to investigate where, if at any place on the South Atlantic coast, this great dry dock should be placed. Now, listen! Of course, located in the section that it is, Charleston Harbor immediately came in for gross misrepresentation. This misrepresentation, as I said before, has come from those who, parrotlike, willing witnesses, swift witnesses, were reiterating misrepresentations, statements taken from the mouths of those who knew better. Now, listen to what Admiral Helm said before this commission was appointed. Before quoting him, let me say the defense of this country is a common matter. It is a common burden. It is a common duty, and those on the other side should hear the presentation of the cold, unvarnished facts.

I do not propose to stand here and vote for an appropriation the volume of which may be needed for the defense of my country, but the allocation of which is to be borne in a pork barrel and put where it is not needed; and, so help me God, I will not vote to repeat and repeat the blunder that I am trying

Right in this connection let me call your attention to a table that I got from the Navy Department yesterday. I want to give you some facts in reference to our coast line, and where you will defend it, and who is to defend it, and for what purpose you will defend it. That is what I propose to show. Now, listen 1

How many ships have we in the Navy up to the present time, and what are their sizes?

We have in actual commission, fit for service, 817; under construction or authorized, 104; total, 921.

What is the size of these ships? The Arizona, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Idaho, Mississippi, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, and Wyoming, comprising 16 of these vessels, requiring the largest docks, are an average of something over 500 feet in length. They run 600, 554, 510, 600, 575 feet, and so forth, averaging about 550 feet, costing per ship $12,000,000, $10,000,000, $8,000,000, $14,000,000, $20,000,000, and so forth. In addition to these we have a few larger sized vessels, the California, the Colorado, the Maryland, the Washington, the West Virginia, the South Dakota, the Indiana, the Montana, the North Carolina, the Iowa, and the Massachusetts, averaging over There are in that class 11, which, added to the 16, make 27 averaging 600 feet or over in length. Then we have the Lexington, the Constellation, the Saratoga, the Ranger, the Constitution, and the United States, 850 feet each.

Where can these vessels be taken care of? Mark you, we have 33 of these monstrous vessels, and in case of war or accident, where could they be docked? In all the Pacific coast, which is more than 2,000 miles, and in more than 2,000 miles of the South Atlantic, along the whole American coast, where could they be docked in case of accident or for repair?

According to information furnished by Rear Admiral D. W. Taylor, the present dry docks that could accommodate these vessels are, one at Boston, one at Philadelphia, one at Norfolk, one at New York, one at Puget Sound, and one at Pearl Harbor, in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH. I yield. Mr. ROBINSON. Is there no dry dock on the Atlantic coast south of Norfolk that is capable of docking large vessels in the

Mr. SMITH. Not one. The Utah is the largest that can be docked south of Norfolk. I read the report from the admiral showing that the Utah is the largest type that can go into Charleston, and I will give the dimensions of the Utah, as well as the dimensions of the Charleston dry dock. The dock is 548 feet long, and the Utah is 510 feet long, and all of these other vessels I have named are longer than that.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator has just stated that there are docks at Boston, Philadelphia, and New York which are capable of docking all of these large vessels.

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. What explanation has the Senator to give of the fact that the entire Atlantic coast line south of Norfolk has no provision of that character? What is the reason?

Mr. SMITH. There is none upon the face of the earth that I know of, except that north of Hatteras was the territory of the predominant party for 50 years, and south of Hatteras represents the minority of this Chamber.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield further?
Mr. SMITH. Certainly.
Mr. ROBINSON. It seems unaccountable that the entire American coast line south of Norfolk should be without any facilities capable of rendering this very indispensable service to the Navy of the United States. Have the commissions or commiltees who have investigated the matter given a reason for the distribution of these large dry docks in one small portion of the coast line?

Mr. SMITH. I am going to read from the report of the admiral pleading for dry docks south of Hatteras.

Mr. ROBINSON. When was that plea made?

Mr. SMITH. Just let me read it.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Will the Senator from South Carolina allow me just a word in answer to the Senator from Arkansas'

Mr. SMITH. Certainly. Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Two of the finest natural ports, not in any way due to dredging but made by nature, thrown out of the hands of God, are Port Royal and Brunswick, and neither of those names, "Port Royal" or "Brunswick," occurs in this bill or in any other bills pending in this Chamber.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further statement?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is well known by everybody who has a reasonable degree of knowledge of the subject, and I am looking for some one in this Chamber who has repeatedly declared his antagonism to proceeding with the building of the only dock capable of docking these vessels on that part of the Atlantic coast to give a reason for his attitude.

Mr. SMITH. That is the reason why I am speaking to-day. I am asking what reason there is, other than one based on sectionalism or the "pork barrel," for betraying the country. It is nothing short of that. There is not a Senator in the sound of my voice but who knows that every foreign country is thoroughly aware of the defenseless condition of 2,000 miles of the coast of our common country.

In addition to that, where is the greatest natural waterway of this great continent? Where does the father of waters enter into the sea? Where is the point of attack by the naval force that split the Confederacy and sounded its doom? It was on the Mississippi River, the father of waters. Yet not a single dock is built south of Hatteras to take care of the untold millions of dollars invested in capital battleships, and but one on the western coast. They did build one at Pearl Harbor, but from a study of the conditions surrounding that improvement I find that there is a reef just outside of Pearl Harbor, or is alleged to be, which makes it impracticable to dock a ship there. that even beloved Hawaii has not the advantage of a big dry dock, in a practical sense.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH. I yield. Mr. ROBINSON. It would seem that in the exercise of a reasonable precaution respecting the subject, at least one of those large docks would be provided for the Pacific coast, and that at least one, probably more, for the long stretch of coast line to which the Senator has just referred as being totally unprovided with such facilities.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I will anticipate what I had to say. It may be I shall have to repeat it; but I intend to go into the preliminary report of the Helm Commission. I was told by members of the Naval Affairs Committee that one of the reasons which induced them to offer bills for the repeal of the authorization of the dry dock and deepening of the channel at Charleston was that the Helm Commission, to which I have referred, had not yet reported, and that perhaps that commission might recommend one at Guantanamo, on the island of Cuba. They were not going to let it come to the continent of America, but they might recommend Guantanamo, Cuba, a for-eign country, for the defense of the South Atlantic, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Caribbean Sea, as well as the Isthmian Canal, into which canal we put more than $400,000,000 of the American people's money.

I am going to leave it to the other side to explain why 18 dry docks were built and $700,000,000 have been spent along 500 miles of our coast to the north of Hatteras, and for actual naval purposes less than $30,000,000 in 2,000 miles to the south of Hatteras, and now come here with a bill to appropriate half a billion dollars and ask us to vote for the construction of battleships costing $40,000,000 each, which, in case of a naval engagement south of Hatteras, would have no place to go for repairs. Hatteras is the boneyard of ships and the most dangerous part on the Atlantic seaboard, clearly dividing the North and South. In case an engagement should occur south of Hatteras-and every admiral who has expressed an opinion says this is the region where the next naval battle is likely to occurthere is not a single dry dock, and not only not a single dry dock but not a channel deepened sufficiently in that entire 2,000 miles of southern coast to admit anchorage and harbor for the distressed vessel.

Yet we are asked to increase this enormous number of ships by 11 or 12 more, all of which can be docked north of Hatteras

Let us hear what Admiral Helm had to say.

Mr. SIMMONS and Mr. BALL rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina first, and then I will yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before the Senator proceeds with the Helm report. I want to ask him if the discrimination to which he has referred could have been defended at any time in our history, or if it can be defended now, since we have built the Panama Canal and adopted this policy of constantly shifting our naval vessels from one ocean to the other ocean, making it necessary, In the course of the process, for them to go down and come up the coast?

Mr. SMITH. It is absolutely indefensible, and I stood on the floor of the Senate and in my modest way—characteristically modest—simply asked that they not put a time limit on a defense of all my section, but leave it to my friend the enemy, Mr. Denby, for none of us knows what hour a war cloud may rise, when it would be too late.

Now I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BALL. I beg the Senator's pardon for interrupting him, but there are some statements the Senator is making, I think probably thoughtlessly, that should be corrected.

Mr. SMITH. I would be delighted to have that done, for I am trying to stay well within the facts.

Mr. BALL. The first is as to the location of dry docks. There are 18 dry docks on the Atlantic coast. The Senator charges sectionalism, North and South, in controling the location of those dry docks. You will find seven of those dry docks in the South, and one of the largest at Norfolk. There are 7 in the South, and there are 11 in the North. Most of the northern dry docks are small, several of them being only 300 feet in length.

Mr. ROBINSON, Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is there any dry dock on the Atlantic coast south of Norfolk capable of taking the vessels which the Senator from South Carolina described a moment ago?

Mr. BALL. There is not; and I would like to state fur-

Mr. ROBINSON. I call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact, then, that he has corroborated literally the statement made by the Senator from South Carolina. statement of the Senator from South Carolina was that there is a large dry dock at Boston, another at New York, and another at Philadelphia, and that there is none south of Norfolk large enough to dock the vessels which he described. The Senator from South Carolina has not said, if I understood him correctly, that there are no dry docks south of Norfolk. His statement was that there is no large dock south of Norfolk capable of taking the large naval vessels.

Mr. SMITH. There is but one dock, and that a small one, south of Norfolk, and that is at Charleston, and a small floating dock at New Orleans; and I included in my statement—

I would like to finish my remark-

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from South Carolina has the floor, and the Senator from South Carolina can say who can Will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me for a further statement?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly. Mr. ROBINSON. The improvement and enlargement of the dry dock at Charleston is the subject matter of this controversy, and if this appropriation is permanently held up or denied, there will be no large dry dock south of Norfolk for a great

Mr. SMITH. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to a misstatement he made a moment ago. When I read the table I included Norfolk as well as the others. Hatteras was the dividing line, and it is very plain why it was necessary to put this at Norfolk, because between the two capes-Cape Charles and Cape Henry-is the entrance to that inland waterway, the Chesapeake, that necessarily must take care of the situation there. Therefore, on account of its situa-

Mr. BALL. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Ashurst in the chair).
Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I wish to interrupt just once more to complete my statement. The provision in the bill does not repeal the order for authorization for a large dry dock at Charleston. It merely prevents the expenditure of any money until 1924, and it was agreed by the Senator from South Carolina that that provision should be put in the bill at that time.

Mr. SMITH. Yes, Mr. President; and I am coming to

Mr. BALL. I wish to state further the reason why the committee that was sent to make this investigation, after having studied the reports of the engineers that were authorized to locate the various dry docks, took any action of this kind. The action was taken on account of the condition existing on the Pacific coast. We have no large dry dock on the Pacific coast at all except at the Panama Canal and at Pearl Harbor. On the entire Pacific coast we have only the one large dry dock, and that is but 100 feet longer than the dry dock at Charleston. The committee considered it necessary that the first large dry dock to be built should be constructed on the Pacific coast, There is where the immediate demand exists for a large dry dock.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield to me that I may ask the Senator from Delaware a question?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Delaware, who has just given the information that the committee thinks a large dry dock should be built on the Pacific coast before any further dry dock is built on the Atlantic coast, if the committee went into the question to find out why no dry docks had heretofore been constructed on the Pacific coast and why that has not been done before this time?

Mr. BALL. Why it has not been done?

Mr. SMITH. Yes.

Mr. BALL. I should like to answer that question by stating that the board was only appointed in 1916 or 1917 to make the investigation, or just before the war. The war came on and they then were assigned to other duties and they have not had time for that reason to complete their investigation.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I must decline to permit any further extended interruption, although I shall be glad to vield for a question. I wish to say in response to the remark just made by the Senator from Delaware to the effect that the commission to investigate this condition was only appointed in 1916, that appropriations for dry docks have been going on for many years throughout the history of this country and the question has not yet been answered. Was it not known by this body that we had a Pacific coast line to defend? Was it not known by this body that we had a South Atlantic coast line to defend? Surely our Naval Committee is not composed of men who do not know the geography of their country and must get information from a specially appointed board about where things are located.

Mr. President, I wish for a little while to address myself to answering the charges that have been made on this side, to my astonishment, as well as on the other side, not to my astonishment, that Charleston is absolutely impractical for the purposes of a large dry dock. Before ever this commission was appointed in 1916 to acquaint the American people with the fact that we had 2,000 miles of South Atlantic seaboard and 2,000 miles of Pacific coast that might need defense in case of an emergency, Admiral Helm said, when he was commandant of the Charleston Navy Yard, the following:

of the Charleston Navy Yard, the following:

During the last 12 years since the establishment of the navy yard at Charleston the enterprise has come in for a vast deal of misrepresentation. Nevertheless, even under hostile administrations, it has grown and expanded; the fact is, as all naval men recognize, that with the opening of the Panama Canal the Charleston Navy Yard becomes an invaluable asset of the Navy. The prime purpose of the canal is to afford a quick means of transferring our battleships from our Atlantic to our Pacific coast. The incomparable superiority of the Charleston Navy Yard lies in the fact that not only is it the nearest yard of first-class equipment to the Panama Canal, but it is the only yard south of Norfolk which is impregnable against attack by sea. Charleston, although under seige throughout two great wars, has never been captured by water. Its defenses to-day guarantee it against such a fate in future and make the Charleston Navy Yard, sheltered from storm and protected against any hostile fleet, the great strategic base from which any possible naval warfare of the future is most likely to be conducted.

That was Admiral Helm's testimony in 1914. Now listen to

That was Admiral Helm's testimony in 1914. Now listen to Admiral Edwards in reference to the same matter. The Cenator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the other day when this question was up, said that he wanted a little more light. I hope and trust that in my feeble efforts I am giving him some little light about Charleston, about the defenses of our coast, and about our appropriations. Admiral Edwards said, in an article prepared by him for the Engineering Review in 1916:

by him for the Engineering Review in 1916:

It behooves the thoughtful and progressive officer of the Navy to give immediate, extended, and careful consideration concerning the possibilities of development of the Charleston (S. C.) naval station. Whether viewed from a financial, industrial, or strategic standpoint, the progressive, if not the rapid development of this naval station intimately concerns the efficiency and operation of the fleet.

For military and strategic reasons it appears of paramount importance that there be developed on the Atlantic coast at some point south of Cape Hatteras a naval station capable of docking and repairing our largest and most important battleships. The protection of the Isthmian Canal, a project that involved an expenditure of about $400,000,000, combined with the general existing belief upon the part of naval experts that if the fleet of the United States will ever be called upon to engage in battle the contest will take place in the Caribbean, makes it a matter of importance to the efficiency of the fleet that there be developed on the mainland of the Atlantic coast (and independent of any projected outlying naval base) a first-class naval station,

That refers to Guantanamo on the island of Cuba, but he said, independent of that, that a first-class naval station shall be here established.

Continuing, he said:

The channel and harbor conditions-

I invite the attention of the Senator from Ohio to this, because I inferred from his query of me that he was in doubt as to Charleston being a proper place for a yard of this dimension.

The channel and harbor conditions of the Charleston Navy Yard, together with its industrial possibilities, appear to be measured by some of our naval experts from conditions existing about the period of the close of the Civil War. As evidence of the satisfactory existing character and extent of the channel conditions on the navy yard water front, it is only necessary to state that the battleship Connecticut about two years ago, with packed bunkers and a full supply of ammunition and stores, made a complete turn in the channel in front of the navy yard and proceeded to sea without the aid of tugs.

Of course, that was before the day of the enormous battleships

Now, Mr. President, from the report of this commission I want to put into the Record not what those locally interested but what those who were charged with this investigation say about this business, and see what excuse our Naval Committee and those charged with the solemn responsibility of preparing an adequate defense for this country have for their action in this respect. I quote from a report by Admiral Rodgers, made in response to an inquiry from that commission:

in response to an inquiry from that commission:

2. Attention is first called to the very able report of the "Board organized for the purpose of examining into expediency of changing the location of the naval station from Port Royal, S. C., to some point in the State of South Carolina at or near the city of Charleston," of which Rear Admiral Frederick Rodgers, United States Navy, was president, a copy of which is appended marked "A."

The report of this board lays down nine principal requisites for a naval station on the southern Atlantic coast of the United States and gives an excellent account of conditions existing here at the time it was written (1900–1901) with certain predictions as to depth of channel and railroad connections, and a guaranty of water supply, all of which may be said to have been fulfilled.

The scope of the Rodgers Board, however, was limited to a consideration of the relative merits of Port Royal and the vicinity of Charleston only, whereas the problem now presented takes in the consideration of the "necessity, desirability, and advisability of improving existing or establishing an additional navy yard or naval station on the Atlantic coast south of Cape Hatteras or on or near the United States coast of the Gulf of Mexico or in the Caribbean for the proper defense of that portion of the country."

Now listen!

Now listen!

Now listen!

In answering question 1 it is therefore necessary to take into consideration the geographical location of Charleston as compared with other places on the coast, Gulf, and Caribbean, as indicated above.

Question 1 (pt. 1). "What do you consider the principal advantages of Charleston as a navy yard?"

In answering this question the following are considered as being the requisites for a navy yard in the vicinity indicated:

(a) Proper geographical location.

(b) Accessibility from the sea.

(c) Immunity from attack.

(d) Protection from unusual storm tides.

(e) Safe and commodious anchorage in the immediate vicinity of the naval station.

(f) Health and sanitation, including a good water supply.

(g) Railroad and steamship facilities.

(h) A good labor supply.

(i) The suitability of the site selected as to extent of water front and as to character of soil for foundation of docks and heavy buildings.

(j) Reasonable cost of establishment, including cost of dredging in the approaches and on the water front.

It is my belief that Charleston has the preponderance of advantages in these items over any other location available in the limits as set forth above.

Then the report proceeds:

Then the report proceeds:

Then the report proceeds:

The advantages, taken in order, are as follows:

(a) Geographical location of Charleston: The distance from Portsmouth, N. H., to Hampton Roads, Va., is about 580 miles. In this distance we have the following navy yards: (a) Portsmouth, (b) Boston, (c) New York, (d) Philadelphia, (e) Norfolk, five in all.

From Hampton Roads to Key West there is a stretch of coast of approximately 1,000 miles, Charleston being slightly north of the center of this stretch, about 415 miles from Hampton Roads and 588 miles from Key West. In all this coast line Charleston is the only harbor offering facilities for a navy yard with positive assurance of a deep channel from the sea at a reasonable cost of original construction and yearly maintenance and with a protected anchorage ground for a large number of vessels of deep draft.

An idea of the advantage of location may be formed from the following:

Constitution of the Consti

Its central position on the long stretch of coast below Cape Hatteras and its comparative proximity to the Gulf, Caribbean, and isthmian ports make Charleston a port of strategic importance.

The document goes on and gives the reports of the different admirals. On page 245, volume 6, it is said:

I further believe it desirable and advisable to seek a suitable base on the Caribbean, and if such can be found work on Guantanamo to cease and military equipments transferred to new base, as I believe Guantanamo can not be held against an enemy having control of the sea and would become an asset to him if taken.

I shall enlarge on this after a while, but here is what he has to say about the Charleston Harbor:

to say about the Charleston Harbor:

Answer. 1. Necessity: I believe that the improvement of this yard for defense of coast south of Cape Harteras and for a harbor of refuge for disabled vessels in time of war is a necessity.

The enormous extent of our coast makes the problem of defense different from that of any other country and necessitates a larger number of bases for protection and from which the enemy may be attacked or harassed, with sufficient docks and equipment to make repairs to such vessels as may need them. Such bases should offer safe ancherage for a large number of vessels, with protection from bombardment from an enemy's vessels or attack by torpedo boats or submarines. Charleston is a port where all of these requirements may be developed at a reasonable outlay and maintained at a reasonable cost.

The cost of one capital ship at the present day is more than sufficient to improve this yard and harbor far beyond the recommendations made herein.

The cost of one capital ship at the present day is more than sufficient to improve this yard and harbor far beyond the recommendations made herein.

The first consideration for protection should, of course, be given to the coast from Norfolk up, as this is our most vital point, from which the sources of supply of all war material is controlled.

The offensive fleet must be kept mobilized in force, as only an offensive action can produce a decided victory, but should a fleet sufficiently superior to make the risk of battle inadvisable approach and our fleet withdraw to the shelter of coast defenses it is to my mind questionable in view of the experience of the present war whether it is proper tactics to withdraw all vessels into one port or within a limited area.

As an example, the present German fleet, as far as we know, is now and has been for some time confined to a very limited area by what is probably a superior fleet. Had Germany a large sea front, with other protected bases where vessels could be berthed, equipped, or built, the problem of keeping the sea free from German war vessels would be much more difficult than it is now. The capture of a well-protected harbor on the mainland of a country having facilities for movement of troops and at a distance from the bases of the attacking force is a difficult undertaking, as is evidenced by the attack of the allied powers on the Dardanelles.

An inferior fleet may safely lie in such a harbor and await conditions that will warrant a battle, selecting their own time. The attacking enemy must keep open his lines of communication for supplies and an adjacent base known to be capable of berthing a considerable force and distant far enough by sea to require the separation of a still stronger unit of the attacking fleet to watch it, but in easy communication by communication.

Distant outlying bases, however, though well fortified, but dependent upon the control of means of communication no longer exists, as is evidenced by the capture of Port Arthur by the Japanese

Mr. President, I wish to read an extract which is found in the report of the same commission:

Admiral Benson, Chief of Naval Operations, uses the following words his evidence before the Committee on Naval Affairs on March 10, in his evidence before the Committee on Naval Affairs on March 16, 1916:

"I do think that we ought to have a good yard somewhere south of Hatteras, with docks and places where ships in case of injury in battle, or for other reasons, could get into dock without having to come to our northern yards. There is the case of the Lion in the Dogger Bank battle, which is a very good illustration of how a vessel may be saved after she is badly injured by being able to get into dock without having to go too far; and my ideas are not changed—or, I mean to say, the necessity for it has been emphasized—as to having some place down in that vicinity where we could have docks to which vessels could be taken."

in that vicinity where we could have docks to which vessels could be taken."

Whether an outlying naval base should also be established on some island in the Caribbean is another question. That is of use only in the event we control the sea. This is a question of establishing a yard for use by all ships of the Navy, whether we do or do not control the sea. To construct and equip a first-class yard beyond the protection of our land forces would be to make such a yard a dangerous liability instead of an asset in the event of a naval defeat.

The port of Charleston is located about 400 miles south of Hatteras. It is directly north of the Panama Canal and its salling distances of the warious ports on this coast as well as the sailing distances of the various ports on this coast as well as the sailing distances from the other yards on the North Atlantic to the Panama Canal via the Windward Channel are as follows: Portsmouth, N. H., 2.174 miles; Boston, Mass., 2.157 miles; New York, N. Y., 1.974 miles; Philadelphia, Pa., 1.946 miles; Norfolk, Va., 1.779 miles; Wilmington, N. C., 1,612 miles; Charleston, S. C., 1,564 miles; Savannah, Ga., 1,574 miles; Jackson-ville, Fla., 1,527 miles.

There is no port on the South Atlantic coast which is nearer, and with better rail connections to the centers of industry, from which can he rapidly assembled skilled workmen and supplies, from that port of Charleston. Nor is there any port better situated with reference to our arsenals and Army posts, from which could be drawn military forces and ammunition for its protection. While a yard located lower down the coast might be slightly nearer Panama and the West Indies, it is seen from the sailing distances above given that this difference is inconsiderable.

On the other hand, there is no harbor on the South Atlantic outside of the harbor of Charleston, and possibly the harbor of Port Royal, wherein a large fleet could be assembled, and one of the essential elements of a yard of the first magnitude is the possibility of assembling a l

There are other extracts from the report of the admirals along the same line, which I ask to have inserted in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

While representatives of the naval committees may patiently listen to suggestions that would locate all of our Atlantic coast naval bases at points north of Cape Hatteras, it is quite certain that the great majority of both naval committees view with surprise the attitude of naval experts upon this subject. This belief is due to the fact that although there have been numerous attempts during the last 50 years to abandon certain naval stations on the Atlantic coast, the only substantial success attained in this direction has been in the case of New London, and even it was reopened several months ago as a repair base for the submarine flotilla.

Mr. SMITH. Now, in Senate Document No. 344, Sixty-fourth Congress, page 22, Admiral Edwards said:

Charleston, S. C., has the same tariff freight rates to the coal fields of Virginia as Norfolk. As it has likewise modern coaling piers, high-grade fuel can be shipped as cheaply from Charleston as from Norfolk or Newport News.

And let me add right here, Mr. President, that since that statement was made the Standard Oil Co. has erected there, at a cost of millions of dollars, a tank distributing service.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President-The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

I merely desire to remind my colleague that Mr. DIAL. Charleston is the largest loading oil station on the eastern coast of the United States.

Mr. SMITH. It is, as my colleague calls my attention to the fact, the largest oiling station on the eastern coast. Vessels coming from the Gulf, unable to carry the fuel necessary to carry them across the ocean, refuel at Charleston. Of course, such facilities are limited to those vessels that can come up a channel now 30 feet deep. The proposition of the Navy Department was to dredge the channel to a depth of 40 feet. I shall have something more to say about the question of the expense of the dredging and deepening of the channel in the remarks which I shall make. However, continuing with Admiral Edwards. He says:

It is an extensive and important center for distributing fuel oil. Every railroad system traversing the coastal region between the south-ern Appalachians and the sea has terminal piers at this port.

Listen:

It has more deep-water frontage and deep-water anchorage ground than any harbor on our South Atlantic coast. It is the logical and national deep-water Atlantic terminal scaport for the industrial activi-ties of east Tennessee, South Carolina, and the southern portion of hattonal deep-water Atlantic terminal scaport for the industrial activities of east Tennessee, South Carolina, and the southern portion of North Carolina.

No American fleet could operate for a protracted period in the Caribbean without establishing on the Atlantic coast a naval base south of Cape Hatteras, and Charleston is the only port on that stretch of coast which can be adequately developed into such a base.

Mr. POMERENE. Who says that?

Mr. SMITH. I am still quoting from Admiral Edwards.

Despite the expenditure involved in such development—and the ultimate outlay should not be less than $8,000,000—this important work should be commenced without delay. A modern dry dock should be constructed, at least two deep-draft battleship piers built, a 150-ton stationary or revolving crane installed, additional industrial shops and storehouses obtained, a magazine for powder and projectiles provided, a suitable hospital established, additional barracks erected, and the channel to the sea improved.

Now, listen:

The development of this station means more to naval preparedness than the building of even two battleships, for it would compel every possible naval foe to extend its battle line several hundred miles, and at least a half dozen more opposing ships would have to be employed in such service.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. SMITH. I do. Mr. HARRIS. During the last war the greatest trouble we had in conducting the war was due to the congestion of freight in New York Harbor and that section of the East. Is it not true that if we had had these large docks in the South, on the Atlantic, and the Pacific it would have relieved that congestion, besides making it easier for ships to reach both oceans through the canal?

Mr. SMITH. I am coming to that later. I had the honor of being the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee of this body when we were in the midst of the World War, and I shall refer to that later in my speech. The differential in freight rates on freight originating in the Mississippi Valley for export congests our great transcontinental lines going to these eastern ports by virtue of the saving in the tariff discriminating against the South Atlantic and the Gulf coasts.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it not true that the railroads give a differential rate in favor of the port of Charleston as against interior intermediate points from the great northern distributing centers-New York, Philadelphia, and Boston?

Mr. SMITH. I will ask the Senator to repeat his query.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I say, is it not true that the railroads give a discriminating freight rate, a lower freight rate, to the city of Charleston from the great northern distributing points, such as Boston, as against intermediate and interior points on the same line?

Mr. SMITH. The Senator refers to the long and short haul clause in our railroad law Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.

Mr. SMITH. Which was true of every seaport in America; but that is neither here nor there, Mr. President.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator allow me to follow that up by another question?

Mr. SMITH. Yes

Mr. POINDEXTER. That being the case for the purpose of preventing the movement of commodities by water, is it not true that you never can build up the maritime interests of the city of Charleston as long as that condition exists?

Mr. SMITH. I agree with my good friend from Washington that a great deal of damage has been done to the water shipment of the products of this country by virtue of the maladjusted long and short haul.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will promise the Senator not to interrupt him further, but I should like to ask just one other question

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is it not true that the merchants of Charleston insist on retaining that discriminatory and preferential railroad rate for the purpose of compelling the goods to move by rail instead of moving by water, with the consequent building up of ship lines into that port?

Mr. SMITH. No, Mr. President; I have no evidence to that effect. All that Charleston has been asking, as well as other southern ports, is that whatever rates apply to goods for export originating in the interior should apply to the South Atlantic and Gulf as well as the northern ports. Under the last Railroad Administration we did get that concession, and now we are being denied it again. All that we asked in the world was that when goods originating in the interior for export were put upon the railroad to be carried to the seaboard the South Atlantic and the Gulf should be given the same rate that was given to the North Atlantic and the eastern ports. But what are the facts? The Senator is a member of the committee, and he origin of the goods in the interior.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am opposed to that discrimination, because I think that the fundamental rule of railroad rates ought to be uniformity. There ought not to be discrimination.

knows that the discrimination ran as high as 45 and 50 per cent in favor of the northern and eastern ports, regardless of the

Mr. SMITH. That is true, Mr. President. Mr. POINDEXTER. But, if the Senator will pardon me, I fail to see the consistency of those who oppose discrimination as between the northern ports and southern ports and favor discrimination as between Charleston and the neighboring cities of South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH. Every man familiar with the railroad problem knows that the problem of the proper adjustment of railroad rates to the needs of the citizens that dwell in the interior is as nice a problem as ever confronted a people. The rate structure is a scientific thing based upon economic truths; and I was not competent, with my limited knowledge of railroads and freight-rate making, to say dogmatically what should be the adjustment from an interior point to a seaport in order to take care of the life of an interior town. Atlanta is an illustration; but the bare statement of the facts, which can not be controverted, only proved that not only in the matter of the appropriation and construction of great naval bases was our section discriminated against, but in the structure of a tariff or freight rate our people were bled white. It is not an accident; no.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina further yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I ask the Senator what incentive there would be-and I ask the question in perfect good faithfor the Federal Government to expend a large sum of money to construct a 40-foot channel into the port of Charleston if you are going to allow a system of freight rates which would prevent any ship lines from operating into that port?

Mr. SMITH. A moment ago the Senator said that Charleston and the seaport towns were being favored, and now his argument seems to be that they are going along lines that would dry them up. I will make the statement that had the same facilities been given by the Federal Government to the South Atlantic and Gulf ports that have been given to the northern and eastern ports, we would not have found ourselves in the embarrassing, costly, and dangerous condition that we found ourselves in when we began to mobilize our resources for the prosecution of this war, and found that the only adequate terminals and docking facilities were in the port of New York; and it got so congested that you could not get the loaded cars in and the empties out. It was just the neck of a bottle, a point to which all the commerce of America converged, and which it could not get in nor out of. In addition to that, the cold winter of 1917-18 created such an ice congestion that it was impossible to bunker the ships even after you got the coal there, while under the kiss of a southern sun adequate harbors south were breathing a prayer to God that they might be utilized to save devoted civilization. That was the condition. The Senator knows it, and we all know it; but the great god of gold and greed had to be satiated before the suffering people could be

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President— The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. If the Senator is going to discuss this question of freight rates

Mr. SMITH. No.

Mr. POMERENE. I want to remind him that his section of the country is not the only section which is suffering. Let me give just a very few figures.

I have before me the rate on apples from Seattle, Wash., to Portland, $1.25 per hundred; but the rate from Seattle, Wash., to Columbus, Ohio, is $2.081.

The rate from Boston, Mass., to San Francisco and Seattle on agricultural implements is $1.70; but from Cincinnati, Lima, and Toledo, Ohio, to San Francisco and Seattle it is $2.764.

The rate on machinery and parts from Boston to San Francisco and Seattle is $2; but from Cincinnati, Lima, and Toledo to San Francisco and Seattle it is $3.03\frac{1}{2}.

I have quite a number of other figures here, so I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not think he is the only man who is suffering from these discriminations. Mr. SMITH. That is getting into a very fertile and interesting field, which some of us will be called upon to discuss in the near future in reference to the adjustment of this beautiful system we have right now known as railroad transportation. We will discuss that and we will go into all this subject. The point I was making, if the Senator from Ohio will observe, was that there was a broad, flat discrimination against the South Atlantic and Gulf ports in favor of the North Atlantic and eastern ports in all of the tariffs, and I just called attention to that to reinforce my argument about this sectional discrimination.

Mr. President, I do not like to weary the Senate, but I have quoted this much from those naval officers who have been and are in a position to know, in refutation of the ignorant and stupid misrepresentation of Charleston Harbor.

Subsequently to the appointment of the Helm Commission the Navy Department appointed a body of experts to plan a naval program. I want to emphasize that for the benefit of those Senators who are now in the Chamber. Subsequently to the appointing of the Helm Commission a commission of experts was appointed to formulate a naval program, which naval program is now before the Senate, minus Charleston Harbor, for it was included in the original program.

Now, listen:

The Navy Department appointed a body of experts to plan a naval program to meet adequately the needs of this country as they were startlingly developed and made manifest by the World War. Prominent in this program was the recommendation for four large dry docks of dimensions sufficient to take care of the largest naval and merchant vessels. The points at which these were to be placed were Boston, Philadelphia, Norfolk, and Charleston. The three docks north of Hatteras, of course, have been completed or are in process of completion. The one at Charleston was authorized at a cost not to exceed $4,000,000. with the dredging of a channel from the sea to the navy yard, a total distance of 15½ miles from the navy yard to deep water. Right at this point I want to pause to say that it was said by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Ball] the other day on this floor, when this item was up, that the distance from the Charleston Navy Yard to the sea was 22 miles, when here is Col. Abbott's own statement to the effect that it is 151 miles.

The Senator also said that about $1,500,000 had been expended already on this channel under this authorization, and that it was only about one-tenth completed. I want to read a letter from Admiral Parks touching on that.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FLETCHER in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to his colleague?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. DIAL. Is it not a matter of fact that practically all of these various places are a long distance away from the yards? Mr. SMITH. I am coming to that, and will give the distances from the different yards.

Mr. President, Admiral Parks, in reference to this matter, Information concerning proposed Dry Dock No. 2, navy yard, Charleston, S. C. Cost of naval dry docks and appurtenances.

Now, I am coming to the dredging. I have gone into the drydock subject about as extensively as I think is necessary. He said:

STATUS OF DREDGING COOPER RIVER PROJECT.

The original estimated cost of project was $7,540,000. This amount of money contemplated a 40-foot channel 1,000 feet wide. Included in this amount was $1,000,000 for the purchase of a dredge. The War Department now considers that this will not be necessary. The rivers and harbors act of 1918 appropriated $1,500,000 for this project. The 1920 annual report of the War Department states that to carry on the work for the next fiscal year will cost $1,900,000. In this amount was included $400,000 for reconstructing a dredge. The War Department now considers that it is possible that this expenditure will not be necessary. On inquiry at the War Department as to the probable cost of a 600-foot channel 40 feet deep, 1,000 feet on turns, advice was given that while it would be necessary, of course, to make a careful estimate of this, it was considered that the cost would be about a half of the Original estimated cost, namely, $3,770,000.

Yet the Senate was solemnly told by a member of the Naval Affairs Committee that, according to his computation, it would cost in the neighborhood of $10,000,000; and this is the report of the official having the matter in charge.

He said further:

Of the amount, namely, $1,500,000, appropriated in the rivers and harbors act approved July 18, 1918, for dredging Cooper River, $995,-296.49 has been expended.

In addition to the foregoing, there is now covered by existing contracts and outstanding liabilities, $434,042.52.

Work on contract dated December 1, 1919, with the United Dredging Co., was started in November, 1920. Amount of this contract was approximately $259,927.

The work on this particular contract was 27 per cent complete on December 1, 1920.

So that, according to the statement of the expert, the dry dock and the deepening of the channel on that immense coast line, for the protection of our common country, could be completed and put into commission for less than $8,000,000, when one battleship now in course of construction will cost $40,000,000, and will ride the seas with no place to go except in a little bight of 500 miles in the North Atlantic, and as far south as Newport

That is the contention I am making. Is this a common country? Are we commonly taxed for common defense and common improvements? Are the boys drafted for a common sacrifice on the battle field? Then, in the name of God, when you put the burden of taxation upon the shoulders of the people, give each and every one adequate treatment in the matter of defense.

I did not raise this sectional question. The figures and the logical facts raised it, not I. I would be unworthy to represent the State of South Carolina, and in part the Southern States, as well as the Northern States, if I sat here and allowed an infamous thing like this to go without my protesting it to the best of my ability; and, so help me God, I will do it.

Who is going to stand here and excuse the expenditure of $700,000,000 on 500 miles, and for actual naval defense less than $30,000,000 on 2,000 miles?

The Senate would not even permit the authorization to stand, the mere authorization. I suspect that the reason the two bills were introduced to repeal the deepening of the channel and the construction of the dry dock was that there was a chilling fear that Mr. Daniels, the Secretary of the Navy, might give out the contract and foreclose the matter. Therefore these bil's were rushed in, and he was asked to defer any action until Congress could decide what it was going to do with those two bills. So that we establish this precedent, if some one introduces and there is passed a bill for the authorization of the improvement of anything, or for any good purpose, if you want to stop it, introduce a bill and ask the executive officer in charge to stop carrying out the will of Congress until its subsequent will can be ascertained. That is historical; that is a fact. Mr. Daniels did accede.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH. I yield.

Mr. STANLEY. Was there any evidence of a like precipitancy in stopping similar work on improvements north of Hatteras?

Mr. SMITH. Has the Senator heard anybody offer an amendment to arrest the expenditure of what is necessary to finish the dry dock or dredge the channel at Philadelphia, or anywhere else, similar to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. Jones], that the unexpended balance of the money appropriated for dredging the Charleston Channel should be held up? The Senator has not heard such an amendment offered.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMITH. I yield. Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has confined himself very largely to discussing the necessity of dry docks south of Hatteras for the use of naval vessels. The Government now is the owner of a vast number of vessels which are engaged in foreign trade, trade with both coasts of South America, as well as with Does not the Senator think that these dry docks, though originally constructed for the purpose of subserving the requirements and needs of the Navy, could be used and should be used for the purpose of furnishing like service for Government-controlled vessels navigating the waters of the South Atlantic and the Pacific?

Mr. SMITH. The answer to that question would be yes; of course; and all the admirals, in discussing the construction of these dry docks, call attention to the fact that in peace times the large vessels now used in the merchant marine service can be docked in those dry docks, and by paying for that dockage they will help decrease the expense of the Government, and that income to the Government would very materially lessen the cost of the upkeep to the taxpayers. Of course, they are an adjunct, they are a necessary part, of the great commercial enterprises of this country

Mr. SIMMONS. Now I wish to ask the Senator, in that connection, if there are any docks south of Hatteras, private or otherwise, adequate for the requirements of our merchant marine?

Mr. SMITH. There are no docks south of Hatteras which can take any of the large modern freight ships; none.

Mr. SIMMONS. While our traffic along that coast largely a coastwise traffic, I suppose there were private docks that might accommodate the small vessels engaged in that traffic; but now that the Government itself is establishing regular lines employing large vessels, unless the Government shall construct dry docks, the vessels navigating those waters will be without means of repair in case they are disabled along the coast

Mr. SMITH. Absolutely. Mr. President, in this connection, the question that is being debated here on the floor is a question raised by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. He has raised the question before this body as to whether or not the time is not now opportune for the great civilized, educated nations of the earth, who understand what war is, what it means, to meet for the purpose of considering whether or not steps should not be taken to lessen the enormous and incalculable burdens of taxation laid upon the peoples of the earth to prepare themselves to defend themselves against the passions and greed and avarice of men and nations. I am of opinion that the Senate is doing a great work for civilization, and we call its attention to these vast expenditures in moneys, because no one can calculate the loss in lives. We are asked to do this

Yet in carrying out this program the question for every one of us to answer is, Are we doing it in good faith? Are we providing for the common defense? I claim that the figures I have submitted answer that in the negative. You would not even allow the Secretary of the Navy to have an appropriation of $1,150,000 to begin the work on the south Atlantic for 2,000 miles of defenseless coast, and yet you ask us to vote $40.000,000 apiece for 11 battleships, but provide no dry dock in 2,000 miles of our south Atlantic and Gulf coast for them to go to in case of accident. I maintain it is not good faith. You are not doing it in good faith. If you are carrying out the naval program of 1916, carry it out. You were carrying it out all right until you got to Charleston, and there you balked, though we had the testimony of every admiral that a dry dock there was essential and necessary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator was going on to a came in a moment ago the Senator referred to the amendment which I offered day before yesterday and I thought the Senator made a statement from which an inference could be drawn, anyhow, that the Senator, I believe, did not really intend to convey.

I think the Senator understands my position in the matter. I did not offer my amendment because of any antagonism, even to the proposition in which the Senator is so much interested at Charleston, but the Senator knows that the appropriation for dredging a 40-foot channel was based specifically upon the proposition to construct a dry dock there, and that that appropriation would not have been made except after provision for the dry dock had been made.

I wish to say to the Senator that members of the Commerce Committee have urged me to recommend to the Senate a repeal of that item, contained in the river and harbor appropriation act. I have always taken the position that that should not be done unless the dry dock was abandoned, and that I would not recommend the repeal of that legislation unless action was taken looking to a repeal of the dry-dock provision. So the sole reason which induced me to offer the amendment was because the Committee on Naval Affairs, which has charge of the drydock appropriation, recommends the suspension of the expenditure of that money. It was not because of any animosity, as I said, not even upon the merits or demerits of the Senator's proposition.

So the suggestion of the Senator that the amendment was not offered properly, I think, was hardly right. The Senator said we would not think of doing a thing like that at Philadelphia, for instance. I would do the same thing at Philadelphia or any place else under similar conditions.

Mr. SMITH. I am glad to hear the Senator make such a statement; but, even were no dry-dock project involved, that 40-foot channel is a naval and commercial necessity and a crying need. Every admiral from whose evidence I have read has testified that, placed 400 yards apart, the naval vessels of America could anchor in the harbor of Charleston in case of danger; that in case of the necessity for loading our great commerce there are piers there sufficient to take care of our Government during the time of war; that in that respect Charleston has not an equal, to say nothing of a superior, in all the country. If that channel were dredged 600 feet wide and 40 feet deep from the terminal to the sea, the harbor of Charleston and the port of Charleston would give safe retreat and anchorage to the biggest vessels in the American merchant marine or the American Navy.

The two propositions should not have been coupled together. They were coupled together upon the statement that neither one nor the other should be appropriated for unless both were authorized. Both were authorized, one of them is now in the course of completion, to cost, according to Admiral Parks, not to exceed, under the new conditions, $3,770,000 and the dry dock $4,000,000, making about $8,000,000, about 15 per cent of what one battleship would cost.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am not going to question or controvert what the Senator has said. I am not going to controvert what he said with reference to the importance of the harbor as a commercial proposition. But I think in all fairness the Senator will concede that when the appropriation of $1,500,-000 was made, it was made upon the specific ground that the dry dock was to be constructed and that-

Mr. SMITH. I think that the Senator has the cart before the horse. I think the dry dock was made dependent upon the What would be the use of having a dry dock without the channel?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, no; not before the Commerce Committee.

Mr. SMITH. I do not know about that. Mr. JONES of Washington. That is the only committee I have anything to do with in that connection.

Mr. SMITH. The Senator will accede to this logic-

Mr. JONES of Washington. It is not a question of logic. It is simply the fact that I wish to place in the Record, and that is The Senator is contending as to the importance of this as a commercial proposition. It may be all that he says it is. But that question was not presented to the Commerce Committee in connection with the river and harbor appropriation, and the appropriation was not based on that ground. We can consider that when we have another river and harbor appropriation bill before the committee, and I shall be glad to do it so far as that is concerned, but in justification of my position in offering the amendment I wanted the fact to appear that so far as the Commerce Committee is concerned it did not recommend new topic, and I did not wish to interfere with that. As I the appropriation until it was assured that the dry dock would be built, and my recollection is that a provision was put in expressing that thought.

Mr. SMITH. That may be, but I wish to answer that to show the logic of the situation. If the channel were deepened vessels could come in and use the harbor. If the channel was not deepened, what good would a dry dock do? We could not get vessels into it or out of it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That was the very thing involved. The dry dock would be useless without the channel, and therefore the dry dock would not be built until we provided for the channel, but if the dry dock had not been there upon the showing made that the commercial needs required a 40-foot channel—my recollection is it was a 30-foot channel that was ample for commercial purposes—

Mr. SMITH. The Senator is aware that with a 40-foot channel, if there was no dry dock, the channel could be used for commercial purposes anyway.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Oh, certainly. The only thing I wanted to get at was that the appropriation for the channel was based specifically on the proposition of the construction of the dry dock, and that was the reason we put it in. That was the sole reason why, as the committee had recommended suspension of the expenditure of the money for a dry dock, I offered the amendment recommending suspension of the other matter.

Mr. SMITH. But it will be observed that the Senator offered that amendment before the vote on the other amendment to the naval bill had been taken.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I could not offer it at any other

Mr. SMITH. Oh, yes; it could have been effered afterwards. The bill had not gone into the Senate and the amendment could have been effered at another time.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President-

Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. I wish to say something as to the statement of the Senator from Washington in regard to the dry dock at Charleston. I do not think there has been any dispute among naval authorities as to whether we ought to have a channel there or whether Charleston is a good place to locate a dry dock to take the largest vessels. There was an effort to have a dry dock located at Guantanamo, Cuba, Panama, or Porto Rico. After looking over the matter thoroughly it was decided that Charleston was the best place, because if we located the dry dock outside of continental United States it would take an army to protect it in case of future war, and consequently they would always want a lot of troops there in the event trouble should arise.

The delay in establishing the dry dock at Charleston was occasioned because they did not have a channel deep enough for the largest ships. There are other harbors on the Atlantic coast that possibly might be as good as Charleston, but they do not have a navy yard there. At Brunswick and other places there would have to be a navy yard built. If we were going to have a channel up to Charleston, it would save the construction of a new navy yard, and it was decided almost unanimously that Charleston was the place at which it should be located. The dry dock was never authorized until the Commerce Committee, which had control of dredging, in considering the river and harbor appropriation bill had authorized the dredging provided the dry dock was put there.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; provided the dry dock was put there.

Mr. SWANSON. That action was taken prior to the action by the Committee on Naval Affairs. It meant what? It meant that if a dry dock was put there for a combination of commercial purposes and naval purposes the expenditure would be justified. I think some of those Senators advocated this delay, against which I voted. The reason why they wanted a similar amendment last year was because they could not get the Navy Department to say they would spend the money until they were assured that they would have the dredging, and the present Secretary, I understand, has no purpose, unless he is stifled he will get the dredging, to have a dry dock there. He would not make the expenditure unless he is going to get the dry dock.

If we abandon the dredging, which we can not do—the Committee on Naval Affairs can not appropriate for dredging—there is no use to have a dry dock that we can not get to, but if we will furnish the money for dredging and give the channel needed there the Committee on Naval Affairs have unanimously decided and everybody connected with the naval situation thinks that Charleston is the best place for a dry dock. Why do you think that? First, because if we put the dry dock in Cuba or Panama or elsewhere it would take a large army to protect it. Second, at Charleston we do not have to build a new navy yard. We already have a good navy yard at Charleston, and all that is needed there is to dredge the 40-foot channel to take the biggest ship. Then, thereafter we should have the dry dock constructed there. If we abandon the dredging, it is certainly foolish to build a dry dock when the large ships could not get up to it.

Mr. SMITH. I just wish to say in this connection that between the Naval Committee on the one side and the Commerce Committee on the other side it is like what was said about the old doctrine of predestination:

I can and I can't, I will and I won't, I am damned if I do and damned if I don't,

It is a vicious circle. We will not build a dry dock until you deepen the channel, and we will not deepen the channel until you have the dry dock. Between the two Charleston is in a bad fix.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Naval Committee had had within their jursidiction the matter of the dredging, they could have considered the question of an appropriation for that purpose. But as soon as the appropriation was made for the dredging the Naval Affairs Committee promptly acted, in both the House and the Senate, on the matter of the dry dock. There had been a delay because of the 40-foot channel. The Senator knows and everyone believes that if we get the proper depth of water there, Charleston would be the best place for a dry dock south of Cape Hatteras, and we ought to have one there.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to read right in this connection—
Mr. JONES of Washington. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt just at that point?

Mr. SMITH. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I thought that the Senator at least in fairness to me would concede what I thought there was no-controversy about as a fact. I am not controverting the Senator's position. I tried to make my attitude clear. Mr. SMITH. I accept the Senator's statement about it, of course.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It does seem to me the Senator in his zeal is taking a rather unfair attitude. I have not looked up the record to see which bill was p seed first—

Mr. SMITH. I accept the Senator's statement as to his intent and purpose and his understanding.

Mr. JONES of Washington. But it is a question of fact. I am very confident that the naval bill passed the Senate before the river and harbor bill passed. I do know this as a fact, as a member of the Commerce Committee, that the appropriation was put in the river and harbor bill not for commercial purposes at all, but solely upon the idea that the Naval Committee had decided to provide for a dry dock, and that, of course, they should not have a dry dock up there without an adequate channel to enable ships to get to it. I merely wanted the facts to appear in the Record, and that is all.

Mr. DIAL. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington a question. I do not know about the different dates, as to which came first, but perhaps the magnificent Government terminals were built up the river beyond the proposed dry dock in expectation that the channel would be dredged.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That I know nothing about. All I know is that the river and harbor committee acted solely upon the assumption that the Government was going to build the dry dock there, and of course it was necessary to have a channel. That is all that I really know about the matter.

Mr. DIAL. No doubt, then, the Government, after Congress had appropriated the money for the channel and for the dry dock, built the terminals above there, believing, of course, that the dredging would be completed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not know as to that.

Mr. DIAL. While I am on my feet I want to say that the reason the contract for the dry dock was not let was because the Government could not obtain bids within the limit. That was due to the fact that some question arose as to the character of the foundation of the dock. At that time the foundations were defective in some other places, and the contractors would not, therefore, bid on the work. The Secretary of the Navy, however, had soundings made and found there was no trouble about the foundations; but, nevertheless, the work was held up.

Mr. SMITH. I wish to say in this connection that I shall discuss what has been done to ascertain the facts as to the foundation for a dry dock of the proportions contemplated at Charleston, and I shall quote the words of the Secretary of the Navy who had this matter in charge.

There has been much ado about the distance of Charleston from the sea and the cost of maintaining a channel to the sea.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SMITH. I do.

Mr. POMERENE. I am compelled to go to a committee meeting within a few minutes. The Senator from South Carolina has not as yet completed his discussion of this subject. Will the Senator yield to me for about two or three minutes, in order that I may make several suggestions in this connection, so that he may amplify them if he so desires?

Mr. SMITH. I shall be very glad to yield for that purpose without yielding the floor, of course.

Mr. POMERENE. I would not for one moment ask the Senator from South Carolina to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina yields to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DOMERRAN.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from South Carolina earlier in his remarks referred to those Senators who voted in favor of the committee amendment as being actuated by sectional preju-

Of course, I did not mean all of them.

Mr. POMERENE. I was one of the Senators who voted to retain the amendment.

Mr. SMITH. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. POMERENE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH. When I made that statement I was merely generalizing. Of course, I did not mean all of the Senators. There were some Senators whom I am sure were in the category of my good friend from Ohio. He was anxious that there be a reduc-tion in expenditures, but in this particular, as Paul said of the Jews, he had "a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge." I think I have furnished him with the knowledge.

Mr. POMERENE. I hope the Senator will furnish complete knowledge on the subject before he concludes his address. the Senator's charge had any reference to me, I wish emphatically to deny it. There has not been anything of sectionalism in anything I have said or done in this behalf. With the information I had, if Charleston Harbor had been in the State of Ohio I would have voted against the construction of the dry dock. I have never cast a sectional vote in the 10 years I have been here in the Senate, and I never shall so long as I am here; but, Mr. President, I want to present the situation as it occurred in my own mind.

This matter came up some years ago, and at the time it was repeatedly stated on the floor of the Senate-I think I can not be wrong about it-that Charleston Harbor was not a proper place for a dry dock. As evidence of that fact it was asserted that before the ships could be taken into the harbor it would be necessary to do a vast deal of dredging in order that the ships might reach a place where they could be placed in the The Senator from South Carolina has somewhat met that criticism, I am free to say, and I shall be glad to read what he may later say, though I can not now remain in the Chamber to hear him.

Mr. SMITH. I want to call the Senators' attention particularly to Boston, Philadelphia, and New York in connection with the necessity of dredging.

Mr. POMERENE. I understand that; but that is not an allcontrolling feature. I did not mean to say that; but during the history of this controversy, as I recall, it has been stated that there are several places on the southern coast where dry docks could be built. The Senator from Georgia a moment ago referred to Brunswick, and, as I now recollect, his former colleague, Senator Smith, referred to that place at one time. So there is a question in my mind, not as to whether there should be any dry dock on the southeasterly coast, but the question in my mind is as to where it should be located. I would be very much interested in hearing the Senator from Georgia tell us of the merits of Brunswick as compared with the merits of Charleston.

I recognize the fact that there has been a substantial expenditure of money at Charleston, and I do not want to waste that. It may be that it is the best place on the southeastern coast. If it is, then I am for it; but it seems to me-and I say this with all due respect to my friend, the Senator from South Carolina-that he has not quite fairly stated the issue as it is presented to the Senate.

It is not the purpose, as I understand, of the committee to cancel this appropriation. The purpose is simply to suspend it for a given length of time. I see no evidence of any disposi-tion on the part of anybody ultimately to deny to Charleston the proposed improvement. The Senator from South Carolina the other day said that there was no appropriation, but that it was simply an authorization. He stated, no doubt, what he thought to be the fact, and I have no doubt he based his statement largely upon the letter which was written by the Secretary of the Navy and not from a fresh examination of the legislation itself. Neither do I intend to reflect upon the Secretary of the Navy. I dare say that he wrote that letter and used the word "authorization" inadvertently.

Of course, no Member of the Senate and no member of the Cabinet would purposely misrepresent the situation. The letter which was written did not correctly state the effect of the legislation; but the Secretary indicated that he was not going to proceed with this work except when it would suit his plans in view of future contingencies. I submit to the Senator that if that was his purpose, it was no other purpose than that which Senators had in their minds who favored the amendment reported by the committee.

I think the Senator from South Carolina must agree that, as a general proposition, it would be very unwise, except in time of war, to vote large sums of money to a Government official and say to him, "You can use it if you wish, but if you do not wish to use it you shall not use it." That is one of the difficulties. It seems to me that my friend is borrowing a good deal of trouble when he indicates that the improvement is to be denied. I frankly say to the Senator that if I were convinced that Charleston would not be a proper harbor and could not be made a proper harbor, I would vote to cancel the appropriation heretofore made; but I am not going to do anything of that kind until I have reasonable assurance to that effect.

Now, as I am obliged to leave the Chamber, I simply wanted to suggest that thought to the Senator and let him develop it further, if he should see fit so to do.

Mr. SMITH. I shall take up the intimation which the Senator has made. Of course, however, he is reasoning from a wrong premise. He overlooks the fact, or seems not to include it in his reasoning, that Charleston is one of the four places selected by a commission of experts where there is involved the proper defense of the coast. At Boston the Commonwealth Dock was bought from the State and completed; at Philadelphia, 63 miles from the sea, a dry dock was completed, and although when they were seeking for the foundation they found a river down there 2 feet deep that washed the whole thing out, yet, at a cost of many millions, they completed it. They will have to dredge the channel there, according to the report which I have here.

A dock was also built at Norfolk because of the unquestionable necessity at the great gateway of the Chesapeake Bay between Cape Charles and Cape Henry of defending that inland waterway. However, before the Secretary of the Navy could give out the contract for Charleston the armistice occurred. When he asked for bids they were all upon the iniquitous costplus basis, and, believing that he could make a better bargain by waiting, as he says in his letter to me and to the chairman of the committee, which I have and which I will put in the RECORD, he preferred to defer the letting of a contract until he could secure a cheaper basis upon which to give it out. He went so far as to take the yard hands and the civil engineers and develop the pump-well section, in order to determine the character of the foundation upon which the dry dock was to rest. He did that at a very reduced cost, and ascertained that the foundation was all that could be asked for.

The Senator from Ohio seems to forget that this is a part and parcel of the naval program that we are now supposed to be carrying out.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President— Mr. SMITH. I yield to the Senator from Idaho. Mr. BORAH. I understood the Senator to say that the Charleston project was a part of the 1916 program. Mr. SMITH. A part of it; yes. Mr. BORAH. I did not know that.

Mr. LENROOT. When was this adopted?

Mr. SMITH. This was in pursuance of the report of the experts. I will read the Secretary's letter to the chairman of

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator a moment? The 1916 program did not have anything at all to do with dry docks or navy yards. It was a program of ship construction.

Mr. BORAH. That is what I supposed.

Mr. SMITH. I may have been under a misapprehension. I see from the report of the experts that this is an authorization for the construction of a system of dry docks. I may have been in error in that respect; but, anyhow, it is a necessary adjunct to your naval construction, for the reason that the Secretary says in his letter to the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee that when the Vaterland was converted into an American vessel there was not a dry dock in this country that could take it. It would be absolutely a white elephant on our hands if we did not provide some docking facilities where this vessel could go in; and the vessels whose construction was contemplated, and whose names I enumerated this morning, part of which have been completed and part of which are on the ways now, could not at that time have gotten into a single dry dock in America. Therefore, the Senator from Idaho will see that it would have been senseless to have built these superdreadnaughts and not have had a single dock in America that could take one of them.

Therefore, a natural sequence was that if you built these superdreadnaughts you must build places of berthing, and the places of berthing were apportioned as follows:

Boston, Norfolk, Philadelphia; south of Hatteras, Charleston. They built them in Norfolk, they built them in Boston, they built them in Philadelphia, but they arrested and stopped the program at Charleston; and that has been the history of 50 That is the point I make.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMITH. For a question; yes.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator complains of sectionalism in the action taken day before yesterday. The Senator being in error when he said there was no appropriation, when he admitted later that there was; I want to ask him whether he did not assure the Senate time and time again, all day long, that nothing would be done with this dry dock without first coming to Congress for another appropriation?

Mr. SMITH. Yes. I was taking the word of the honorable

Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. LENROOT. That being so, how is the Senator harmed by the adoption of the amendment of which he complains?

Mr. SMITH. Simply for this reason: He would come to Congress, and it would still be there. You say "No; we will not even trust our own Secretary of the Navy to do the thing that ought to be done south of Hatteras. We will stop it now, and leave no discretion at all to him." That is the idea.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Navy will be just as free to come to Congress next year and ask for the full amount of the appropriation for this dry dock as if this amendment had not been adopted, but it will require the action

Mr. SMITH. Precisely; but the action of Congress the other day gives the answer to him before he comes. That is what I am complaining of. You had the authorization. It was doing no harm, but was fraught with great potential good in the defense of the country; and you, among others, said: "We can not even trust our Secretary of the Navy to do it, even though a foreign fee were to menace this country, and he would need that authorization and that appropriation to go immediately to the construction of that which would defend this

Mr. LENROOT. But the Senator said that the appropriation that is now being postponed was so small that nothing could be done without a further appropriation, anyway.

Mr. SMITH. It could not, just like all appropriations; and the Senator need not stand here and attempt to beg the question and becloud the minds of his peers, the Senators. The authorization provided not to exceed $4,000,000, of which $1,150,000 was to be immediately available. That bill died. The Senator from Washington, having the bill in charge, called my attention to a subsequent paragraph in the act that I had not seen, that provided that except for expenditures for the upkeep, and so forth, the amount, so many hundred millions, would be continued. The Senator knows and I know that any appropriation carried in a bill that is not specifically denominated a continuing appropriation dies with the bill in which it is made, and if he had read the paragraph making the appropriation of $1,150,000 without finding the subsequent paragraph he would have been under the same impression that I was.

But the authorization was still there; the appropriation was still there; the danger of Josephus Daniels was gone. It was absolutely in the hands and power of the Republican Party. Mr. Denby, like every great, impartial man, regardless of what party he comes from, realized the necessity for the defense of 2,000 miles of our coast; and as the law stood it simply left it in his hands and in the hands of the Congress, because even though he may have made an error in saying "authorization" in place of "appropriation," you know and I know that he would no more have given out a contract for the construction of that dry dock without consulting Congress than he would have given it out if there had not been an appropriation. The Senator knows that.

The reason why these two bills were introduced to repeal the authorization for dredging the channel and building the dry dock was frankly stated to me. It was because they were afraid Josephus Daniels would give out the contract and foreclose the possibility of their stopping any improvement in the South Atlantic. It is useless for us to beg this question. The purpose and object of it all is well known. I believe that the country has as many friends on the other side as it has on this side, and if they were left to voice their sentiments they would have voted down that amendment. Here are your admirals; here are all the men interested, big men who do not stop to think whether they are Republicans or whether they are Democrats, but merely that they are officers of this Government to defend it. They have come and plead for protection on the South Atlantic, the Caribbean, and the Gulf of Mexico. have scouted the idea of putting a great dry dock, with its tremendous expense, on the coast of Cuba.

In case of war you would have to have an army to defend it, whereas if located at the strategical point of Charleston you have a devoted American citizenship back of it, with easy communication with the supplies from the interior; and no man but a hidebound, unworthy American would dare stand up here and advocate that that area should be left defenseless simply because it was in the South. Many a poor devil has been hung on less evidence of crime than the evidence of sectionalism that I have given you to-day.

Mr. President, I am not going to take up very much more of the time of the Senate. I have submitted these figures. I have given you the testimony of the admirals.

Now I want to read the letter of the commander of the Charleston Navy Yard, written to Senator Ball two days after the subcommittee of the Naval Affairs Committee had gone to make their adverse report in reference to Charleston:

[Copy.]

JANEARY 20, 1920.

My Dear Senator: I greatly regret that I was not present when the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate inspected this yard, as there were many things I wished to discuss with them. Unfortunately at that time I was making an inspection of my district, especially the inland waterways, so I did not get information regarding the intended arrival of the committee until it was too late to meet you.

You have asked me to give my views regarding the proposed deepwater channel at Charleston, the dry dock, and the immediate needs of the yard. I do so at some length.

Regarding the question of a large dry dock, there are three reasons why, in my opinion, such a dock should be located south of Hatteras My study of strategy makes me firmly of the opinion that in any naval war in which this country may become involved in the Atlantic the battle would probably be fought south of Cape Hatteras, in which case a harbor with a deep channel and a dry dock capable of receiving disabled ships would be absolutely indispensable. This phase of the question, however, has undoubtedly been presented to the committee over and over again, and I will not waste your time by discussing it further.

Second. I was in command of the American patrol detachment during the war and my mission was to safeguard American and allied interests in the Caribbean and Gulf of Mexico. In preparing my "estimate of the situation" I found that about 1,500,000 tons of shipping passed through the Straits of Florida each way monthly, and after the submarines appeared off our coast was routed by Charleston. Had the commanding officers of the German submarines been of the same caliber as those during the first year of the war, and had they handled their vessels with nerve, they would have been able to limp into the part of taking these damaged vessels the dock would have more than paid for itself. Without this dock, and under such conditions, we would have been absolutely swamped. As the submarine is essentially the weedpon of a weak naval power, and it is by no mean merce of Charleston will largely increase, in which case a dry dock capable of accommodating large merchant vessels at this port might be a paying proposition.

The committee is undoubtedly better informed than I am in regard to the ultimate cost of these projects and as to whether they can be completed within the amount appropriated.

As regard the present pressing needs of the yard, there are: First. Docking facilities: The docking facilities of this yard are entirely inadequate to handle the volume of work, and, consequently, it is not being conducted as efficiently as it should be. Many vessels on which repairs are authorized have to work their turn to come alongside the wharves and are at present secured to delphins in the stream or at anchor. To remedy this situation it is recommended that the concrete pier No. 314, at the foot of Third Street, navy yard, be extended out to the deep-water line. There is now available about $198,000, which probably will be utilized for this purpose and extend the pier 230 feet, leaving 180 feet for which there is no appropriation, the estimated cost of which work would be about $150,000.

The outer end of pier No. 317, which is parallel to the stream, should be extended to the southward about 350 feet, making a berthing space of 750 feet, which would provide for two moderately large vessels to lay alongside and also provide a berth inside for smaller craft and vessels out of commission. The approximate cost of this project would be $200,000.

Second. Another marine railway for docking vessels up to 2,000 tons, similar to the one now in the yard. This marine railway had proven to be indispensable and is in use to its maximum capacity with craft waiting to take their turn. In fact, the present marine railway and the small dock now in the yard are inadequate for carrying out the work now allotted this yard and which will undoubtedly be increased in the future. Not only is a marine railway's first cost less than that of a dry dock but its operation is less expensive. To duplicate the present marine railway would cost $180,000.

Third, Officers' quarters. One of the causes that militate more against the efficiency of this yard than any other is the lack of officers' quarters. The yard is situated between 7 and 8 miles from the city, the transportation facilities being the electric railway, which is always over-crowded and sometimes unreliable. At least two hours a day of the officers' time is devoted to getting to and from the yard. Housing facilities in Charleston at present are practically nonexistent and decent accommodations are beyond the officers' means. The captain of the yard, who during the absence of the commandant becomes acting commandant, had no quarters at the yard, as there are none available for him. He is responsible for the good order and discipline of the yard, for all yard craft, fire protection, berthing and movement of vessels, and, generally speaking, is the right-hand man of the commandant of the district, who is also the commandant of the yard, Capt. R. E. Pope. United States Navy, automatically became acting commandant, and was at night 8 miles from the navy yard; a dangerous situation. He has been unable to secure any quarters for his family in Charleston within his means, so that his family is separated from him during his tour of shore duty. Capt. D. P. Mannix, United States Navy, assistant to the commandant of the district, has been fortunate enough to secure a house at $150 per month, or $66 more than his allowance for rooms. To remedy this condition it is preposed to convert the present naval hospital in the yard, and is fitted as a 100-bed hospital, while the naval hospital is intende for John bear of the present naval hos

Mr. President, I want to say, in conclusion, that I have said thus much and given these facts as I have given them for the purposes I have stated.

I do not believe that a man on the other side can rise in his place and justify the expenditure of $700,000,000 for docks along 500 miles of our coast and the construction of 18 dry docks in the same distance and leave undefended and vote to repeal, even, the authorization of a defense of 2,000 miles, which 2,000 miles is the danger point in America.

Mr. BORAH. Somebody in favor of the bill ought to defend it. As I am opposed to the bill, I can not, I confess.

Mr. SMITH. I do not think the Senator from Idaho is well within my idea of what I heard him say the other day, that he is opposed to the bill. I think the Senator would not be opposed to the bill-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why should those who are in favor of the bill defend it, when the bill is what the Senator from South Carolina is attacking?

Mr. SMITH. It is not the bill I am attacking, and that is where the Senator is in error. I am not attacking the bill. I am attacking the action of the Senate committee in regard to certain amendments. I do not believe an American citizen is worthy of his citizenship who would, by any act of his, invite attack on his country.

The Senator from Idaho is right. Let us call a conference of the world's great powers and see if there is not some rational basis upon which we can mutually agree to lift this burden of war preparedness from the shoulders of the overtaxed people. But until such an agreement is reached we can not let up one jot or tittle in preparing against such an unforeseen and unexpected cataclysm as came like a clap of thunder out of a clear sky on August 1, 1914.

The Senator from Idaho would not do it; I would not do it. There is no American citizen but who would be in favor of adequate naval defense. I am more in favor of that than I would be of increasing the Army. The very peculiar relation of our coast line to the other nations of the earth makes this naval appropriation one which can be defended. I am not attacking the bill. I am attacking the unjust discrimination in the amount you say is necessary to defend the country. The plea I am making is that if you are going to appropriate this money, to defend the country, in the name of the god of justice and the god of common sense defend the country and do not pour it all into a little bight 500 miles long, which already has a dry dock on an average of every 25 miles, with an expenditure of $700,000,000.

There is the argument I am making. I have not said one word thus far in derogation of the bill. The Senate committee in every respect in reference to the number of vessels and with reference to the personnel of the Navy I hope have used the discretion, the judgment, the research, and the industry they were called upon to use. It is a grave and solemn task they have. But if we are to measure the degree of their judgment and discretion by the distribution of this money, then I would vote against their whole bill. I believe that the patriotism and the manhood and the wisdom of those on the other side will reverse their judgment and see that justice is done.

I must vote for an adequate defense, even though I am left defenseless. The responsibility will be upon the officers who execute it; but you are tying their hands now when you say that they can not defend 2,000 miles of our coast by establishing an adequate naval base.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I ask my colleague this question: Even if the proposition of the Senator from Idaho should prevail, and we should have no war vessels, would they not need a dry dock for the merchant marine? The Government owns a great many ships and it is necessary to repair them from time to time.

Mr. SMITH. I started to remark a moment ago, Mr. President, that I have not discussed the industrial development of this country, which in a large part depends on the proper development and utilization of our South Atlantic and Gulf ports. That will come when I stand in my place—God willing that I live until that time-and discuss the modification of the railroad bill, for that will come; it must come. At that time I shall discuss the importance of this from a transportation standpoint. Every Senator here recognizes that the two go hand in

But I want to reiterate that all of us had suffered alike in anxiety for our blood and bone that was across the ocean standing face to face with the most desperate enemy the world ever knew, as well as in the loss of property, the embarrassment and consequent demoralization of our commercial relations. When the armistice had hardly been signed, the Republicans came into power, and immediately upon their coming into power they rushed to introduce two bills to repeal authorization for the development of the dry dock at Charleston and the deepening of the Charleston Channel.

I plead with Senators on the other side not to do this thing. Surely, with the Federal Government in your hands and a majority of the State governments in your hands, you can at least demonstrate to the country that you are big enough and broad enough and catholic enough to meet the conditions, even though you must spend some money in the South.

That is all I am asking. I wanted to bring these figures here to bring you to a startling realization of the fact that you would not even allow an authorization to stand; would not even allow an appropriation which does not appear in this bill, which was made possible by the bill of 1918, to stand. I ask my friends on the other side if they can not reverse their action and prove that I am entirely mistaken as to the attitude of this Senate; that they will not repeat what has been so manifest in the action of Senates that have gone before?

We all love America. We all want to see it properly defended. But what kind of a spirit are you engendering by the manifestation of such startling figures as these?

I have made my plea, Mr. President. I have given the facts in reference to the appropriation of this money for the improvement of the harbor at Charleston, and I am going to ask the Navy Department to furnish me with figures showing the total amount of money appropriated for the building of ships from the beginning of this Government until the present day, in addition to that I have already given. I hope that my friends and colleagues on the other side of the aisle will see fit, when this comes into the Senate, to reverse their action and allow this matter to stand, as it is so manifestly needed in that section of our country.

EMERGENCY TARIFF-CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, a few moments ago the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] asked unanimous consent for the consideration of the conference report on the emergency tariff bill. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Simmons] asked that it might go over for a few moments, until he could ascertain if there was any objection to its present consideration on the other side of the aisle. The Senator from North Dakota informs me that there is no objection, and he joins with me in asking unanimous consent for its present consideration. So I ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] if he will not allow the report to be presented to the Senate at this time, and if it leads to any discussion at all I will not insist that it shall be considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POINDEXTER. With the statement of the Senator from Utah and upon that condition, reserving the right to object, I will not object at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not know that the consideration of the request at this time will occasion any very great discussion, but I do think that a brief statement should be made to the Senate, by the Senator from Utah or some one else, in explanation of what the conferees did: and I shall ask that that be done if the request is taken up at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. About the only change that was made in the bill as it passed the Senate was in the provision relating to dyestuffs. In the bill as it passed the Senate that provision was to remain in operation for six months. The conferees agreed to cut the time down to three months.

Mr. ROBINSON. With that exception, the bill is as it passed the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. Just as it passed the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think we understand what that is. Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, when I left the Chamber I had understood that I would be notified before the report was called up.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to say to the Senator from North Carolina that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber] had told me that he had seen the Senator from North Carolina, and that that Senator had no objection to it at all. Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have no objection to its being called up; but, as the Senator from Arkansas has just said, it is very proper that we should have a statement as to what the conferees have done. The Senator from Utah has correctly stated what was done. It is practically the same bill that passed the Senate, except the change with reference to the licensing provision as to dyestuffs, which was reduced from six months to three months. I do not object to the present consideration of the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report on the emergency tariff bill? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. SIMMONS. Upon that question I ask for the year and

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 26, after line 9, under the subhead "Naval supply base, Alameda, Calif.," the committee propose to insert "Toward dredging, excavating, and grading, $1,500,000," and so forth.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I have received a large number of communications severely criticizing this appropriation as unnecessary and unjustifiable. Opportunity has not been afforded me to go into the matter in detail so as to reach a conclusion as to whether the information so given me is accurate and reliable.

It has been said that within a few miles of this proposed naval base is already a navy yard owned and occupied by the Government for approximately 60 years, namely, Mare Island, and that the adoption of this provision contemplates the abandonment of Mare Island, or at least that this course could be implied in the creation of a naval base at Alameda. I have said that I do not know whether the complaints which have been made against the proposition are justified, but it is said that the Alameda location is a swamp which it will require the expenditure of millions of dollars to reclaim, and that in the reclamation of that swamp privately owned property near by will be appreciated in value millions if not hundreds of millions of dollars. It is also claimed by some that Mare Island, with the expenditure of a comparatively small sum, can be made to accomplish every purpose which the Government has in view in the establishment of a naval base at Alameda.

This subject, I find, was gone into quite extensively before the Committee on Naval Affairs, perhaps a year ago. I have not had an opportunity of reading the testimony. I realize fully the importance and necessity of a naval base on the Pacific coast. There is already one at San Diego, and there is a navy yard at Mare Island, 25 or 30 miles from Alameda. Before this item is disposed of I think some member of the committee who stands sponsor for it ought to give a very full explanation of the reasons that prompted the committee to report the

The subject, I believe, was investigated at great length before a committee of the body at the other end of the Capitol, and it was also investigated by a special joint committee of Congress. It is perfectly clear that if, with the expenditure of a small sum, Mare Island can be expanded into a naval base adequate for the requirements of the service, there is neither need nor justification for this initial appropriation, which, I am told, means the expenditure of $60,000,000 to $100,000,000 before the enterprise is finally consummated.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, just one word as to the amendment. It does not contemplate the expenditure of $100,-000,000, nor the expenditure of anything approaching any such

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just one moment. It does not contemplate the expenditure of any more money than is required for improving the water-front land, which the city of Alameda offers to give to the Government. The balance that will be expended upon this site would depend altogether upon what Congress chose to construct upon the land. The idea of the committee was that we would construct on this land storehouses and other supply equipment available for the Pacific Fleet coming into San Francisco Harbor. It is not intended to establish a navy yard; it is not in the contemplation of the committee that it should in any way supplant or displace the Mare Island Navy Yard. Personally I am opposed to abandoning the Mare Island Navy Yard. I think it is an efficient, economical, and successful yard and it would be a mistake to abandon it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just one moment I will yield.

Briefly speaking, the circumstances are these: The depth of water over what are known as the Pinole Shoals to Mare Island Navy Yard is sufficient to float the largest capital ships without their full equipment of armor and armament; it is amply sufficient to float the hulls containing the machinery when the ships are constructed in the yard, even for the great capital ships, to say nothing of the smaller ships; but the depth of water is not sufficient to enable the great ships of the Navy, equipped with their armor and their great guns, to come up through this tortuous and rather shallow channel to Mare Island. Consequently, the idea of the committee was, so long as we are maintaining a great fleet in the Pacific, and the prospect being that the entire fleet will spend a great portion of its time, or at least should spend a great portion of its time, in Pacific waters, that there should be a supply base in San Francisco Harbor, from which could be obtained the necessary supplies for the maintenance of the fleet without requiring these fully equipped vessels to go through the long channel, of some twenty-odd miles, from San Francisco to Mare Island.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington states that it is not contemplated that there shall be expended the sum of $100,000,000, or any such sum, but he has not stated what sum it is proposed to expend there. I assume that in making this comparatively small initial authorization for the expenditure of $1,500,000 the Committee on Naval Affairs knew that a much larger amount likely would follow if this first appropriation should be made. I now ask the Senator from Washington what is the estimate for the total expenditure contemplated by this item? What is it expected to cost to establish a naval base at Alameda?

In that connection, while the Senator from Washington is looking over his memoranda-

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can tell the Senator what he is desirous of knowing. Mr. ROBINSON.

I should like to call attention to the hearings before the special joint committee of Congress on Pacific coast naval bases, at page 93, wherein Capt. Edward L. Beach, a witness testifying before that joint committee, made the statement that the establishment of this naval base would cost between $60,000,000 and $100,000,000.

I further call attention to the fact that on the same page Capt. Beach quotes the Helm report, page 40, paragraph 99, as stating that "the present dry docks at Mare Island can accommodate 90 per cent of the vessels of the fleet as completed in 1921." Above that, on the same page, he makes the declaration that $26,000,000 expended at Mare Island would accomplish what the expenditure of between $60,000,000 and $100,000,000 will accomplish at Alameda.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What witness is it whose testimony the Senator from Arkansas is quoting?

Mr. ROBINSON. I am quoting from the testimony of Capt. Edward L. Beach.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think he is the commandant at the Mare Island Navy Yard. The committee was of the opinion that it would not cost any more to improve the water-front property and construct buildings upon it at Alameda than it would to make the improvement at Mare Island.

Mr. ROBINSON. But I again ask the Senator from Washington what the committee thought it would cost to provide a naval base at Alameda?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was just going to tell the Senator.

that the remainder of the cost of the project would depend en-tirely upon the disposition of Congress as to what structures should be erected upon the land, the purpose of the committee being to erect certain storehouses there, probably at a cost of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, if nothing but storehouses were erected there, the cost might be limited as suggested by the Senator from Washington; but if a dry dock adequate to accommodate the big ships of the Navy and the improvements necessary to provide adequate facilities for the naval service be built there it is quite likely that the total sum would reach $60,000,000 or $100,000,000. Can the Senator from Washington say that it is not intended to do anything at Alameda except to erect some storehouses?

Mr. POINDEXTER. That depends entirely upon whose opinion the Senator is inquiring into. I have no doubt that there are many people who would like to see a great navy yard established at Alameda, but that was not the opinion of the committee and I trust it will not be the opinion of Congress. Nothing can be done there except by the permission of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The committee favors and the amendment before the committee simply proposes the establishment of a supply base, reclaiming 500 acres of land for the amount contained in the appropriation, the land being donated to the Government. The expenditure of a larger amount is absolutely subject to the discretion of Congress. The committee believes the expenditures will be kept within a reasonable limit.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is there any reason why a supply base can not be established and maintained at Mare Island on land now owned by the Government?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no reason at all why it can not be. The question, however, is whether it is economical and desirable to expend this money for reclaiming and improving land at Mare Island or in the vicinity of Mare Island instead of making the supply base nearer to San Francisco Harbor and eliminating, as I said a moment ago, the difficulty of armored ships navigating the Pinole Shoals in order to go up to Mare Island to get supplies.

Mr. ROBINSON. It does not appear to me as either sound policy or consistent with economical administration to maintain at Mare Island a large naval establishment into which the Government has already put more than $60,000,000 and within 35 miles of it maintain another establishment that could be readily provided for, according to the admission of the Senator in charge of the bill, in conjunction with Mare Island.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to say—

Mr. ROBINSON. Just a moment. If this appropriation is made and we reclaim 500 acres of land at Government expense, the next Congress will hear the unanswerable argument that we have property of great value which is being utilized for no substantial purpose and that it is our duty then to supply, in conjunction with that property, dry docks and other facilities adequate for the entire naval fleet.

The Senator from Washington has admitted that that policy is strongly urged by many who favor this appropriation. He has admitted that behind this small appropriation is an effort to secure larger governmental activities at Alameda to which I have referred, and which will cost between $60,000,000 and $100,000,000. A representative of the Government of the United States, the commandant of Mare Island, came before the joint commission, and in testimony which I have been trying to look over since this amendment was submitted to the Senate denounced this amount as unnecessary and declared that, in his opinion and under his responsibility as an officer of the Government, whatever extensions the service needs in that locality ought to be made at Mare Island, and that they could be made there for less than half the amount that necessarily will be expended at Alameda.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the witness explain why the dredging and the filling of land and the improvement of a water front can be done at less cost at Mare Island than it can be done at Alameda? The committee had no evidence that that was the case. The committee examined into the matter very carefully, and it was of the opinion that it would cost equally as much to do the same work at Mare Island as at Alameda. The Government does own some land at Mare Island, but at Alameda it will own the land if this amendment is adopted, because it is being donated to the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the evidence of Capt. Beach and my argument are based upon the theory that this proposal We thought that it would cost for reclaiming 500 acres of is not in fact limited to the mere reclamation of a small area land the sum of $1,500,000. The committee was of the opinion of land and the building of a few storehouses; and if you will say in this amendment, if you will declare the policy which you assert is the policy of the Naval Affairs Committee as a matter of legislation, that it is intended to restrict the activities there to the establishment and maintenance of a naval supply base proper, and to the construction and operation of storehouses, the force of the objection I am making will be greatly weakened; but your failure or refusal to do that gives credence to the argument that behind it is a proposition to waste $25,000,000 or $30,000,000 of public money.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. ROBINSON. I yield with pleasure to the Senator from

Mr. SWANSON. The question as to what disposition to make of Mare Island has been debated in the Senate for seven or eight years. When I was chairman of the committee it was a recurring question with us every year. As the Senator from Washington has said, Mare Island is one of the best navy yards in the country. I think it is one of the best constructing yards in the country. The largest ships can be constructed there. The channel fills up every year, and it takes a great deal of money, although not an excessive amount, to keep it open. The largest battleships can be constructed there, but after you get a battleship constructed and put on its men and put on its guns and equip it for the purposes for which it is designed it can not come to Mare Island on account of the depth of the water and the danger and narrowness of the channel. Consequently there has always been a question as to what disposition should be made of Mare Island. Until we had larger ships it was absolutely all right, but since we have gotten larger ships it has been a recurring question continually before the Naval Affairs Committee.

Some people thought the navy yard ought to be at Alameda. Some people thought it ought to be at Hunters Point. Some people thought that Mare Island ought to be developed and the channel broadened and deepened and kept open.

We had hearings last year upon the question. debatable question. The Navy has been divided on it. Last year, to get rid of this debatable question, which has kept us from having a supply base at San Francisco, a joint committee of the House and Senate was appointed to go there and examine it on the ground, see the land, see the channel, hear everybody pro and con, and make a report to Congress as to where the naval base should be located.

It would be absolute folly to create a new yard there. It would be an absolute waste and extravagance that ought not to be tolerated for one minute by Congress.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arkansas will yield, a yard where?

Mr. SWANSON. A navy yard at Alameda, or any other place except at Mare Island. You do not want any other navy yard at San Francisco but the Mare Island yard. They have been trying for a long time to get you to abolish it, and sell it, and create another naval base and navy yard combined; but it answers all the purposes of a navy yard. It is one of the best navy yards in the country, well located, fine and splendid in its results and in its achievements; but a navy yard is not a naval base or a supply base. If the entire fleet is in the Pacific you have got to have a place where supplies for it can be stored. In order to take on those supplies a ship must go in there equipped. It must go in there with its men on and with its guns on. To take them off to go up to Mare Island and put them on again after going there would be a useless expense.

In addition to that you have got to have a place where men can sleep, where men can rest at times from the sea. After a man has been on the sea for three months he gets restless. is bound to have more or less of a place to go off to recreate for 10 days or 2 weeks in order to get in good health again. can not have a supply base unless you have a place where men can get off the ships for a certain length of time. It is utterly impossible to keep a fleet going in any other way.

The question as to where such a base ought to be located has been a debated question. I was not a member of this joint committee. Circumstances prevented me from being on it. have never reached a conclusion as to where the base ought to be located, but I should like to ask the acting chairman of the committee a question. As I understand, the joint committee, composed of the Senator from Montana, the Senator from Utah, and Mr. PADGETT, of the House, unanimously decided that this was the best solution of the question. Am I correct in that? Did the joint committee make a report?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, yes; they made a report.

Mr. SWANSON. Were they unanimous?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; my recollection is that they were unanimous.

Mr. ROBINSON. In this connection, let the Senator say what they did report, what recommendation they made, if the Senator from Virginia has no objection.

Mr. SWANSON. I have no objection. I have not read that report. Circumstances prevented me from giving to this bill the attention that I have given to it heretofore; but unless that committee, which has been on the ground and examined all these various rumors that have been connected with real estate deals, has reported in favor of this provision, I am not in favor of including it in the bill. I wish the Senator from Montana were here. He was on that committee. The Senator from Utah and the Senator from Delaware, I think, were on that committee. I think the Senator from Delaware was chairman of the committee.

There is no necessity for a dry dock there. The Government has a dry dock at Hunters Point, near there, which can dock every ship that the Government needs to have docked.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Government does not own that dock, but it is available to the Government.

Mr. SWANSON. The Government has a contract that gives it the preference in the use of it, instead of building a dry dock. The bill that was passed when I was chairman of the committee gave the preference to the Government, which is cheaper and better than for the Government to build a dry dock there.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to say to the Senator from Virginia that the bald and fundamental fact is, as I understand—and the Senator will correct me if I am not accurate that the capital ships of the Navy, armed and equipped as they will be when they are put into commission, can not go to Mare Island an account of the depth of water.

Mr. SWANSON. I have said that they could not go to Mare Island. That is true. That is the reason why it was made a supply base; but I was illustrating what I have said by referring to Hunters Point, where you have a dry dock. You need no dry dock at Alameda. At Hunters Point you have a dry dock.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I agree with the Senator that we need no dry dock there.

Mr. SWANSON. Consequently, there is no purpose to build a dry dock at Alameda. Now, to show the object of this thing more plainly, it is limited to a naval base. I would not favor it for anything unless it is limited to a naval base. I would vote for no appropriation, now or in the future, that contemplates the abolition of Mare Island as a navy yard.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it has been said over and over again that ships can not go into Mare Island. How much will it cost to fix up the channel so that they can go in? It will cost practically nothing for it in comparison with what you are expending on the other place.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator from Delaware was chairman of the joint committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask Senators to remember that I have the floor. I yield to the Senator from Delaware to make a statement.

I merely wish to state that it will be impossible for the capital ships to go to the present works at Mare Island, on account of the narrowness of the stream. It would be impossible to make it possible for them to enter.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator does not mean to say that it is impossible to make it possible for them to go there?

Mr. BALL. I mean to say that it would be impossible to construct a channel that would permit the capital ships to go there and enter the dry dock.

Mr. BORAH. That is not in accordance with the testimony which the Senator took as a member of the joint committee.

Mr. BALL. The testimony is that dry docks can be constructed two miles and a half below the present dry docks. There was no proposition to construct dry docks at the present site, but to utilize the other buildings and other parts of the supply base there, the machine shops and all those things, and to construct a dry dock two miles and a half below.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the very purpose of the investigation by the joint committee I have already referred to was to make a study and determine which is the best site for a great base-Carquinez Straits, Alameda, or Hunters Point.

Mr. BALL. Carquinez Straits is two miles and a half below the present dry dock.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; and that is substantially near the present dry dock. That is the very point. The geographical designation is not important. It is the proximity that is contemplated that is important.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, the geographical position is important when the dry docks are there.

Mr. ROBINSON. I did not say "the geographical position"; said "the geographical designation." I maintain that it is I maintain that it is the position that is important and not the designation.

The purpose of this investigation was to determine the best place for a great naval base, and that contemplates a repairing station and docking facilities. It is so stated in the report of the officers who made the study that it was a part of their duty to pass upon that question. I will refer to that document. In that study, as I say, it is shown that the primary purpose of the investigation was to determine the relative value of this place, not merely as a supply base in the sense spoken of by the Senator from Washington, but in the broader sense mentioned in the report, namely, that of providing adequate docking and repair activities.

Congressman C. F. Crbry.

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Following military study just received from eminent authority: before an according to the company of the company likely to be developed in the future, the danger to the lower-bay sites from enemy bombardment, especially during the absence from port of our fleet, is a material disadvantage as compared with the Carquinez Straits site.

Straits site.

"(b) Attack by land or air forces.—Such operations presuppose the enemy to be established ashore in the eastern Pacific. Unless our fleet is considerably inferior to the enemy fleet they are negligible possibilities. The contingency is so remote as hardly to warrant taking into account. If there is any advantage in these particulars it rests with the Carquinez Straits site.

"1. Seamanship aspects.—The severe southerly gales which are frequent about San Francisco during the fall and winter are a positive drawback to the lower-bay sites, which are much exposed to wind and sea from that quarter. Docking, the operation of small craft, and other ordinary processes will necessarily be interrupted seriously during such gales.

quent about san Francisco during the fall and winter are a positive drawback to the lower-bay sites, which are much exposed to wind and sea from that quarter. Docking, the operation of small craft, and other ordinary processes will necessarily be interrupted seriously during such gales.

"The Carquinez Strait site, on the other hand, is advantageously situated in this respect, being well sheltered by the close proximity of high land in the dangerous quarter. The frequency of fog in San Francisco Bay renders navigation somewhat difficult. There is less fog in the upper bay, which offers some advantage to the Carquinez site for the handling of vessels in the immediate vicinity of the station. On the other hand, this is counterbalanced by the longer average distance which ships must travel to reach Carquinez than would be necessary to reach a lower-bay site. The tidal currents are inconveniently great, but virtually appear to disclose an important advantage of the lower-bay sites in the greater width of the harbor in their vicinity, thus permitting large ships to be maneuvered more safely. Undoubtedly this is of some advantage. But whether or not this condition should be a decisive consideration in eliminating Carquinez Strait must depend upon the degree of inconvenience and the danger involved in maneuvering large ships in Carquinez Strait and whether such danger and inconvenience can be reduced to a reasonable minimum by ordinary means, such as wharves, tugs, buoys, etc.

"Perhaps the best way to determine this essential fact is by comparison with other places at which large vesels are maneuvered under circumstances similar to those which would obtain at Carquinez Strait, including similarity of tidal conditions. The space immediately adjacent to the Carquinez Strait site that would be available for the maneuvering of large ships incident to dock-yard purposes corresponds almost exactly in width to similar space at Rosyth. Scotland, the great British dock yard which served the larger units of the grand fleet dur riority in respect to exposure to gates for which there remedy,

"Conclusion.—(1) From a military standpoint the only important difference between the Carquinez site and the Lower Bay locations is a considerable superiority possessed by the Carquinez site on account of its being more secure against enemy bombardment from seaward. (2) From a seamanship standpoint there is no important defect in the Carquinez site. In balancing the several advantages and disadvantages of the two general localities (Carquinez and Lower Bay) the superiority is in favor of the Carquinez Straits project.

"Captain, United States Navy."

E. L. Beach,

Captain, United States Navy.

Now, I ask the Senator from Washington again what was the recommendation of this committee with respect to that question, whether the joint commission recommended the mere establishment of a naval supply base to cost three or four million dollars, or whether it recommended the establishment of such a base as is contemplated in that study and the probable expenditure of between $60,000,000 and $100,000,000, as is stated by Capt. Beach?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The best answer to that is the report of the committee. I had to write the report myself, and submitted it to the committee as I understood the views of the committee to be. If the Senator wants me to read it, I will do so; it is very brief.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not ask the Senator to read it into the RECORD at this time. I assumed that the Senator, his committee having justified the recommendation of this amendment on the basis of the investigation and report by the joint commission, would be able to state the substance of the report. I can read it almost as well as the Senator from Washington.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Arkansas is quite imperious in his demand as to the manner in which I shall answer his question.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in reply to that suggestion, did any other Senator than the Senator from Washington think that when I asked him for the substance of the report of the committee I expected him, in my time, to read a 15-page printed report in order to answer the question whether this joint commission had recommended the limit of activities at Alameda contemplated by the policy of the Senator from Washington, or whether it had reported recommending the broader activities to which I have already referred?

I do not think that in declining in my time to permit the Senator to read the whole report I acted in an imperious manner. The Senator, of course, can take the floor and read the report in his own time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The report deals with a great many different bases. I was going to read only about 10 lines, which relate to Alameda.

Mr. ROBINSON. I will be glad to yield to the Senator for that purpose, if he will be kind enough to read such part of the report as he thinks germane to this question.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The report reads:

Mr. POINDEXTER. The report reads:

The large acreage at Alameda makes possible a naval base which will permit not only of dry docks on satisfactory pile foundations, berthing space, repairs shops, etc., but also of shipbuilding facilities to any extent desired, base for fuel, oil, and coal, and other naval supplies, aviation fields, training, and other stations. This would give ample opportunity for the development of an adequate naval base with all of its activities concentrated at one point.

If such a base is developed at Alameda, the existing dry docks located at Hunters Point will still be available for Government use in case of emergency. Under the direction of the committee, numerous estimates of costs were prepared for comparative purposes, which are to be found in Appendix B.

Nearly all of the site, containing approximately 5,340 acres, offered by the city of Alameda is submerged, and it is estimated that the entire area can be dredged and filled to meet the needs of the proposed base at an approximate cost of $6,000 per acre; however, plans for present development contemplate the filling in of only approximately 500 acres.

The Alameda site has excellent advantages of labor supply, trans-

The Alameda site has excellent advantages of labor supply, transportation, and communication.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I think the portion of the report read by the Senator from Washington justifies the conclusion that the joint committee differs with the Senator from Washington as to what the policy of the Government should be in making this improvement. I think the report upon which the Senator justifies his amendment, and which the Senator has just read, contemplates, in the plainest language, an implied recommendation that there not only be established a naval base at San Francisco, in the ordinary sense of that term, but all of the auxiliaries to make a complete naval base, including dry docks adequate for every ship in the service and repair shops adequate for the entire fleet.

That conclusion is reinforced by the further statement of the committee read by the Senator from Washington that the dry docks at Hunters Point could be used for emergency purposes. What is the meaning of that statement, if it does not contemplate an abandonment of their use for general purposes? It does not take a lawyer of rare intelligence to construe that language. It means that we will make Alameda a principal naval base, with dry docks and repair shops, and that we will retain whatever we have at Mare Island for emergency purposes. I say that if the Senator bases this amendment on that report, every Senator here is justified in reaching the conclusion that this initial appropriation of $1,500,000 means the expenditure in the end of between $60,000,000 and $100,000,000, as stated by the Government expert who made the investigation.

from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], has no dry dock; a long stretch of 2,000 miles without a dock adequate to provide for the big naval ships. Mare Island has a dock which, according to the testimony of apparently the best-informed expert I have been able to consult on the subject, namely, Capt. Beach, is already adequate to meet the requirements of 90 per cent of the ships in the naval service. With the expenditure of $26,000,000, he says, you can do at Mare Island what it will cost you between $60,000,000 and $100,000,000 to accomplish at Alameda.

Reference was made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Ball] a while ago to the inability of ships to enter at Mare Island, and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] had something to say with regard to the contrary proposition. Let me read just a few lines of what this witness, who is the commandant at Mare Island, said about it, and I believe every Senator will take his conclusion as being in the nature of reliable expert testimony.

If, by comparatively small expense, the Carquinez Straits Station can be made to take care of the additional 10 per cent—

That is, after having said that Mare Island would take care of the 90 per cent-is it economical, good business, and good judgment to locate within 35 miles another naval base at a cost which will vary between $60,000,000 and $100,000,000 and throw away the 90 per cent capability that Mare

Island is reported by the Helm Board to have, and further, probably ultimately, to sacrifice the Government's investment at Mare Island and its splendid capabilities?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it was stated to the Senate Naval Affairs Committee by officers of the General Board of the Navy that they contemplated building up ultimately a great navy yard and naval station, combining all the possible activities of a naval base, at Alameda. One of them, I think, fixed a limit of a hundred years before it would be fully developed.

If the Senator proposes, because there is a possibility of building up another navy yard at Alameda, that we will not have anything there at all, will not have any supply base there, then I think his position is perfectly well founded in fact. If the Senator will read this amendment closely, he will notice that it provides for a naval supply base, and I think that word "supply" is very significant. It was intended when it was put there to be significant, to be a limitation upon this appropriation, the idea being that we could establish a supply base there with a reasonable expenditure of money, and that Congress had sufficient power to restrain the future expenditures in the development of that yard within reasonable limits and for reasonable purposes.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Arkansas yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The testimony which has been taken conclusively establishes the fact that the General Board contemplates the construction in the near future of a great naval base at Alameda, and there was a great deal of evidence as to the salvage of the plant at Mare Island. All of the testimony contem-plated the destruction of the Mare Island Navy Yard and the construction of a stupendous naval base in the near future at Alameda at a cost of all the way from fifty to seventy-five or a hundred million dollars. The Senator from Arkansas is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator from Utah. The Senator from Utah is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and no doubt he has been studying the subject very carefully. I have no object except to bring to the attention of the Senate what I believe this item really means, and I think the discussion of the matter with the Senator from Washington has made the conclusion I stated in the beginning almost unanswerable, that whatever may be his individual views regarding the amendment, it rests upon a Government policy of abandoning Mare Island, at which has been expended $60,000,000 of Government money, and of establishing in place of it another naval base which shall in time, in the early future, carry on all of the activities which are now being conducted at Mare Island.

The question for you to decide, in voting on this amendment, is not whether you want to reclaim 500 acres of land which a city is willing to give to the Government in order to have other land appreciated in value; that is not the question here, but the question is whether you want to scrap $60,000,000 worth of property at Mare Island and spend between sixty and one hundred million dollars at Alameda, within 35 miles of Mare Island.

Why do you suppose the city is giving 500 acres of land at Alameda to this Government? Is it from a patriotic desire to serve the United States?

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. BALL rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Capper in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee because he rose first.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the reclaiming of the land will cost $3,000 an acre.

Mr. ROBINSON. Six thousand dollars per acre.
Mr. McKELLAR. Five hundred acres at $1,500,000 would be $3,000 an acre.

Mr. ROBINSON. But I think the estimate in the report is that it will cost $6,000 an acre.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no doubt that eventually it will do so, but the initial cost is $3,000 an acre.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, there have been individuals who from patriotic motives have made gifts to the Government, and it may be that San Francisco desires to demonstrate that spirit. I would be the last Senator here to discredit such a purpose, but there is a large tract of comparatively valueless land in that vicinity. The establishment of a naval base there and the reclamation of 500 acres of land by the Government means a multiplication of the value of the remaining land to the extent of between five and ten to one.

Mr. BALL, Mr. President-

Mr. ROBINSON. I now yield with pleasure to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BALL. While the Senator is dealing with the proposition of scrapping the property at Mare Island for which a large amount of money has been expended, I should like to call his attention to evidence which was submitted to the committee by Admiral Rodman.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator will pardon me he can do that a little later. I wish to continue the evidence of this—

Mr. BALL. I merely desired to say that money spent at Mare Island, no difference how much additional money may be expended there, in the opinion of the leading admirals will be only an additional waste and that it can not be used.
Mr. ROBINSON. Why?

Mr. BALL. It would only take a moment to read his evidence, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. ROBINSON. All right; I shall be very glad to have the Senator do that. From what page does the Senator read?

Of these two yards, Mare Island is prohibitive to our capital ships, and we are building larger ones. It is prohibitive to them, I say, and every capital ship that we have must go to Bremerton as conditions obtain to-day. We have, roughly, I believe, 186 ships in this fleet now. But we are way, way behind in our plans for maintenance, upkeep, and docking, because we haven't the facilities here for the nucleus of the United States fleet that would come to this coast in time of threatened danger. If the Atlantic Fleet were to come to this coast to day it would be swamped and ships would have to go out of commission, a great many of them, because they could not be maintained.

He clearly sets forth in this evidence that Mare Island can never be used for the care of capital ships, no difference how much money we spend there. If we move the yard  $2\frac{1}{2}$  miles farther down onto ground where it is almost impossible to build dry docks or where it would be very expensive to do it, then with the great cost of maintenance of the channel, it could be maintained. But the maintenance of the channel compared with the cost of the yard there and the base at Alameda would be such that it was the opinion not only of the committee but of the board and all the engineers that Alameda was the economical place at which to locate it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, Mr. President, that statement also justifies the assertion that the real purpose of proceeding at Alameda is not to build a few storehouses to contain naval supplies, but that it is to abandon Mare Island and make Alameda a general naval base.

Mr. KING. They have let the cat out of the bag. Mr. McCORMICK. May I interrupt the Senator? Mr. ROBINSON. I will yield to the Senator in a moment, but before I do, let me read a little more that Admiral Rodman said before he stated what the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Ball] quoted him as saying:

When I came to the coast, one of the missions, among other things, assigned to me was to prospect this coast, both for strategic reasons and from the view of maintaining our fleet. Heretofore we have had every reason to believe, and correctly so, that the naval machine would find itself at work in the Atlantic. It did. In fact, up to this point nearly all of our development has been on the east coast. To-day we have on the Pacific coast two yards, one at Bremerton and one at Mare Island. You all know the number on the Atlantic. Of those two yards, Mare Island is prohibitive to our capital ships.

And so forth.

It was just upon that last point that I was quoting the commandant at Mare Island when I was interrupted and diverted from a discussion of the proposition as to what can be done at Mare Island. I am not going to read all the testimony that bears upon this subject, but I think in view of the course the debate has taken I will print it in the Record. The evidence shows that already there can be cared for at Mare Island 90 per cent of all the ships of our Navy in 1921, and that by a small expenditure the remainder can be cared for at or near that point. I read:

It is a matter of statistics that there is much less fog at Mare Island than in lower San Francisco Bay. Further, that in the 66 years that ships have been coming to and from Mare Island I have never heard of a single ship that ever went aground proceeding from San Francisco to Mare Island. In the last 21 months that I have been on duty here, there have been many hundreds of ships going to and from the lower bay to Mare Island. There has never been one that ever went aground or reported that it could not navigate because of the fog, or that was interfered with by the fog. It is to be remembered that there is not much fog at Mare Island.

The only important difficulty about providing for all the ships at Mare Island is the channel which can be kept dredged as stated by, I think, the Senator from Washington, at a comparatively small annual expense, so that with the expenditure of $26,000,000 at Mare Island, according to the statement of this expert, we can enjoy all the facilities for our Navy that will be provided at Alameda by the expenditure of between $60,000,-000 and $100,000,000 more money, and at the same time avoid the scrapping of the property at Mare Island. Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield to me just a moment?

Mr. ROBINSON. With pleasure.

Mr. KING. Apropos of the statement made by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Ball] about Admiral Rodman, it looks as though some of the admirals are carrying on a persistent propaganda in favor of Alameda. If they would look more after their naval duties and less after naval sites in the interest apparently of some section in the country. I think they would be serving the country better.

Admiral Halstead has recently been compelled to give out an interview, and in support of the statement which the Senator has made as to the purpose to destroy Mare Island to make Alameda a great naval base, he states in the concluding sentence of his interview recently published in the San Francisco

Chronicle:

The milk in the coconut lies in the fact that the Government have twenty millions invested in the Mare Island plant.

Of course that is not correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is, $20,000,000 the year before the investigation was made?

Mr. KING. That interview was only a day or two ago. It simply shows he is not accurate in his statement.

Mr. ROBINSON. There was $20,000,000 spent in 1919.

Mr. KING. Admiral Halstead continued:

Some people want to salvage that by making a base out of it, but it is throwing good money after bad for an all-time proposition. The sooner you get your base at the right place the sooner you are on the right track.

The point I am trying to make is that he is seeking to scrap Mare Island and establish an immense naval base at Alameda. Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt at that point?

Mr. ROBINSON. With pleasure.
Mr. McCORMICK. I should like to recall the circumstances under which the special committee was sent to California. It was upon my motion, if I remember correctly. A member of the committee had asked for an appropriation of $500,000 to be expended on the Alameda site. There were members of the committee who felt that if any sum were to be expended in San Francisco Bay upon any site other than Mare Island it should be only after the most thorough investigation and with a view to the establishment ultimately of a single great naval base, whether at Mare Island or elsewhere.

Some Senator a moment ago alluded to "letting the cat out of the bag." It seemed to me that the committee went there with the avowed purpose of determining whether Mare Island was to be abandoned or not. I know when I moved for the appointment of the committee that was the idea which presented itself to me. If the report had been conclusive that because the channel was inadequate and could not be made adequate, if it had been conclusive that Mare Island was unsafe, because open to enemy gun fire, then we ought to plan to abandon Mare Island and find another site.

If the Senator will bear with me for a moment, because I was interested in this project in its very beginning-

Mr. ROBINSON. I gladly yield. Mr. McCORMICK. If Mare Island is unsuitable for a naval base, then that ought to be determined beyond peradventure, Mare Island, no matter what has been expended there, ought to be abandoned.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator from Illinois permit me? Mr. ROBINSON. I have the floor and I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SWANSON. The difference between a naval base and a navy yard is that submarines can be constructed and smaller ships and various work of that kind done at a navy yard. We very rarely have the two combined. The navy yard and the naval base very frequently interfere with each other: I do not favor abandoning Mare Island as a navy yard and losing all we have and losing all the expenditures we have made there. I favor supplementing it with a naval base.

Mr. BORAH. That may be the object and purpose of the Senator from Virginia and he may be voting that way.

Mr. ROBINSON. And of the Senator from Washington. believe it is because he said so, but I am making the point-

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, I should like to know how else it can be done except by changing the language of the amendment, because the language of the amendment is plain and clear that we have no plan for any abandon-ment of Mare Island. Now if the Senator can think of stronger language to show that this will be a naval supply base, I should like to have it inserted.

Mr. BORAH. When the next bill comes along the language in which the Senator is now so deeply interested will disappear and other language, which creates a permanent structure, will appear upon the scene.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the difference between him and me in this matter is this: I say the only way we are going to keep Mare Island from being abolished is by supplementing its needs by the establishment of a naval base. If we shall not provide for the establishment of a naval base there within a reasonable time to supply the ships and to enable vessels desiring to do so to come in and obtain supplies, there will be a proposition to abandon Mare Island and to create another navy yard. I have never favored the abolition of Mare Island, which is an efficient navy yard. All that is needed to supplement it is a naval supply base.

Mr. BORAH. Down at the bottom of this thing nobody contends that it is anything but an abandonment. The Navy understands that it is an abandonment; the people of California understand that it is an abandonment; everybody understands that it is an abandonment. That is just the reason, Mr. President, why at this time I am opposed to this proposition. We are not dealing with the thing as it actually is but we are dealing with it in a way that ultimately we shall be called upon to carry out that which the Senator says now is never intended to be carried out. Now, let us determine this matter for the present, and then let us have a report which shall pass upon the question of the abandonment of Mare Island.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, what suggestion has he to make? We have a fleet in the Pacific, which will be increased. The fleet in the Pacific can not get supplies, for there is now no naval base at San Francisco. If the Senater can offer a cheaper and a better method to accomplish the desired result, I should like to have him offer an amendment to that end. His proposal would simply involve a delay of two or three years, when the matter has already been delayed for several years, for we have put it off trying to reach a conclusion. We sent a committee there. What is needed is a naval supply base. I am opposed to the abandonment of Mare Island as a navy yard. If the pending proposition was not designed to provide a naval supply base, I would not give it my support. If the Senator can show me any other way in which we can get a naval supply base for the fleet which is now in the Pacific and which will be there in the future, I will be glad to support it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I will use a little of my own time myself and then I shall be glad to yield, unless the Senator from Idaho wishes now to conclude.

Mr. BORAH. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCor-MICK | has admitted what I thought to be true when I took the floor.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Illinois has assertednot admitted

Mr. ROBINSON. I thank the Senator. The Senator from Illinois was the originator of the investigation. It was his purpose that the joint committee should investigate and answer the question, Shall we scrap Mare Island and create a new naval base and docking and repair station in proximity to it? He himself says that that was the question which the joint committee was expected to answer.

The Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] read the report of the joint commission, and while it does not answer the question as fully as it might be answered—that is, it does not say in answer to the question whether we shall scrap Mare Island, yes, and in answer to the further question whether we shall build at another point, yes or no—it enters into a discussion of the whole subject. The report of the General Board, handed me by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Ball] while I have been speaking, apparently to convince me to the contrary, shows that the whole object of that investigation and study was the determination of that very question. Now, after the commission reports impliedly but not expressly in favor of it—
Mr. POINDEXTER. The report is very expressive on the subject, Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon my reading from the report.

Although I was right in the middle of a Mr. ROBINSON.

sentence, I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not intend to break into the middle of a sentence

The Senator has already broken in. Let Mr. ROBINSON. him make his statement if he will.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On page 7 of this document the committee reports:

The existing navy yard on Mare Island was established in 1854 and has been gradually developed since until the total investment of the Government in the yard up to date is approximately $32,000,000—

Not $60,000,000, as the Senator said.

Mr. ROBINSON. I quoted the statement of Capt. Beach, the commandant.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The report continues:

The cost of replacing or of constructing anew at this time such a plant as is now established at this yard, or its equivalent, is estimated at approximately $15,000,000, and the salvage value of the plant at $8,000,000.

Leaving a balance of $8,000,000 of loss in case it were abandoned.

However, the Navy General Board has reported to the Secretary of the Navy in regard to this site as follows:

"The Mare Island Navy Yard, happily situated in many respects, has continually labored under the disadvantage of a location on a shallow and muddy estuary reached by a dredged channel several miles long through Pinole Shoal, making access difficult. The proposed plan to crect a supplementary establishment at the lower end of Mare Island on a very restricted site does not remove the disadvantages due to Pinole Shoal, and it introduces a new disadvantage because the existing shops will then be 2 miles from the new development. But even should the shops at the upper end of the island in time be moved to the new site—which would almost surely follow—the resulting base would still be cramped and unsuitable.

"The site for docks and sites for heavy machinery in proximity to them are limited. Future development is difficult. The muddy estuary and extensive San Pablo Bay flats have always to be reckoned with.

"The cost of the proposed layout is relatively low because the facilities will have been increased by only two dry docks and additional plers. The General Board considers that this layout would not meet the need for an adequate base on the Pacific coast, and that expansion would be difficult and costly.

That ends the extract from the General Board report. The committee report proceeds as follows:

In view of all of these considerations the joint committee concludes and so recommends that the site offered by the city of Alameda be selected, with a view to the development thereon of a naval base. The navy yard at Mare Island is an excellent navy yard, well equipped and efficient, and should be continued in its present activities as a navy yard for construction and repair purposes as differentiated from an operating and supply base; and the naval base to be established at Alameda should for the present be limited to an operating, docking, and apply base supply base

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois struck the keynote when he said that there ought to have been a frank determination of the matter which the committee inves-The committee ought to have said, in view of the purpose for which the investigation originated, whether Mare Island is impracticable for the further uses of the Navy in order that Congress might be apprised as to what it was doing; but, in view of the report of the General Board, the statement of Admiral Rodman, quoted by the Senator from Delaware, and the purpose for which the investigation was originated, I think I am justified in the conclusion that the adoption of this amendment really means the abandonment of Mare Island as a naval station, as a navy yard. That is the way it is understood by the people of California. The people who have homes in the vicinity of Mare Island understand that the question that was considered by these agents of the Government was whether, under existing conditions, Mare Island ought to be abandoned or whether it ought to be enlarged and made available for the use of all the fleet. Under these circumstances, just as sure as we make this appropriation, the next naval appropriation bill will contain a large sum for the building of dry docks and repair facilities at Alameda.

The report of the General Board shows that for years that policy, in a general way, has been under consideration. The study that was made of the subject was with a view not to limit the activities at Alameda to providing naval supplies and furnishing them to ships, but to doing everything that is necessary to be done in a modern naval base, including docking facilities, repairs, and the keeping of necessary supplies.

The statement of the Senator from Illinois and of the Senator ator from Utah, considered in connection with the testimony which I have read and the statements of the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Delaware, warrant that conclusion.

Now listen. If, in the interest of the naval service, this thing ought to be done, I am for it; but I do not want to commit this Government to a policy of that nature on the theory that we are doing something else when we make the move. There is not an admiral in the Navy of the United States who does not understand that this appropriation is an entering wedge to the ac-complishment of a larger policy leading to the abandonment and scrapping of Mare Island and the establishment of a naval station nearer San Francisco, perhaps, in what will become finally a more convenient location, what may become a better location, by the expenditure of millions of dollars. Not only do the officers in the Navy look at it in that way, but the people of California understand it in that way. Everybody but the acting chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Senator from Delaware, who ought to know most about it, have that understanding of it.

The Senator from Delaware seems to justify the item on the ground that Mare Island ought to be scrapped because it can not be made adequate for the requirements of the service under modern conditions, but at the same time he impliedly declares there is no such purpose contemplated or in prospect.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BALL. I merely desire to correct the Senator. The Senator from Delaware voted in committee not to scrap Mare Island, but that Mare Island should be maintained.

Mr. ROBINSON. And so did the Senator from Washington; but the two Senators are doing what means the scrapping of Mare Island to everybody but themselves. The Senator has helped me to make my point, which I had difficulty in express-Everybody but the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Delaware, everybody, including the Senator who originated the investigation out of which this item grows, knows that the adoption of the item probably means much more than appears on the face of the item.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, there has not been any concealment at all about it. I stated to the Senator a moment ago that the members of the Naval General Board who appeared before the Senate Naval Affairs Committee were very frank and very explicit in their statement that it meant the abandonment of the Mare Island Navy Yard, according to their plan. It is up to Congress to say what shall be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes; and now, in accordance with their plan, the Senator from Washington, as acting chairman of the committee, has reported this amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why, of course, it is up to Congress.
Mr. POINDEXTER. It has not been reported on their plan at all, because it is a supply base, and their plan was for a general naval base.

Mr. ROBINSON. Of course, Congress has the power to make or not to make the appropriation; but if everybody except the Senator from Washington and the Senator from Delaware realizes that in the adoption of this amendment we are committing ourselves to the abandonment of Mare Island and the creation of a new naval base and navy yard near by, when the next appropriation bill is under consideration the theory of the Naval Board and others will prevail, as I think it has prevailed and does prevail in the present bill, in fact.

Of course, Congress can say, after it authorizes a project, that it will not carry it out. It has done that a few times; but the agitation on this subject originated in a contention on the part of authorities in the Navy and others that Mare Island for modern uses had become antiquated, and they wanted to get away from it. The joint committee went there to investigate the matter, and out of that investigation has grown an item which, on its face, is a compromise of the proposition; but the adoption of a naval base at Alameda, within 35 miles of Mare Island, where it could be placed, is a long step toward the abandonment of Mare Island, because everybody knows that this Government is not going to build a new, complete naval station with dry docks and repair shops, as these officers in their reports contemplate, at Alameda, and retain one at Mare Island.

All of my contention from the beginning has been that in adopting this item we ought to understand fully what we are doing. If we vote for it, we do not vote for it on the theory that an expenditure of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 will be made at Alameda. We might just as well understand that we are committing ourselves to the policy of the General Board, so that in the course of time, and as soon as Congress can be induced to provide the necessary funds, we will be abandoning the property at Mare Island, whatever it is worth, whether it is worth $50,000,000 or $25,000,000, and we will be expending at Alameda a large sum, whether it is $25,000,000 or $60,000,000

We can not determine this question without answering the question which the joint committee was appointed to investigate in the beginning. If the Congress wants to scrap Mare Island because it thinks the contention of the Senator from Delaware, supported by the statement of Admiral Rodman, is correct—that Mare Island can not be made adequate for the requirements of a modern navy-then let us do so with a full understanding of the consequences of our act, and the assertion of our responsibilities. If you want to make it impossible that hereafter the action of Congress in adopting this provision shall be construed to have in fact committed itself to the broader policy which underlies the proposed legislation, you can do that by language that even the Senator from Delaware and the Senator from Washington will understand as other people understand it.

You can make it so plain that even I can understand it, so that there will be no doubt about it. If you want to carry out the policy which you say is yours, namely, not to abandon Mare Island, I challenge you to write into the bill a provision that Congress has no purpose to abandon Mare Island or to abate the activities of the Government at that place.

Mr. SWANSON. I shall be glad to vote for such a provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas

has the floor

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, I understand that the Senator from irginia would agree to anything to get this item by.

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator is mistaken, and I resent that. I care nothing about this item—not a bit more than does the Senator from Arkansas—for or against it. I have fought all the time the abandonment of Mare Island.

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, Mr. President, my remark was a feeble attempt at humor. I think I have stated before that I am frequently under the necessity of having either to apologize for or to explain my jokes.

Mr. SWANSON. I will state, further—— The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. SWANSON. If this contemplates the abolition of the navy yard at Mare Island, which has cost over $60,000,000 a step which I fought ever since I have been on the Naval Affairs Committee—I am opposed to the amendment. I have never said I was in favor of anything excepting an additional supply base for Mare Island; but if the purpose is what is indicated by the Senator from Illinois I am against it, and I want to state that I have always taken that position.

Mr. ROBINSON. I know that the Senator from Virginia is in earnest now, and I know that the Senator from Washington, having expressed the same purpose, will offer an amendment which will make it clear to my satisfaction.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will accept an amendment to that effect, as far as I am concerned, if the Senator from Arkansas will propose it.

Mr. SWANSON. I want that made clear and specific. first time I ever spoke on that subject, which was when I was chairman of the committee, I stated that under no circumstances would I ever consent to the abolition of Mare Island as a navy yard. It is as good as any navy yard we have.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That was the unanimous report of the joint committee that examined the matter.

Mr. SWANSON. It ought to be made clear, and it ought to be made clear that this is nothing but a naval supply base to supply Mare Island.

Mr. ROBINSON. With all due respect to the Senator from Virginia, I doubt whether when he studies the subject he will agree to such a proposition as that or the assertion of it in this bill. If you are going to put a naval supply base at Alameda. you will find irresistible pressure to put there a repair station. You will find irresistible presure to put there dry docks.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield, with pleasure, to the Senator from

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Can the Senator from Arkansas conceive of any language that could be written into this bill with respect to this amendment or any other provision in the bill that would bind any future Congress or any other committee?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly not.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it will not interfere with the Senator's argument, let me say this:

It is just about 12 years ago that on this floor I attacked Mare Island, Portsmouth, Charleston, and a number of other ports where dry docks were appropriated for and had for years been appropriated for in the naval appropriation bills. I thought at the time that I made an argument that was convincing that dry docks never ought to have been located at those points. I quoted the opinions of naval experts. It was shown in the course of the discussion from the authorities quoted here that the naval vessels we were then building could not be taken safely into Portsmouth and docked, and that there had been a powerful influence exerted against the construction of larger vessels because they could not be docked in Portsmouth. I have not much doubt but that Mare Island is faultily located, and I have not any assurance from anything I have listened to here that Alameda is any better.

The trouble with almost all of these propositions is that there are influences back of them that succeed in putting them over, and ultimately the country finds that it has been imposed upon, and we are loaded down with appropriations for years, and finally a demonstration is made that we have squandered a lot of the public money and that you can not work out the proposition; and back of it all lies, I think, a very fundamental defect in the way in which we legislate.

I do not believe there ought to be a man on the Committee on Naval Affairs who has a navy yard in his State. I do not believe there is any difference between the moral standpoint of those Senators and that of the rest of us; but we are all human, and we are all subject to the influences which are brought to bear on us, and to the selfishness that is in all human nature to secure the largest possible appropriations for our States. If we adopted the policy of excluding from the membership of the committees that have charge of rivers and harbors all Senators and all Members who have harbors located in their districts, I think, we would have a bill that is more in accordance with the interests of the general public; and let me say to you that it is no longer than 12 years ago that the Speaker of the House of Representatives declined to put upon the Naval Affairs Committee a single man in the House of Representatives with a navy yard in his district.

I do not know how long that policy of reform was adhered to over there, but I know it was thoroughly investigated at the time this very naval appropriation bill that I speak of was under discussion, and it is to be found in the debates on that subject.

Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon for intruding upon his argument in this way, but I venture to suggest that as the debate on this appropriation bill develops here it discloses rather startling conditions. Take the Charleston proposition, which was debated day before yesterday. We ran along here in the debate with members of the committee present, and with everybody who ought to be informed of it in attendance upon the debate, upon the assumption that no appropriation had ever been authorized, and it took something like a half or threequarters of an hour's or an hour's debate to disclose the true facts with respect to it.

With reference to this important item-we started out with the assumption that Mare Island was all right; that there is not any proposal to abandon it; and that there never was anything contemplated by anybody excepting the establishment at Alameda of some warehouses, and all that. In the course of the debate it has unwound itself, until now it is quite apparent that the stakes are being driven and the surveys being made, and we will be laying the foundations in this legislation for an enormous appropriation, duplicating what has been done at Mare

I beg the Senator's pardon for breaking into his argument. Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, of course this Congress can not bind a future Congress. If we adopted an amendment like that suggested by the Senator from Virginia and mentioned by myself, declaring that the policy in establishing a naval supply base at Alameda did not contemplate the abandonment of any activities now carried on at Mare Island, the next Congress could and probably would say that on questions of policy each Congress is the judge for itself, and in all probability they would declare that it having been known when this question arose that the real policy of the naval authorities was to shift from Mare Island to somewhere else, and this debate having proceeded as it has and a compromise being reached, if we make such a declaration of policy as I referred to in what perhaps was an ill-considered effort on my part at humor as readiness to compromise to get the item by, it would not settle anything

I think this debate has developed the fact that while the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Washington, the latter the acting chairman and the former the ranking member on the Committee on Naval Affairs, desire to confine the operations at Alameda to a naval supply base, as strictly defined, those who are responsible for the naval policy of the Government in an executive way, those in whose minds the project at Alameda originated, desire and intend that Alameda shall be made a great navy yard, with dry docks and repair stations as well as warehouses, and I have not the slightest doubt that forceful arguments can be made to support that When we legislate, we ought to do it with a full knowledge of the facts and circumstances surrounding the case and what the probable consequences of our action at this time will be.

That was the purpose for which I rose to address the Senate, and I had expected to consume but a few minutes, having had little opportunity to look into the RECORD. I have felt, and do feel, that this item is not understood by the Senate: that on its face it does not reveal its true purposes and probable effect, and if I have succeeded in making that clear I have accomplished what I rose to do.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, before this debate closes I wish to refer again to the circumstances under which the joint committee went to the Pacific coast. The decision to send a subcommittee to the coast was taken by the conferees on the Navy bill during the last Congress.

The senior Senator from California at that time [Mr. Phelan] had urged upon the committee the importance of appropriating $500,000 or $1,000,000 to be expended at Alameda. The conferees, or at least some of them, believed that it would be a mistake to appropriate a small sum to establish a new and small supply base or depot. There were some of them who shared the view held some years ago by the Navy Department that it was unwise to stud the coasts of the country with naval bases and navy yards as the heavens are studded with stars. They believed that this appropriation in the long run would contribute very little to the national defense unless there were some fundamental strategic reasons for creating at Alameda or at Mare Island a single great base. They felt it would be a mistake to have in San Francisco two naval bases, yards, or whatever you may call them.

For that reason they refused to include in the bill an appropriation comparable with this one and for an intimated purpose comparable to this one, and in view thereof decided that a joint committee should go to the coast to determine the great question as to the site for the permanent great naval base on the Pacific coast.

I submit that the report does not even pretend to decide that question. I speak, if you please, as one Member of this body who supports the general contention of the committee, and who purposes to vote for the principal items reported by the committee. But I add in this connection that there is no evidence in the report which would justify our making an appropriation of this size for the purpose declared by the committee. The committee had reported that it favored an appropriation of $10,000,000, because the overwhelming evidence of the naval experts themselves was that Mare Island must be abandoned, and then there would be an argument in support of the committee's contention. The result is that I am reluctantly compelled, from my knowledge of the purposes of the trip of the joint committee to the coast, to oppose the appropriation for Alameda.

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I have listened to the debate on the establishment of a naval base at Alameda with a great deal of interest. I think the Senator from Arkansas deserves great credit and has done a great public service in calling attention to this situation. This Alameda amendment ought to be defeated by all means, and I expect to vote against it. It is a wholly useless expenditure of the public funds, and will doubtless lead to still further waste and needless extravagance in the future.

But, Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of discussing the naval bill at this time. I rose to call the attention of the Senate to a very ludicrous description of our foreign relations which appeared in the Washington Post this morning, most of it on the leading columns of the front page. I desire to read, first, very shortly from an article by that brilliant and gifted newspaper spokesman of the Senate majority, Mr. Albert W. Fox. In discussing our foreign relations Mr. Fox said this morning:

Instructions sent by Secretary of State Hughes to Ambassador George Harvey, who will represent President Harding at the next meeting of the supreme council, make it clear that the United States Government does not wish to in any way become involved in the Upper Silesia boundary dispute, but that this Government does naturally wish to be kept advised as to what decisions are reached by the European powers. Mr. Harvey will therefore act as observer without giving advice or participating in the deliberations relative to a solution of this European problem. There will be no possible opportunity for the European powers to draw the United States into the position of mediator or unpire as between the contentions of France and Great Britain, and, furthermore, there will be no encouragement of the idea that America is taking the first steps toward involvement in European political disputes. All this was made clear yesterday by officials of the Harding administration who are particularly anxious that the policy which the United States Government is pursuing be properly understood.

Mr. President, that is a perfectly clear statement by this

Mr. President, that is a perfectly clear statement by this gifted and brilliant writer who so often writes for the Republican majority in the Senate, and I am quite sure that this statement of the case will be pleasing to the eloquent Senator from California [Mr. Johnson] and the just as eloquent Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah] and the able and distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], who is facing me at this moment. I am quite sure the doctrine of noninterference with European affairs could not be any better stated. It is clear and specific, says this writer, that Mr. Harvey had been instructed not to take any part in the consideration of the Silesian question.

But, Mr. President, what does the Associated Press say in the same paper on the same first page? I read from the Associated Press dispatch in this morning's issue of the Washington Post, which, I believe, is the leading Republican paper, or administration paper, in this city:

The American ambassador, George Harvey, in his speech at the Pilgrims' dinner this evening, announced that he had just received instructions designating him to represent the President on the supreme council with regard to Silesia.

I wonder how that affects the Senator from Wisconsin and other irreconcilables? Does this not look like they are going Is it the first involvement in European affairs? Is it the new association of nations? The Associated Press says Col. Harvey has instructions to take part in the Silesian question. Mr. POINDEXTER, Is he in favor of Mare Island?

Mr. McKELLAR. No; I think he is like the Senator from Washington; he does not know anything about Mare Island, as has been demonstrated here in the debate on this floor this afternoon.

Mr. President, I do not know which of these two gentlemen is right. I do not know whether the Associated Press is right or not; it is usually right, and it is backed up by Mr. Harvey's own words in a speech he made last night. But one or the other of them is right, and my irreconcilable friends on the other side can take that position indicated by Mr. Fox if they want to, and those who do not believe with them can take the other position indicated by the Associated Press. It is just a matter of choice.

But, strange as these statements may be, I call attention to two others in this morning's Post that are just as remarkable a description of our foreign relations.

I quote the following from Col. George Harvey's speech made last night at the Pilgrims' dinner in London:

It follows, then, that the present Government could not, without be-trayal of its creators and masters, and will not, I can assure you, have anything whatsoever to do with the league or any commission or com-mittee appointed by it or responsible to it directly or indirectly, openly or furtively.

The supreme council is acting or the other commissions appointed by it are acting for the league, certainly directly or indirectly, and yet this is a statement from our ambassador to England that we will not have anything to do with it or them. I am sure that would please the Senator from Wisconsin! There can not be any question about it! But how was Col. Harvey's remarks on this subject received over there? Why, I do not think some of these gentlemen paid very much attention to what our ambassador said on the subject, because here is what Mr. Lloyd-George said in reply to our ambassador's speech, evidently ignoring Col. Harvey's assertions about commissions or councils. I call particular attention to this very remarkable speech of Mr. Lloyd-George. It is worth reading. Its irony is manifest. It was indeed remarkable, and it wound up somewhat in this way:

I am glad, then, that the ambassador's appointment coincides with the decision of the United States to be represented adequately in the councils of the nation. I am glad that the new ambassador has been chosen as the representative of the United States and that he will be present at the coming meeting. It is essential for the peace of the world that America should be in.

Mr. President, I do not think I can add to these four very remarkable contradictory statements that appeared in one of the official local organs, if not the most official of all the organs of our friends on the other side of the aisle. There are here four statements. I call them to the attention of the Senate, and especially to my irreconcilable friends over on the other side, and as well to the attention of my friends over there who are not quite so irreconcilable. Here it is, a statement made on the best of authority that we are not going in; that we will not have anything to do with European matters; that we will not sit on any commission or any council. Anybody who believes that way can refer to that evidence. On the other hand, here Col. Harvey is congratulated at the end of Lloyd-George's speech upon coming in, congratulating the United States upon its decision to come in, and it is said we are coming in. I do not know what to think. Some of them say they are going in. Some say they are staying out. Only time will tell. We will wait and see.

Mr. SMITH. Just pay your money and take your choice.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. Has the Senator concluded what he has to say on that point?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have.

Mr. ROBINSON. I had hoped that while the Senator from Tennessee was pointing out the remarkably conflicting posi-

Mr. McKELLAR. I did not essay to do that. My only purpose to-day, if the Senator will permit me, was just to call attention of the Senate and the country to the remarkably conflicting positions that appeared in the one issue of the paper.

RETROACTIVE TARIFF.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was just what I had started to say, that while the Senator was pointing out the remarkable and conflicting statements by the American ambassador to England, who said that he was authorized to sit in the council in discussions relating to Silesia, and who in an address also stated that we will have nothing whatever to do with European affairs, the Senator might also have referred to what I believe to be even a more remarkable policy advanced by one of the leaders of the majority at the other end of the Capitol with reference to a domestic problem.

The press contained the astonishing statement this morning, I believe it was, that one of the recognized leaders of the majority had introduced in the body at the other end of the Capitol a joint resolution for the consideration and action of Congress, proposing to put into effect the rates of a new tariff bill just as soon as that bill shall have been reported by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives. I suppose there are a great many legislative measures that are properly characterized as peculiar and remarkable, but certainly in the history of the American Congress there has never been a more astonishing proposition than that to which I am now referring.

A committee of one of the branches of Congress is to consider and report upon a bill vitally affecting the business interests and industries of the country, and immediately upon the reporting of that bill by the committee, no matter what the House itself may think, and no matter how this body may choose to amend the bill, it is proposed by a leader of the majority that the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives shall have the power to legislate on the manifold subjects that are involved in the tariff bill by putting into effect the recommendations of the committee during the consideration of the bill by the Congress

Mr. SWANSON. Who was that leader? Mr. ROBINSON. I presume there would be no impropriety in responding to the question asked by the Senator from Virginia, in view of the fact that I have stated that he is a recognized leader. I refer to a gentleman who is well known throughout the Nation as a student of tariff questions and a leader of the majority in the House of Representatives-Representative Longworth, of Ohio, a member of the Ways and Means Committee.

Of course we all know that under the Constitution of the United States no bill can become a law until it has been passed by both Houses and signed by the President or, in the event of his refusal to sign it, passed over his veto. But here is a proposition of the utmost importance in domestic affairs that parallels in its eccentricity the incident referred to in our foreign relations by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. Mc-

Congress is to be asked and urged to put a bill into effect before it has passed either body. Oh, no; you will never pass a joint resolution of that character through this body. Unmitigated and amazing as the rapacity may be-oh, I should not say rapacity; I should say eagerness-of those who propose to follow the emergency tariff bill with permanent legislation upon that subject, you can not disregard the plain provision of the In order that its prospective, wholesome benefits Constitution. may be realized by the country before the country knows what they are, and before the Congress has had an opportunity to consider the measure and to amend it, we are to put into effect a new and permanent tariff bill fixing increased rates of tariff duties to be levied upon imports by the very simple process of a joint resolution of Congress. The proposal is both remarkable and shocking.

Mr. President, we are getting in the habit of "joint resoluting." We started out to make technical peace and settle our international difficulties by a joint resolution of Congress. That joint resolution passed the Senate at the last session and was immediately passed by the body at the other end of the Capitol. It was known when that joint resolution passed that it could never become effective; that the then President of the United States would veto it; and that the votes were not to be had to pass it over his veto.

I can not recall now the date when the Senate during the present session passed the joint resolution repealing the declaration of war in which we charged Germany with high crimes against this Nation, its citizens, their lives, and their property. But for a long time it has remained undisposed of in a committee at the other end of the Capitol. Some one near me states that the Knox resolution passed on the 29th of April, almost one month ago. We were told here that the world and the United States were tired of a technical state of war; that we had failed to ratify a treaty of peace defining the terms and conditions upon which this Government could go forward to the achievement of its high destiny in its dealings with other nations; and that a legislative peace was an immediate necessity; but for some reason it has never yet been acted upon by the body at the other end of the Capitol.

I said when the joint resolution was before the Senate that the repeal of the resolution declaring war was unprecedented and unjustified, whatever might be the view of Senators as to the necessity for a resolution recognizing a state of peace; that the repeal of the declaration of war could have no other effect than to strike from the record the charge that this Nation made when it called its sons to arms against Germany, that Germany, in violation of the law of nations established and recognized through a thousand years of progress, had slaughtered our citizens and destroyed their property. Other Senators asserted the same viewpoint. We were in haste to get out of the state of war into a state of peace, and we passed the Knox resolution through the Senate. By some mysterious process which has not been made public it has been held up and no action taken.

Now, this Government, according to the statement of its diplomatic representative at the Court of St. James, has authorized him to sit in, or with, or by, or near the supreme council and advise and assist in its effort to adjust certain European troubles. Along with the exceptional policy, which we are told by the press is shortly to be carried into effect—this policy of repealing the declaration of war and of making a legislative peace-we are proceeding to do what the administration's spokesman said would never be done. When the American ambassador to the Court of St. James takes his seat with the council he will be regarded as the official representative of the United States. This Government will be held responsible for his actions, which must relate to governmental prob-lems. Is it proposed that he proceed in his personal capacity? Does the administration seek to control European politics through the influence of a private citizen of the United States to be exerted upon the supreme council?

In addition to that, in the most important concerns of domestic affairs, we are being asked by a leader of the majority to put into effect a bill reported by his committee when the committee reports that bill. Surely this is a remarkable proposal. It is no more remarkable than the proposals and incidents in relation to our foreign affairs, which have been recited by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKellar]. It is a parallel to them in absurdity, and I want the Record to reflect this parallel.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WADSWORTH in the chair). Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say to the Senator from Arkansas that astonishing as is the proposition of the member of the Ways and Means Committee of the other House to which he has alluded, a more amazing thing to my mind is the fact and I understand it is a fact-that that Member of the House is not himself the initiator nor the responsible agent probably in making that proposition; but this amazing proposition comes from one of the most prominent members of the Cabinet of the President of the United States.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, truly this is the day of astonishing revelations.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. In order to give time to the Senator from Tennessee to find out the connection between the supreme council and the League of Nations, I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

RECESS UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes m.) the Senate took a recess until Monday, May 23, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 20, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God, rebuke us not in Thine anger nor chasten us in Thy displeasure, but hear our supplication and receive our prayer. Give us possession of ourselves that we may do Thy will and find in it increased knowledge and power. The sickle has been thrust into the golden harvest and our country bows in sorrow at the bier of our distinguished jurist. He wrought in harmony with Thy divine plan and will and balanced those virtues that make secure the kingdom of God on earth and in heaven. Take away the gloom of our human weakness and give us the gleam that beats forever against the Father's throne of love and of mercy. With him righteousness and simplicity were the terminal points of all progress. Such men can not die, for Thou wilt protect their immortality. Let the morning light of hope and promise break in the chamber of death and may it flash through the gate and light the way to heaven above, where the mysteries of the night are forever dissolved into the glories of the undying day. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday was read and approved.

EMERGENCY TARIFF BILL.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a confer-

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I object to the presentation of the conference report unless it can be understood it will not be taken up until Monday.

Mr. FORDNEY. We want to take it up as soon as we can, but we want to present it. If we meet to-morrow, we want to take it up to-morrow.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think under the circumstances perhaps it will not be possible to take up the conference report until Monday morning, but I think we ought to take it up on Monday morning.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is no objection to that. Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, with that understanding I am sure there will be no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. FORDNEY. All right, let it go until Monday morning. Mr. Speaker, I submit a conference report for printing under

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan submits a conference report for printing under the rule. The Clerk will report it by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed under the rule.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 937. An act to reimburse Isaiah Stephens, postmaster of McMechen, Marshall County, W. Va., for money and postage stamps stolen; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 938. An act to reimburse S. S. Buzzerd, postmaster at Berkeley Springs, Morgan County, W. Va., for cash stolen; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 990. An act to provide for the sale by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of certain land in the District of Columbia acquired for a school site, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia,

S. 1060. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to punish the transportation of stolen motor vehicles in interstate or foreign commerce," approved October 29, 1919; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 1072. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to provide that the United States shall aid the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1916, as amended and supplemented, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Roads.

S. 1358. An act to provide for maintaining the Corps of Cadets at the United States Military Academy at its maximum authorized strength, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

WASHINGTON MONUMENT ELEVATOR.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I present a House joint resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa presents a House joint resolution and asks for its immediate consideration. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 123) to provide funds for the repair of the elevator in the Washington Monument.

Resolved, etc., That the sum of $900 of the appropriation for the fiscal year 1922 for care and maintenance of the Washington Monument is hereby made immediately available; and for special repairs to the elevator and other mechanical equipment of the Monument there is appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,500 to continue available until June 30, 1922.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. Goon, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows

To Mr. Driver, for 10 days, on account of important official business.

To Miss Robertson, for Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, May 23, 24, and 25, on account of important personal business

To Mr. McSwain, for six days, on account of important busi-

DEATH OF CHIEF JUSTICE WHITE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, May 19, 1921.

Hon, Frederick H. Gillett, Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Sin: I am directed by the Supreme Court of the United States to notify the House of Representatives, through you, that the Chief Justice of the United States died in this city at 2 o'clock this morning.

I have the honor to be,
Very respectfully,
JOSEPH MCKENNA.

JOSEPH MCKENNA, Justice, Supreme Court.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I present the following resolution and ask for its immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming presents a resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 92.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of the Hon. Edward Douglass White, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That a committee consisting of the Speaker, the majority and the minority ficor leaders, the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and the Members of the Louisiana delegation be appointed on the part of the House to join the committee appointed on the part of the Senate to attend the funeral.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, in the death of Chief Justice White the Nation has lost the services of a great jurist, the State of Louisiana and the country has lost a great citizen. He was a great man, faithful, fair, and fearless, and adorned the highest place in the judicial system of the Republic. We all profoundly mourn his loss. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPEE].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] is eminently fitting. Edward Douglass White deserved well of the Republic. He was a valiant soldier, a great lawyer, a learned and just judge, a far-seeing statesman, and, more than all, a simple, Christian gentleman. We of Louisiana, which gave him to the Nation, mourn him particularly, and we join with a sorrowing country in the expression of warm sympathy to his stricken widow and bereaved relatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the additional resolu-

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the House do now adjourn. The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow, Saturday, May 21, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

SATURDAY, May 21, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our blessed heavenly Father, Thou art the tree of life, and from its branches fall the fruits and fragrance of Thy mercy until they touch the margin of the old earth. For every morning begins with Thy love and the angel of the Lord encampeth behind the wings of the night. Then help us to accept Thy Word that all things work together for good to them that love God. For we can not love Thee and die. Lead us by the right way and give us sweet rest at eventime. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, May 19th, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution (H. J. Res. 123) to provide funds for the repair of the elevator in the Washington Monument.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below.

S. 1300. An act for the relief of the heirs of Agnes Ingels, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

ENBOLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2173. An act authorizing the construction, maintenance, and operation of a private drawbridge over and across Lock Numbered Four of the canal and locks, Willamette Falls, Clackamas County, Oreg.

H. J. Res. 123, Joint resolution to provide funds for the repair of the elevator in the Washington Monument.

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 82. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.

ENROLLED BILLS, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS from the Committee on Enrolled Bills reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 4586. An act to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, by the direction of the Committee on Ways and Means I submit a report to accompany House joint resolution 124 for printing under the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio presents a re-

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio presents a report from the Committee on Ways and Means which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Report from the Committee on Ways and Means on House joint resolution 124, to safeguard the revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is necessary to reserve points of order on a joint resolution of this kind, but if it is I want to reserve whatever is necessary. I do not understand it is necessary to report this from the floor of the House, but that is the policy the gentleman has pursued, and therefore I reserve whatever points of order are necessary.

The SPEAKER. The report is referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

DEFICIENCIES.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 6300, and pending that motion I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] if we can agree on time for general debate.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Has the gentleman any suggestion to make? There have been requests for time on this side.

Mr. GOOD. I have not many requests on this side. It is necessary to reach some items in the bill as quickly as possible. I think we can get along over here with about three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I suggest to the gentleman that I think possibly we can get along on this side with, say, an hour and fifteen minutes. Make it two hours and a half.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask, then, that the general debate be limited to two hours and a half, half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the time for general debate be limited to two hours and a half, one-half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill, with Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Frear].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, during the past few weeks there has been carried on a discussion in the public press and also in the Congressional Record relative to American aircraft production during the last war. I do not care to discuss it in any manner whatsoever. The matter is closed so far as the committee of which I am a member is concerned; but I felt it is due to the committee to ascertain whether any question or criticism could be made fairly of the committee for failure to represent to this House the facts in the case. Therefore, in regard to production of airplanes and in regard to the amount of money expended or contracted for in aircraft production, I wrote a letter to the Secretary of War asking him to secure the information from aircraft witnesses who gave us the sworn testimony contained in the record, and I have the letter of Secretary Weeks, which I desire to have read. That is the only answer based on the best testimony available which the committee desires to make. It speaks for itself, and we have made efforts for several weeks to secure data of amounts of contracts canceled after the investigation was held. is promised later according to the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks. unanimous consent to have the letter read in his time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Wan Department,
Washington, May, 14, 1921.

MY Dear Mr. Frear: Your communication of the 2d instant was forwarded to the Chief of Air Service with instructions that he turnish me with the information required to answer your queries. For your convenience I have quoted your inquiries and followed each by the answer as submitted by the Chief of Air Service:

"Question I. Is the statement correct as farmished by the Air Service to our committee appearing on page 2856 of the record that the total amounts appropriated for aviation purposes up to June 30, 1919, was $1,219,566,424, after deducting revocations, and that the obligations outstanding with expenditures on June 30, 1919, the date this testimony was offered, for aviation reached $1,055,652,147.66, of which amount over $1,050,000,000 was appropriated after our entrance into the war. If the above statement is true, what amounts were returned to the Treasury out of the appropriations and when were such returns made? Were such returns subsequent to the date of the report made by the Air Service to our committee?

"Answer. The statement of appropriations for aviation purposes, including the Signal Corps, D. M. A., and B. A. P., as printed on page 2856 of the hearings before the aviation subcommittee, is correct.

"The statement of obligations appearing on the same page is also page 2856 of the hearings before the aviation subcommittee, is correct.

"The statement of obligations appearing on the same page is also correct for the dates quoted.

"The Treasury Department is the source of information as to amounts returned to the Treasury. As a matter of courtesy to you the Chief of Air Service is attempting to secure through the Chief of Finance a statement of the amount returned to the Treasury from appropriations for Air Service purposes.

"Question 2. In the Senate subcommittee's report on aviation, composed of Senator Thomas and Senator Reed, Democrats, and Senator New, Republican, appears this statement, found on corrected page 3850 of the hearing of the subcommittee on aviation:

"On April 6, 1917, the United States entered the war. On Inne 8, 1917, public announcement was made that a great fleet of 25,000 airplanes was about to be created and would be decisive of warmonths before an effective army could be put in Europe." July 24, 1917, Congress, appropriated $649,000,000 to carry out the aircraft program. The fund has been either by actual expenditure or by commitments exhausted. A further appropriation of $884,304,758 has been found necessary.

"In the opinion of the committee a substantial part of the first appropriation was practically wasted. While an Army of three and one half million men had been raised, the aircraft situation is as follows:

"(a) Six hundred and one De Haviland 4s have been embarked for France up to August 1, 1918. Of these 67 reached the front by July 1.

"(b) We have not a single American-made chasse or bembing plane upon the battle front.

"(c) We have not a single American-made heavy bombing plane upon the battle front.

"(d) We have not a single American-made heavy bombing plane upon the battle front.

"(d) We have not developed or put in quantity production a successful Chasse or fighting plane."

"He has also directed my attention to the fact that it is also shown on this page that the obligation against this appropriation had by June 30, 1919, been reduced to $606,872,404.10.

"The Chief of Air Service has further suggested that it should not be overlooked that an appropriation exhausted by commitments is not exhausted, in fact, until deliveries have been made of the services or material called for by contracts for which an appropriation had been obligated."

"'Was that statement correct or was it incorrect, as sworn testimony appears on the pages recited in the record?
"'Is the following statement true as it appears on page 46 of the hearings under date of July 31, 1919; as follows:

"Ar. Ferral And we did not during the whole period of the war get a fighting machine or bombing plane?"

"Secretary Baker. Not a fighting machine or bombing plane of American manufacture."

"Answer. Correct testimony was given before the aviation subcommittee as to the amounts of expenditures and obligations; as to machines of various types produced by the United States or purchased from our allies; and as to the number of airplanes in use at the front, in reserve, and in use at other places.

"The Chief of Air Service asked to be excused from expressing any opinion as to the interpretation that may have been placed on this testimony by a congressional committee in its report.

"Likewise, testimony was given before this committee as to the use of the De Haviland 4 as a bombing plane, but the Chief of Air Service does not feel that it is proper that he should, in the manner you request, discuss a statement made under oath by a former Secretary of War.

"Question 4. What amount of money was received by the Treasury Department from canceled contracts for aviation purposes subsequent to the appointment on June 17, 1940, of the House Committee on Expenditures in the War Department?"

"Answer. As stated in answer to your first question, the Treasury Department is the source of information in regard to amounts of money returned thereto. The Chief of Air Service will diligently endeavor to secure the information you desire and will be pleased to furnish same when obtained."

The Chief of Air Service has stated that on the 2d instant a copy of the data furnished the publishers of Aviation was forwarded to you; that these data were not forwarded earlier because it was understood from your letter of April 18 that you had received same from the publishers of this magazine.

From the information furnished me by the Chief of Air Service, it would appear that there is no question as to the correctness of statements regarding appropriations and obligations which were given to your committee. At the time such statements were gi

JOHN W. WEEKS, Secretary of War.

Hon. James A. Frear, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield 19 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Stevenson].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in view of the recent deliverance of our ambassador to England, who appears to be fixing, apparently, the foreign policy of this Govappears to be fixing, apparently, the foreign policy of this Government, I desire to comment a little on a few remarks which he made before the St. Andrew's Society, of Charleston, S. C., in 1906, published in his book entitled "The Power of Tolerance, and Other Speeches," and in an editorial of Mr. Ball, in Columbia State, April 23, 1921. Why he used the term "Power of Tolerance" I am unable to determine, as nobody has ever found that he ever undertook to exercise that power. He has always been the most intolerant man that has ever engaged in newspaper life in the United States. The gentleman introduced himself in the following language, and I call the atten-tion, especially of this (the Republican) side, to that deliver-

I have a right to address a southern audience. The first of my ancestors to arrive in this country landed in Massachusetts in the seventeenth century. The last of my ancestors born in another country came from Scotland in the nineteenth century. My two grandfathers hewed out their names in the wilderness of Vermont nearly a hundred years ago. In those days the least of evils to be appreciated was race suicide, and many were the sons and grandsons to whom fell the duty and honor of sustaining the beliefs and maintaining the traditions of those earnest men. The community was less narrow socially than politically, but there was surely no advantage to any resident in affiliating himself with a small minority. Despite this environment and the drawbacks attendant upon it, neither of those two men nor any one of their descendants, to the best of my knowledge, ever voted for a candidate for public office who was not a Democrat. At the outbreak of the Civil War, of my immediate ancestors living, were two grandfathers, my own father, and nine uncles. They were northern men, not one of them had crossed the Mason and Dixon line. They regarded slavery with abhorrence, but not one of those twelve men ever lifted a hand against his white brother in the South. From their meager store and from necessity eleven of them furnished the Federal Government with sums of money fixed for the procurement of substitutes. One uncle, perhaps the best able of the twelve do so, absolutely refused and chewed the cud of bitter reflection for nearly two years in the county jail. I make no boast of their action. I claim for them no credit.

I should think he would not. He ought not to have done it before a South Carolina audience.

He had not, even up to 1906, come to any conclusion as to whether he would have fought in the Civil War, if he had had a chance, on the side of the Union.

Whether at the time, under those circumstances, I should have done as they did, I do not know, but the facts are family history and constitute the basis of my assertion that I have an absolutely and unqualified right to speak to you men of the South the words of a fraternal heart.

That is the gentleman who to-day is fixing the foreign policy of this Government according to his ideas, a gentleman who comes to a South Carolina audience and attempts to ingratiate himself with that audience, every one of whose ancestors had faced battle on a hundred fields for the cause in which they believed, and who had a profound contempt for any man who boasted that he and his ancestry were so yellow that most of them hired substitutes and some of them were so stingy that they went to jail rather than to spend the money to hire substitutes. That is the gentleman who fixes the foreign policy of this Government.

I will state, by the way, that that introduction was not very cordially received by that audience. I take it for granted that this distinguished gentleman, when he approaches the seats of the mighty, when he comes into the presence of the Crown of England, will make himself fraternally at heart with the Englishmen by saying that his people over in Vermont—the State that my friend Greene comes from—in the days of Lexington, and Bunker Hill, and Saratoga, and King's Mountain, never, while they were there, popped a cap at the British, or that nobody could make them hire a substi-tute, and that therefore they laid down and did nothing, or sympathized with the British during that contest.

That is the logical conclusion. If he came to the conclusion that an introduction of that kind before a South Carolina audience would make him a man who would be fraternal with our people, he would certainly come to the conclusion that the same kind of an introduction as to his ancestry would make him all right with the English people. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes. Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Was it the gentleman's purpose, in referring to me and to my State, to involve me in this mess and make it incumbent on me to defend Vermonters:

Mr. STEVENSON. Not at all. The people of Vermont, the Green Mountain boys, did not show that kind of a spirit, and none of them ever came down and claimed the right that I know of to cultivate a fraternal spirit by boasting of the infamy of their ancestors.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. The gentleman has read into the RECORD exactly my own sentiments on that.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. STEVENSON. Certainly.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Does the gentleman think he still has that idea as to American patriotism—is why he states that we went into this war because we were afraid not to fight?

Mr. STEVENSON. I was coming to that. He says we went into this war not for the matter of the preservation of humanity or the liberties of the world, but because we knew we had to fight, and it was to save our hides that we went into that controversy instead of to save the civilization of the world.

That is your ambassador to St. James. The President in one of his speeches in the campaign before the election said. propose to give you an association of nations with teeth in it." Has he delegated this gentleman to organize that association? If so, he is developing in that direction, because it will be an association that will have at least a "mouth" in it, and a mouth is necessary to put teeth in, because that is what he has always been—mouth, and nothing else. [Laughter.]

Well, we were to have all of our foreign policies reversed. guess the reversal processes will begin with this distinguished gentleman who boasts of the yellow condition of his ancestors during the Civil War. Let us see what we have done up to this time about reversing the foreign policy of this Government. On the question of the mandate and rights of this Nation in Mesopotamia the policy of the former administration is being absolutely followed by the present administration. As to the question of the rights and the policy of this Nation in the island of Yap our present administration is standing squarely in the On the track made by the administration that preceded it. question of our dealings with Russia the present administration has not varied an iota from the administration that was before it. On the question of cable control, just a few days ago this House-practically unanimously-passed a resolution to follow the leadership of the Democratic administration on that very important question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South

Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. STEVENSON. On the question of the treaty with Colombia, whereby we reestablish relations with the Government of the United States of Colombia, the administration sent the treaty. negotiated in 1916 by a Democratic administration and rejected because two-thirds could not be gotten to ratify it, to the Senate. and it has been ratified and become the law governing the relations between this country and Colombia.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENSON. Certainly. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman has referred to Col. Harvey, and to the fact that he has not been a soldier.

Where did he receive the title of "colonel"?

Mr. STEVENSON. Col. Harvey, at this same meeting of the St. Andrew's Society, where the governor of South Carolina was present, after the wine was presented-and there is no greater place than Charleston for that—was dubbed across the table by the governor of South Carolina with the salutation that the governor of South Carolina is by tradition understood to have addressed to the governor of North Carolina on a notable occasion. He was dubbed "colonel" by the governor of South Carolina, and has carried that sobriquet ever since. [Laughter.] He is popularly known down there as a "champagne colonel."

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. KING. Was not that the same place where Col. House got his title? [Laughter.]

I am informed that Col. House

Mr. STEVENSON. Oh, no. I am informed tha got his title at a banquet in Chicago. [Laughter.]

There is another thing that the present administration has followed. It has followed the policy of the Wilson administration in the matter of backing up the banks of this country in making a loan to China. There was no change of policy there.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I regret I have not the time.

It was one of the crying shames of this country, according to Republicans, that Gen. Pershing, instead of Gen. Wood, was sent to France. Yet we find the present administration has indorsed that proposition by making Gen. Pershing the Chief of Staff of this country, instead of the great and heroic Gen. Wood. [Applause.]

Judge Hughes, when a candidate for President, in 1916, denounced the appointment of E. Lester Jones as head of the Geodetic Survey and called him an incompetent "horse doctor."
Mr. Harding reappointed this "horse doctor" in March, with the statement that his services were indispensable.

President Wilson put post offices under the civil service and Harding has followed suit with a scheme that the politicians hope to use to cover the spoils system which they hope to run. Indeed, the Republican administration is thus far walking mostly in the tracks of the Democratic administration, but they appear to be walking backward and stumbling occasionally.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SWANK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, last Monday while the gentle-man from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell] was discoursing on the beauties of Box Elder Canyon I was called out for a conference with some of my colleagues from Oklahoma and did not have an opportunity to hear all of the gentleman's address. Tuesday evening, while reading the Record, I was somewhat surprised to see that he had taken a shot at Platt National Park, in Oklahoma. He said:

We have a little park down in Oklahoma that we have been trying to get rid of for the last few years, trying to give it to the State of Oklahoma. It costs us from $7,500 to $8,600 a year to care and provide for it. No one down there wants it. They are perfectly willing to load it on the Federal Government, and under the law this area could be taken and made a national monument, and in the course of time, I suppose, we would appropriate for its care. I do not think we ought to do that.

I think the Oklahomans realize that so long as they may utilize the property and Uncle Sam pay the keep, that is a very satisfactory arrangement.

I wish that the gentleman from Wyoming could visit the Platt National Park, at Sulphur, Okla., and partake of the healthgiving properties of the water there. He would feel better when he came back here. [Laughter.] I wish that he could see the beautiful scenery in that park, situated in the foothills of the famous Arbuckle Range. If he could only bathe in the pools formed from that sulphur water from 800 feet under the ground and see the many wonderful results achieved from the use of the water he would never again advocate giving away Platt National Park. Mr. Chairman, on the many occasions that I have visited the park I have seen, as a result of the use of that water, the lame to walk, the blind to see, the deaf to hear, and the despondent to be made happy.

Oklahoma willing to load it on the Federal Government? It was set aside by the Government for park purposes, and there is no more reason for its being taken over by the State than there is for other States to take over the parks within their borders.

As my colleague [Miss Robertson] said, it was named in honor of Senator Platt and should remain an honor to his memory. He was a friend to man, and this park is patronized by people of all classes. Why, Mr. Chairman, in the summer months it is difficult to accommodate the people who visit there. They fill the beautiful little city of Sulphur and also the camping grounds. This is a city of beautiful homes, and Murray County has an enterprising, intelligent, law-abiding citizenship.

Oklahoma, it is true, could maintain the park, and do it well, but there is no reason why she should do so. This is a park-of great interest and benefit to the people of moderate circumstances, many of whom, like some of us here, are unable to visit the more costly and expensive health resorts. In Platt National Park they can bathe in her health-restoring waters, drink the same, and many have been restored to health in this way who but for this park would have suffered all through life.

I am surprised that any Member of this House who voted for the $396,000,000 naval appropriation, $331,000,000 for the Army, voted against the amendment to reduce the Army to 150,000 men, should object to a little, measly appropriation for a park that has done so much good as the Platt National Park. The gentle-The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] asked the gentleman from Wyoming the value of this park. I will answer that while this is a place of great natural beauty its chief value is in restoring people to health. Its value can no more be measured in silver and gold than the reputation of the eminent Senator in whose honor it was named. People go there from all sections of the Nation, and all testify to the curative properties of the water.

She has sulphur water of all kinds, shades, and degrees, medicine water, Brimode and pure water. If the majority whip of the House will make a short visit there, bathe in the waters, fill up on its wonderful properties, I will guarantee that he will have better luck in keeping the members of his party lined up. That water makes a man want to go, and enriches [Laughter.] him with that manly vigor so essential to true manhood.

[Laughter.]

Mr. DYER. They have nothing else to drink down there, have [Laughter.]

Mr. SWANK. The gentleman evidently has never been there. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH. Is any admission fee charged to this park?

Mr. SWANK. No.

Mr. SMITH. For automobiles?

Mr. SWANK. No.

I notice in the RECORD that my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] asked the gentleman from Wyoming if that was not the first piece of real property that the gentleman ever heard of Oklahoma turning down. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that the great State of Oklahoma wants nothing that is not hers, and this park belongs to the Government. When Oklahoma goes after anything to which she has claim, she goes in an orderly manner and pursues her remedy, if necessary, through the courts of the land. She never resorts to violence, force, nor the military, except as a last means. She proceeds as she did in the old Greer County case and the Red River bed case which has just recently been decided in her favor by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SWANK. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I was defending the good people of Oklahoma from the insinuation that they would not take something good when it was offered to them.

Mr. SWANK. I am much obliged to the gentleman. The report of the Director of the National Park Service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, says: "With a slight increase in the annual appropriation for Platt National Park in Oklahoma, the service has been able to make improvements and purchase equipment to take care of some of its most crying needs. The sewer system has been extended and facilities for performing more maintenance work have been purchased. has been difficult, however, to keep the park from retrograding because so many things had to be neglected last year, when the annual appropriation was cut to $6,000. The superintendent on several occasions last year found it necessary to use his personal funds to make minor improvements, steps that he should not have been obliged to take under any circumstances."

The act of Congress creating the National Park Service says:

The service thus established shall promote and regulate the use of the Federal areas known as national parks, monuments, and reservations hereinafter specified by such means and measures as conform to the fundamental purpose of the said parks, monuments, and reservations, which purpose is to conserve the scenery and the natural and historic objects and the wild life therein and to provide for the enjoyment of the same in such manner and by such means as will leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations.

As the director says, these parks do not belong to one State or to one section. No, Mr. Chairman, Platt National Park does not belong to Oklahoma, but belongs to the Nation. More people visit the park from other States than from Oklahoma. The legislature of Oklahoma recently appropriated $389,700 to establish a hospital for our soldiers of the World War in Sulphur, where the park is located. The "Ozark Trail" and the "Bankhead Highway" also go through Sulphur, and this park is destined to become one of the west resolution to become one of the west resolution. become one of the most useful in the United States and none will return a greater interest on the money invested.

Platt National Park, like some of our other parks, is segregated primarily to conserve the mineral waters for the use of the people of the country, and some free Government bathhouses should be maintained for the people who are unable to go to the more costly resorts. The Government spends millions of dollars to protect the health of her people and it is money well spent. Platt National Park should receive an appropriation sufficient to enable it to serve the purpose for which it was created and to continue bringing people back to health.

Think of a little appropriation like $6,000 for the maintenance of a park that does so much good and makes so many people happy. I do not believe that the gentleman from Wyoming intended to reflect on the people of Oklahoma and hope that he will withdraw his opposition to this park and give us his assistance in such a worthy enterprise for the good of the public. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr.

BYRNES] is recognized for 15 minutes. [Applause.]
Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the amount recommended by the committee in this bill, making appropriations to supply the deficiency for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, is $100,680,427.25, which sum is $119,606,338.08 less than the amount the executive departments of the Government asked for.

During the last two years, whenever an appropriation bill was considered in this House, the Republican leader [Mr. Mon-DELL] never failed to make a speech calling attention to the reduction in the estimates, and claiming that such reductions represented a saving to the people. Now that the executive departments under the Republican administration have asked for 55 per cent more than the Appropriations Committee say they need for the rest of the fiscal year, I am anxious to know whether the gentleman from Wyoming will issue a statement to the country claiming that by this reduction we have saved $119,000,000.

In a carefully prepared statement, which the gentleman from Wyoming inserted in the RECORD of June 5, 1920, setting forth the total appropriations made for the fiscal year which is about to close, he claimed that the Congress had reduced the estimates submitted by the departments $1,400,000,000. As a matter of fact there was little or no reduction in the estimates at all. But, admitting the accuracy of his statement, it represented a reduction in the total estimates submitted of less than 25 per cent. Referring to these estimates the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] made the following state-

I regret to have to say that many of the officials of the administration were neither accurate, informed, nor properly mindful of the truth in their arguments before committees in support of the estimates.

The very best that can be said of the attitude of the officials who urged extravagant expenditures is that they may have spoken through ignorance rather than out of a deliberate purpose to mislead. I make this statement with regard to the attitude of departmental officials with regret, but with full knowledge that it can not be denied by anyone sufficiently familiar with the facts to have an opinion of the subject worthy of consideration.

Having denounced in such strong language the officials of the administration then in power, even to the extent of questioning their veracity, because they submitted estimates 25 per cent in excess of the amount he claimed the Congress appropriated, I tremble to think of the language he will now use in denouncing the departmental officials under the Republican administration for submitting estimates 55 per cent in excess of what the Appropriations Committee says they will need to run the Government for the balance of this fiscal year.

In the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming to which I have referred, which was issued upon the adjournment of Congress in June, 1920, Mr. Mondell stated:

Subtracting this sum of appropriations for 1920 and prior fiscal years from the above total we have the sum of $4,373,395,279.07 as the total of appropriations, regular, permanent annual, and miscellaneous, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921—the coming fiscal year.

He further stated that all possible deficiencies would not amount to more than $70,000,000. Since that time his party put through the Congress, in March, 1921, the first deficiency bill, appropriating $275,256,005.21. This second deficiency bill as reported to the House appropriates $100,680,427.25. that the deficiencies instead of amounting to $70,000,000 have amounted to $375,936,432.46. When this amount of deficiencies is added to the amount which Mr. MONDELL stated would cover all appropriations, it makes a total of $4,749,331,711.53, and yet in the face of this statement by the distinguished Republican leader we are told by the Secretary of the Treasury in a letter he recently addressed to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee that he estimates the department exand Means Committee that he estimates the department expenditures for this fiscal year at $5,000,000, excluding expenditures for the Postal Department, and the Treasury Department to-day states that, including the expenditures for the Post Office Department, the total disbursements for this fiscal year will amount to at least $5,600,000,000. So the actual disbursements of the Treasury are approximately $1,000,000,000 more than the Republican leader of this House says the Congress appropriated, and the question arises, Who got the billion and how did they get it?

The explanation, of course, is that prior to the last election, in order to mislead the people as to the amount of money that was being appropriated, the Congress departed from the settled policy which had heretofore controlled its appropriating committees, and instead of appropriating directly for each department the amount of money the Congress thought was needed for its activities, resorted to a system of indirect appropriations authorizing the expenditure of money through reappropriations, revolving funds, and from the proceeds of the sale of Government property.

As a result of this indefensible system it is an impossibility for any man to state with accuracy the total amount of money made available by Congress for expenditure during this fiscal year. After a most careful investigation, however, I am confident that with the passage of this bill the total amount authorized by Congress to be spent during this fiscal year by the departments of the Government will approximate $6,000; 000,000. This is no reckless statement. When the gentleman from Wyoming stated in June, 1920, that the total appropria-tions, regular, permanent annual, and miscellaneous would amount to $4,373,395,279.07, I issued a statement asserting that the total expenditures would amount to five and a half billion dollars. The Secretary of the Treasury now shows that I was conservative, inasmuch as he says the actual disbursements from the Treasury will exceed that figure.

Because I want the House to know how it has been done, I wish to call your attention to some of the legislative provisions which account for the expenditure of a billion dollars more than the Republican leader stated would be spent. When a department would submit an estimate for some work which the committee believed should be carried on, instead of appropriating the money an investigation would be made to ascertain whether in some other fund in the same department or in some other department there was an unexpended balance which at the end of the fiscal year would be covered back into the Treasury, and then a legislative provision would be inserted in the bill providing that the unexpended balance of some fund instead of being covered back into the Treasury should be made available for the next fiscal year for the specific purpose the Congress desired to provide for. By this legislation the Republican leader could claim that the estimate had been denied, that no appropriation was made, and at the same time the money would be made available for expenditure.

I can not cite all the instances of such legislation for the fiscal year, but to indicate the extent of the practice I cite the Reappropriation unexpended balance available for expenditure for fiscal year 1921.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD.

Stat., 891)

It was estimated that this amount would be available for expenditure by the provisions making available the balance on hand July 1, 1920; the amount received during the fiscal year 1921 from the operation of ships; not to exceed $15,000,000 from deferred payments from ships sold prior to approval of act; not to exceed $25,000,000 from plant material sold during the fiscal year 1921; and not exceeding $30,000,000 from ships sold during the fiscal year 1921.

Another instance of a reappropriation is that found in section 7, act approved May 21, 1920 (fortifications appropriation act), which provides-

That the funds appropriated by any Government bureau or department may, in connection with the procuring, by purchase or manufacture, of stores or materials of any kind, or the performing of any service between any bureaus or departments, be transferred to the bureau or department making the procurement or performing the service, and that the "funds so placed with the procuring bureau shall remain available for a period of two years for the purpose for which the allocation was made."

The effect of this last proviso is to make that much of the appropriation originally granted by a bureau for the single year specified by the appropriation act available for obligation and expenditure during a period of two additional years, or three years in all.

In the merchant marine act, approved June 5, 1920, will be found an important example of recent legislation to appropriate receipts in the form of an appropriation of the receipts of the Shipping Board for certain purposes and under certain limitations.

Another instance of recent legislation creating revolving funds is found in the sundry civil bill approved March 4, 1921, under the caption "Federal Board for Vocational Education."

I know that the House recalls the occasion upon which the Railroad Administration submitted an estimate of $120,000,000 to be expended in winding up its obligations with the carriers, and the Congress instead of appropriating the money provided in a deficiency bill that $30,000,000 should be transferred from the loan fund authorized in the transportation act, and the balance of $90,000,000 should be provided by the War Finance Corporation purchasing at par the Liberty bonds held by the Railroad Administration.

In view of the extent to which this practice of covering up appropriations has grown during the last two years, it is not surprising that Secretary Mellon, charged with the duty of administering the finances of the country, should in a letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee warn the Republicans of this Congress against a continuance of their indefensible course. In his letter he stated:

Reduction of appropriations, moreover, will not of itself be effective to reduce expenditures unless at the same time Congress avoids or controls measures which result in expenditure without an apparent appropriation. Reappropriations of unexpended balances, revolving-fund appropriations and appropriations of receipts, and other indefinite authorizations of expenditure have in the past been responsible for hundreds of millions of dollars of actual cash outgo.

Of course, he is correct, and if we continue this system of appropriating we can only expect chaos and confusion to reign in the accounts of the Treasury Department.

Commenting upon the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Washington Post, recognized as one of the spokesmen of the present administration, said editorially:

Strict economy in public expenditures must be observed, the Secretary declares, if the Government is to get along on $4,000,000,000 a year, and he warns Congress that the country can not continue to spend money "at this shocking rate," which is $5,000,000,000 for the current fiscal year. Also he places his finger upon one of the most fruitful sources of extravagance when he deplores the reappropriation of unexpended balances, revolving fund appropriations, appropriations of receipts, and other indefinite authorizations of expenditure. Under cover of these general terms many hundreds of millions have been taken from the Treasury.

The Post is correct. This method of covering up appropriations will lead to extravagance. When those charged with the framing of appropriation bills, instead of making appropriations, make the funds available by legislation, and then declare to the House and to the country that they have reduced the estimates and saved money, they deceive the House as well as the country. They can not complain if some members reach the conclusion that having saved such enormous sums by reducing estimates they can afford to be liberal and vote for amendments that increase the direct appropriations.

This system of reappropriating balances encourages extravagance on the part of the departments. They will soon realize that in order to get an additional appropriation it is only necessary to find an unexpended balance in some fund and then appeal to the Congress to make it available on the ground that it does not increase the total of appropriations, the result being that this money instead of being covered back into the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year will be spent for some other purpose.

It is most unfair to the people of the country who are entitled to know what it is costing to run the Government. As it stands to-day it would take an immense corps of legislative experts and auditors to ascerta'n what the Government is costing the people of the United States for the fiscal year 1921.

In view of all of these facts, in view of the earnest appeal of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the editorial utterances of the Washington Post, I am surprised and disappointed that the bill now submitted to the House contains more legislative provisions reappropriating unexpended balances than any previous bill reported to this House. No man reading the bill can tell exactly how much money is authorized to be spent by the departments of the Government. To avoid making direct appropriations, legislative provisions authorize the departments to transfer funds from one account to another, and the chances are in many cases the departments will returnbefore the end of the fiscal year for other deficiencies caused by such transfer of funds.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CABLE). The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me three minutes more?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. One of the appropriations to which I have called attention provides that a certain activity can be carried on from funds derived from 22 different funds, unexpended balance. in the War Department. No bookkeeping system on earth can ever keep the accounts of this Government straight if we continue that policy. What is the necessity for it?

I do not hesitate to say that last year, before an election, we could all understand that there was some excuse, because all parties make efforts to hold down appropriations and try to create the impression that they are doing it, and if it were necessary then it was all right, but certainly there is no election coming on this year, and there is no reason why we should continue a system that a Republican Secretary of the Treasury says caused hundreds of millions of dollars to be expended last year.

Therefore, I ask the Members on the Republican side of the House in the consideration of this bill to join us and let us get back to a normal condition, where if one of the departments comes here and asks for an appropriation and show they are entitled to it, they will receive the money. Let us give them what they show they actually need and no more, and when they come and ask for deficiencies let us refuse to give them the deficiency, and if they incur deficiencies, then let us have the deficiency statute penalizing such conduct enforced. Then if at the end of the fiscal year your leader can make a statement to the country showing that we have appropriated so much money, the country will be able to depend upon it as approximating what the Government is costing them, and you will not be in the fix where your leader said our appropriations would amount to $4,300,000,000, while the Secretary of the Treasury says he is actually spending $5,600,000,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? The gentleman wants to be fair.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Certainly. I yield.
Mr. GOOD. The gentleman knows that there is a difference between appropriations and expenditures. You take expenditures that are available for three years if the contract is made within the year. For this year, at the beginning of the fiscal year, there was a balance appropriated of $1,500,000,000 in the War Department that had not been expended. Therefore, when the Secretary of the Treasury was speaking about expenditures he was talking about all of the money that goes out of the Treasury, while I was talking, as was the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. Mondell], about appropriations.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Oh, no. I know what the gentleman would say, but the gentleman was talking about $4,300,000,000 as appropriated.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. And it did not include reappropriations which I show him by the record amounts to $541,000,000, and he did not include indefinite appropriations, amounting to $400,000,000 more, authorized by the guaranty section of the Esch-Cummins Act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones.]

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a copy of the eulogy delivered by my former colleague, Mr. Joe H. Eagle, on the life, character, and services of the late lamented Champ Clark. Through an oversight these remarks were not presented in time to be printed in the Record for the last term, and I present them at this time for the purpose of asking to be allowed to have them printed in the Record now. A little history in connection with the delivery of this speech might be interesting to those who knew and served with the brilliant Joe Eagle. On the evening set apart for the delivery of the eulogies a number of speeches had been made. I chanced to go into the cloakroom, where Joe was sitting, and asked him why he did not go out there and make a real speech such as every one knew he could make.

He replied that he felt he would have liked to say a few words about dear old Champ, but that the docket was crowded and he had not made any preparation for that purpose, I immediately went to the chairman of the committee on arrangements (Mr. Rucker, of Missouri), and suggested that he call upon Mr. Eagle, which he said he would be delighted to do. I then notified Mr. Eagle that he would be called upon. Thus without preparation and with only a few minutes' notice—the matter having started largely in banter-was delivered what I think is one of the most beautiful eulogies this House has ever heard.

To those who knew and had the pleasure of serving with Joe Eagle this was not surprising. He is one of the most charming men in conversation, one of the most eloquent and gifted orators, and one of the gentlest and finest spirits that ever graced the halls of the Congress. He belongs to the old-time school; he adorned this House and we shall miss him. I present this speech as actually delivered, with scarcely a word changed and ask that it be printed in the Record just in the form it was so eloquently spoken.

The CHAIRMAN, The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD as indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. How many more speeches the gentleman from Iowa have?

Mr. GOOD. Only one. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it has often been said upon the floor of the House that in the consideration of estimates submitted the Committee on Appropriations never permits politics to enter into the committee room, and that is largely true. There may have been some instances in which politics or partisanship has cut some figure, but in the main, and I may say practically all the time, the Committee on Appropriations gives consideration to the estimates without regard to partisan or political effect. And every one will agree that this is the proper attitude. Questions involving the appropriation and expenditure of the public funds should not be governed or controlled by partisan bias, but they should be decided solely from the public interest. On Thursday there was printed in the Washington Post an editorial on the subject of the pending deficiency bill. Every one, of course, knows the highly partisan attitude of the Washington Post and its earnest, unquestioning support of the present administration, and I refer to this editorial only because of a manifest misstatement and an unjust criticism made therein in regard to the preceding administration in its handling and expenditure of the public funds. I wish to read just a portion of that editorial. It is headed "Stopping extravagance," and it states:

The action of the House Committee on Appropriations in reporting a general deficiency bill carrying $100,680,000, which amount is $120,000,000 less than the aggregate asked by the executive departments, is in line with the policy of President Harding in requiring the departments to keep their expenditures within the limits fixed by Congress. He has impressed his views upon the members of his Cabinet, and they are endeavoring to follow the course he has mapped out. They are not held responsible for the deficiencies of the current fiscal year, for the reason that the departments were under the control of the preceding administration during two-thirds of the year.

Further on it says:

During the last administration he was a slow bureau chief who did not run up expenses and exceed his appropriations. The rivalry among the departments and bureaus was incessant. No attention was paid to the repeated warnings of Congress. Under the shield of the President, the departments boldly invaded the prerogative of Congress and committed the Government to tens of millions of unauthorized expenditures.

Now of course we all know that during the war, when billions of dollars were being spent over night, almost, in defense of this country for the purpose of carrying on war, deficiencies were necessarily created with the full consent of the Congress in some of the defense activities, notably the War and Navy, but the writer of this editorial was either inexcusably ignorant of the contents of the bill about which he was writing or he was extremely careless in his statement of the facts on account of his evident desire to give some political aid to the present administration at the expense of the preceding administration. If he had studied the estimates, he would not have called this a deficiency bill and sought to leave the impression on his readers that the large estimates were submitted for this year and therefore in part chargeable to the last administration. He would have found that out of the $220,286,765.33 of estimates which were sent forward to the Congress that $138,229,677.16 was for the next fiscal year and only $82,057,088.17 really represented deficiencies for the present fiscal year.

This bill which is presented here as a deficiency bill for the present fiscal year carries out of the $100,000,000, which is sought to be appropriated, the sum of $29,271,313.34 for employees and activities for the fiscal year 1922, beginning July 1 of this year. So I say that if the writer of this editorial had taken the pains to examine the estimates as a careful editor jealous of the truth and anxious not to mislead his readers would have done, he would not have been guilty of making the statement referred to and attempting to make the readers of his paper believe and the country believe that the large estimates submitted and the $100,000,000, which is proposed in this deficiency bill represents expenditures purely and simply for the present year and therefore chargeable in the bill.

part to the last administration. Now we all know that the last Congress was Republican in majority just as this Congress is Republican in majority. When the appropriations gress is Republican in majority. When the appropriations were made for the year 1922 in the last Congress it was well known that there would be a Republican administration after March 4. Gentlemen who were chairmen of the various subcommittees having in charge the various bills providing appropriations necessary for the next fiscal year stated upon the floor of the House in presenting their bills that they had allowed all they believed to be necessary to carry on the Government, and yet before the year has commenced, within two or three months after the present administration has taken charge, we find the heads of the departments of the present administration coming to the Congress not asking alone for deficiencies in their departments for this year but asking additional money for the year 1922. This bill carries $100,680,427.25. This is $119,606,338.08 less than the total estimates submitted which were $220,286,765.33. Of that amount as I have stated for the fiscal year 1921 and prior years there was estimated an aggregate of $82,057,088.17, and for the fiscal year 1922 $138,229,677.16. Gentlemen on the majority side were very critical of the last administration for the large estimates submitted. We were promised that the present administration would follow a different policy. But here we find that in the first estimates submitted, the departments have asked for much more than twice the amount which the committee finds to be necessary. This does not measure up to the off-repeated promises of economy, or with the statements issued to the press by both the President and the Secretary of the Treasury. It is preaching without practice and that will neither reduce expenditures or lower taxes. This bill carries for the year 1922 statutory salaries aggregating $169,643,000, making provision for 105 new employees after June 30. In addition to that it makes certain lump sums available for employees during the next fiscal year. There is a total of $585,000 in lump sums made available for new employees in the fiscal year 1922 making a grand total, with amount allowed for specific salaries and employees specifically enumerated, of $1,280,640. And that is not all the story with reference to the new employees provided in this bill if it becomes a law as presented, because it makes available for clerk hire a balance of $3,750,000 which is now in the Treasury under the title of Expense of Foreign Loans.

True, that organization exists to-day and has existed for some time; true, the Secretary of the Treasury, I think with some reason, insisted that it must be extended during the next fiscal year, 1922, and I call attention to it for the purpose of informing the House that despite the claims that were made when the regular supply bills for 1922 were passed the first of the year as to the large reduction of employees this Congress by this deficiency bill is making appropriations for the year 1922 before deficiencies have actually occurred and is actually increasing the number of Government employees here in the District of Columbia by the amounts I have stated. But that This bill proposes to revive a certain section of the Liberty loan act and in so far as expenses incurred in new issues of certificates of indebtedness are concerned it makes it possible for the Secretary of the Treasury to use one-tenth of 1 per cent of the entire issue for the payment of those employees in the work of issuing these new certificates. bill makes available for additional employees for 1922 $1,289,-643, by the way of lump sum and specific appropriations for employees, and the balance to the credit of expenses of foreign loans, amounting to $3,750,000, or a total of $4,285,218.47, plus what one-tenth of 1 per cent of new issues may amount to.

The gentleman from Wyoming, the majority leader, had much to say last February, when these bills for 1922 were pending, relative to the great economies which were being effected by the reduction of employees. He heralded that as a great economy and loudly proclaimed that it was an evidence of the intent of his party to faithfully keep its promises of economy, but how very painful is his silence now when at the request of the present administration appropriations are to be made increasing the number of employees above the number contemplated when those bills were passed.

Reference has been made to the practice of making reappro-I have always insisted that that is poor business priations. What ought to be done is to cover unexpended balances into the Treasury and then make direct specific appropriations of whatever money is needed for Government activities. That is the only way whereby the country will be able to know what is being expended by the Government. The practice of reappropriating money instead of making direct appropriations is misleading, unnecessary, unbusinesslike, and makes possible extravagant appropriations which do not appear on the face of

This bill carries reappropriations amounting to more than $482,000. There is a transfer of $250,000 from the Census Bureau to the Bureau of Standards, increasing the appropriation for the Bureau of Standards for 1922 in that sum. Now, if that sum was not needed, as the Secretary of Commerce said, by the Census Bureau, the businesslike thing would have been to cover it back into the Treasury and then make a direct appropriation to the Bureau of Standards. propriation for the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce is increased in the sum of $250,000 for the encouragement of export industries. That is an appropriation to which I gave my hearty support, because I believe at this time of all times this Government should make every effort to improve and extend our domestic and foreign commerce.

After all, gentlemen, there is going to be very little economy effected in the reduction of Government expenses here in the District of Columbia. Oh, we may save a few millions of dollars, but as compared with the four or five billions of dollars which will be spent by the Government during the year it will amount to very little.

The only way whereby a big saving can be made is by reducing the expenses incurred in the maintenance of the Army and Navy, and this can be done if we can obtain an international agreement for disarmament. I hope therefore that the President will very soon keep his promise to the American people and call a conference of the nations for the purpose of discussing the question of disarmament. Until he does that, and until some agreement is reached whereby our Navy as well as our Army can be reduced, we can not hope for that great reduction in expenditures on the part of our Government, which will enable a reduction in taxation, so greatly needed and demanded by business and by the people.

I do not intend to discuss this bill in detail. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Goon], of course, will do that. I felt that it was proper to call the attention of both sides of this House to the fact that this is not merely a deficiency bill, but that is goes further and carries nearly thirty million for the fiscal year 1922.

This bill creates a new position to be known as First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and fixes his salary at $10,000. This is on the theory that the Secretary of the Treasury, and that he needs man of high affairs man ury needs assistance, and that he needs men of big affairs, men who can give close attention to the many important details of his office, so as to permit him to give his attention to the greater problems. During the war, and for the period of the war, Congress created two additional assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, but under the express terms of the law those positions have now expired. And when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] presented the legislative bill at the last session of Congress he declared that they were no longer necessary. But this bill undertakes to provide in their stead a new position, to be known as the First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, at Oh, it was stated that they wanted $10,000 as a salary because they desired to get a real big man. But my experience has been that the question of salaries does not often cut much figure in that respect. I have heard it argued on the floor of this House that in the creation of new boards and commissions we must provide salaries of $10,000, or $12,000, or even $15,000, because it would enable the President to pick out the very best men. And yet I have discovered frequently that in the last analysis, men are appointed by promotion here in the department. Personally, I believe if this position was to have been created a salary ought not to have been paid greater than those paid to the present Assistant Secretaries in the Treasury Department and other departments.

Mr. STEVENSON. Is this Assistant Secretary of the Treasury proposed to be in addition to the office of Undersecretary of Treasury, that British office which is proposed to be established by a bill to reform the Federal Reserve act, and make him the representative of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Federal Reserve Board? I suppose the gentleman is familiar with that. He is to have $12,000 a year.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. An undersecretary was asked for, but I think it was the idea of the committee that this First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury should take the place of the undersecretary.

Mr. STEVENSON. It was proposed to call him the "undersecretary.'

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The estimates proposed an undersecretary at $10,000, and when some one was asked the particular reason for desiring an undersecretary in the Treasury Department it was stated that Great Britain has an undersecretary of finance, or something of that sort. That is the only reason I heard advanced for the title-a reason that did not appeal to me. The committee declined to call him the "undersecretary," but gave the salary, which was the thing most desired, and have named him the "First Assistant Secretary of

Mr. STEVENSON. The bill I mentioned, I will state to the gentleman, is pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency still, to make him the Undersecretary, and make him the representative of the Treasury Department on the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am opposed both to the position and the salary. We have now three permanent Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury. There are several such officers in all of the departments, and when we undertake to fix the salary at $10,000 for one Assistant Secretary, Congress can not in justice to itself and in justice to the other positions of equal dignity and importance deny to them a salary of $10,000. If this position is to be created, if the Secretary of the Treasury needs an additional assistant for the next fiscal year, which I deny, he ought to be put on a par with the other Assistant Secretaries and paid the same salary.

That it not all, gentlemen. This bill creates the positions of Commissioner of Deposits and Commissioner of Accounts, at $6,000 a year-positions that are now in existence, but not provided for by specific appropriations; positions paid out of the expense of foreign loans, and which have been in existence since December, 1919. It was claimed with some force that these positions are needed during the next fiscal year to look after the immense securities of the Government, including foreign loans, amounts due by railroads, deposits in Government depositories, and the like. Whether they will be needed in the ensuing fiscal year is a matter of conjecture, and it would have been far better, therefore, to have permitted them to remain on the lump-sum roll rather than to have made the positions permanent and statutory. We all know how very difficult it is to abolish an office after it has been permanently established.

The point I wish to make is this, that last February, when the legislative appropriation bill was pending before the House, gentlemen on this side of the Chamber in charge of the legislative bill assured the House and the country that they were not needed and claimed great credit for striking them from the rolls. They announced a great program of economy and declared that the present administration would adhere rigidly Nevertheless, within three months after the to the program. inauguration of the President we find this Congress about to restore those positions for the next fiscal year at the instance and request of his administration.

I am in favor of every appropriation and every position necessary for the proper conduct of governmental affairs, but I am not in favor of providing big positions and big salaries merely to provide places for the faithful. [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend the remarks that I made this morning.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I make the same

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.
Mr. SWANK. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I know that there is quite a prejudice—one which I myself entertain to some degreeagainst deficiency appropriation bills. I think a part of the prejudice of the public and of some of the Members of the House against deficiency bills grows out of a failure to understand the process of making up appropriation bills. The estimates that were made for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, were made back in the fall of the year 1919. They were sub-mitted to Congress at the opening of the session in December of that year and published in the Book of Estimates. The appropriations were made more than 15 months prior to the end of that fiscal year. Of course much can transpire between the time of making these appropriations and the actual spending of the money that requires modification and changes. The committees having jurisdiction of appropriations for all of these years have, I think, wisely adopted the policy of reducing estimates wherever they thought the estimates could be safely reduced, and they have reduced them upon this theory, that it would be unwise to appropriate for all of the services including the emergencies that might arise, because if you were to appropriate for all the seen and unforeseen contingencies you would make the appropriations so large that it would invite the rankest extravagance in the administration of the appropriations.

So Congress has taken this view of the matter, that we would cut down the appropriations to the minimum, and if, perchance, some unforeseen emergency should arise, or if the cut in the estimate proved too drastic, Congress would be in session and would grant a deficiency appropriation.

That has been the theory of these different committees and the theory of Congress, no matter which political party has been in power; and I submit it has not been a bad theory during the time when we have had no budget system, no law by which we had checks and balances upon appropriations. I believe that the budget law that will soon, I hope, be enacted will obviate many of the necessities for deficiencies. After all, no matter what law we have, an executive official is human, surrounded by human beings, heads of various bureaus, and if they are worth anything they want their bureaus to grow and develop, and they want to spend not only all the money appropriated, but they want additional appropriations at all times.

I have never complained much about that. I think it shows a healthy condition. The thing that Congress has done, and must do in the future-and is doing now-is to exercise some regulatory power over these bureaus, to see to it that the moneys they expend are wisely expended, and that their growth and development is not too rapid, and that they do not spend money for useless things. No matter what system we have, I think that will be the province of Congress and the Committee on Appropriations, and no matter what political party is in power, it ought to exercise that power in a fearless way.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] alluded to the fact that this bill contains a great many items that are subject to points of order. That is unquestionably true. I can recall few years ago when the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. who had charge of the Post Office appropriation bill, brought into the House an item carrying $100,000,000 for a single year for good roads. My recollection is that the bill carried, in round figures, $250,000,000, all told, available for expenditure for good roads for three years, and he here asked the membership of this House to waive all points of order against the bill, the good roads appropriation being subject to a point of order. Not a member on the Democratic side of the House or on the Republican side of the House raised his voice in protest, believing that on a great supply bill the membership of this House can be trusted to do the thing that ought to be done for the public good even though no actual authorization exists. The estimates submitted for the present fiscal year were submitted by the last administration for activities which they thought the Government ought to perform; and when a new administration comes into power and finds that the appropriations are not made in accordance with the administrative program, it has seemed to me, as I believe it ought to seem to every Member of this House, without regard to politics, that we ought to give the man whom we have entrusted with the administration of the affairs of the Nation a fair chance to do the things which he regards to be essential in order that the Government shall function in a strong and healthy way.

For, example, Mr. Morrison, of the Federation of Labor, states in the morning paper that almost 1,400,000 men are out of employment in the United States to-day; that last March 1,300,000 were out of employment and who wanted work but could not find it in America. Unquestionably we are face to face with great economic and industrial problems that were bound to come following the World War. While we are slowly getting back to something like a normal condition, it will be necessary to adopt new methods, new policies, and to aid industry wherever we can aid it if there is to be a minimum of unemployment in the United States. Hon. Herbert Hoover was selected Secretary of Commerce. He brings to the department great experience, experience in both domestic and foreign commerce, the experience of a very successful business man. Much depends upon the commerce of America to-day. Much depends on how we stimulate and develop American commerce and the foreign trade, upon how rapidly we put these idle men back to work. Mr. Hoover took a survey of his department and found that we had appropriated more money than he would need for taking the census of the United States, and he said that if he could have $250,000 that was appropriated for that purpose, and that he did not need, and use it to help American industry to get back onto its feet, it would assist us to take our place in the great race of industrial development. Without adequate appropriations he is powerless to do that which is necessary for the improvement of the industries of America.

Some of us do not realize just what has been done in the past by that department. Only a few years ago we were not manufacturing in the United States a single pound of parchment paper. And that was natural. No one manufacturer could afford to spend the money to build a laboratory and there carry on investigations that might lead to the successful manufacture of parchment paper; but the Government of the United States in the Department of Commerce set up a laboratory, made a scientific investigation, and gave to the paper manufacturers of the United States a formula for the manufacture of parchment paper, and to-day they are following that formula and are making every pound of parchment paper we use, and they are now exporting that kind of paper abroad. That is one of the achievements of that great department while the Democratic party was in power.

During the war we found ourselves without optical goods. We found the United States had no adequate source of supply We found that to enable it to manufacture optical goods. optical glasses were being manufactured all over the world under an old and archaic plan, by which a large retort was built by hand of potter's clay, and after 1,000 pounds of molten glass had been prepared and the impurities driven out, then the heat was withdrawn, and after a while the retort, which cost $50 or $60, was broken down and the glass was put in pans and the heat applied again, and after the glass flattened out in the pan to the thickness of about half an inch or more, then the electric cutter was applied and the pieces were cut to the dimensions desired for use in the manufacture of optical goods.

When the war came on this Department of Commerce had so far standardized the manufacture of optical glass that within thirty days there was set up at Pittsburgh in the Bureau of Standards plant a retort built in standardized molds at slight cost, with a spigot at the bottom, and after all the impurities were driven out the molten glass was drawn out in ingots of the size and shape desired. The result was that while under the old plan there was a loss of 80 per cent in the manufacture of the glass, under the new plan there was a loss of less than 21 per cent. It is that kind of work that the Government of the United States is able and equipped to perform, has purposed and has been giving to the industries, and the bureau has given to the optical goods manufacturers of America a standard which will save millions upon millions of dollars, which will inure to the benefit of all our people.

Some of us were amazed during the war to understand why it was that Germany seemed to be so far advanced in the sciences and arts. Subsequently we learned that Germany had three great scientific departments in her Government, which she maintained at large expense, and assistance and aid were furnished the industries of Germany; and if you will look through her appropriation you will observe that the one question with Germany was not how little could her scientific departments function upon, but how much could they spend in an economical way in developing the industries of Germany? To-day we look about us in America and see industry languishing, and hear the voice of the Secretary of Commerce calling to us to give him the power to do something for commerce and for industry. He can do it, but as the bill stands his hands are tied and he is incapable of doing anything except to count the men and women and the failures in America.

And so, when we came to write this bill, notwithstanding the fact that many of its provisions are subject to a point of order, we made up our minds that we should have a bill here that would result in bringing successes to America and would permit a report of failures only. [Applause.] I suppose, from present indications, we will have to bring in a rule to make some of these provisions in order. I want to say to you that after going over the estimates for more than five weeks, after trying to trim them as much as they could be trimmed, it was my deliberate judgment that there is not a single dollar in this bill that is not necessary, and I think it is of great importance that every dollar it carries should be appropriated.

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] chides us a little-good-naturedly, of course-with regard to the number of positions that we have restored. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood], who is chairman of the subcommittee on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, with the other members of his subcommittee performed a great service; and by modifying in some measure the terms of the legislative bill we do not in any respect criticize that service or the ability of the men who performed it. What is done here is done with their complete acquiescence and consent.

For example, down at the Bureau of War Risk Insurance for this year we are expending $8,500,000 for clerical assistance,

It was the desire of everyone to reduce that force to the minimum. Yet it was never the desire so to reduce that force that the men who followed the country's flag in the recent war should not be enabled to receive promptly the compensation provided for them by law. The sundry civil bill for next year carries $125,000,000 for compensation alone. The Bureau of War Risk Insurance collects millions upon millions of dollars in premiums and disburses tens of millions of dollars a year to the widows and orphans of the deceased soldiers of that war.

What the legislative bill did was not only to cut down the force from eight and one-half millions to six millions, but also placed a limitation upon the number of persons who could be employed in excess of $1,800,000 a year. The limitation, as I recall, was that not more than 266 persons shall be employed at This bill raises that increase salaries in excess of $1,800 a year. for the whole service, including the 8 regional officers, to 450, of which 215 receive a salary of $1,800 each. In the disbursement of about $200,000,000 a year to the soldiers and their dependents of the war we can not afford to so cripple the establishment that makes the disbursements to 1,500,000 different soldiers. It takes a considerable force to carry on such a work. I do not know how you think about it, but I am unwilling to say, as far as I am concerned, that an $1,800 clerk or a $2,000 clerk should be intrusted with deciding this great question as to the amount of compensation, as to the degree of physical disability and similar decisions that must be made by this department-I am not willing to say that their salary shall not be adequate. We must have in this department a trained force of men of business experience who will pass judgment upon questions involving the disbursement of about $200,000,000 and the welfare of 1,500,000 soldiers. Those of us who were here during the war remember how that department grew so rapidly that it was not able to function. I say that without disparagement to the men who did the best they could to bring order out of chaos, but it grew so rapidly that it was humanly impossible for it to function, and we were receiving letters every day from the mothers, fathers, sisters, and brothers who could not hear with regard to the claims that had been filed three or six months before. Let us not bring about a similar condition.

What the committee proposes to do is to give a force that is adequate, so that when the soldiers or the relatives of a deceased soldier makes application to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance they can have their controversy decided, and decided without great delay in time. They are entitled to that.

This matter was taken up with Mr. Wood of Indiana, but nothing was done in the way of increasing this limitation without his acquiescence and consent. The great work the committee did was in cutting down the estimates two and a half million dollars; and the director says that even with the increased limitation in the number of high places he believes the office can be administered within the $6,000,000.

Now, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] complains because he thinks we are going to spend a good deal of money this year. Except in a speech which, I think, I made in Atlantic City on the 27th of last month, I have never attempted to deal with the question of expenditures for a given year, because that is a very, very difficult thing to do. I have dealt with appropriations only for a given year. But now, for the enlightenment of the gentleman from South Carolina and other Members, I want to give him just what we have appropriated for this year, including the sums carried in this act.

The total appropriations for the Sixty-sixth Congress, second session, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1920, and ending on the 30th of June of this year, amount to $4,780,829,510.30, but this appropriation carries deficiencies for prior fiscal years amounting to $486,492,383.45, leaving the appropriation as made by the last Congress for this fiscal year at $4,294,337, And this sum includes $500,050,000 in the transportation act available for expenditure in 1920, 1921, and 1922 and later years, and does not include any amount to pay the guaranty to carriers which has been estimated at $600,000. Then there was the first deficiency bill in 1921, which included a great many items for prior years that I have not deducted, but the total aggregate is $275,256,505.21. The amount carried in this bill applicable to this year is $74,270,781.20. The items carried in the miscellaneous appropriation act at the beginning of this session was approximately, in round numbers, $2,000,000, making a total for all purposes of $4,645,863,913.32, as against the original estimate of $5,365,460,031.60, and supplemental estimates in excess of $157,000,000, making a total estimate of the former administration for the fiscal years which end the last of June $5,500,000,000, or a reduction, if every dollar is carried in this bill, of almost $1,000,000,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman does not include in his statement any reappropriations that were provided by legislation for expenditure by the Shipping Board.

Mr. GOOD. No; I have not included that, but I say that where estimates were made twice I deducted one estimate, so that it is as broad as it is long. We have not pyramided the estimates.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman did not deduct the estimates for the Shipping Board?

Mr. GOOD. I took the original estimates only. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. It does not follow the statement which the gentleman put in the RECORD last May.

Mr. GOOD. I think it does. I did not know that this debate was to take this range, and so I have asked the clerk to prepare the figures for me and if I am in error I shall be glad to change them in the RECORD.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have put in the RECORD the statement of $541,000,000 which is the expenditure of the Shipping Board, and that accounts for the difference which the gentleman makes in the estimates

Mr. GOOD. Now I submit that some of the things that have been going on rendered it a little hard to make estimates fast enough to keep up with the delinquencies of the administration along certain lines. There was a time two years ago when there was a sale for all Government property and the Committee on Appropriations demanded that sales should be made then along business lines. We demanded that the sale of wooden ships should be made at any price at a time when we were told the Shipping Board could sell them at a fair price. We demanded that they should sell the steel ships, the cargo ships, for less than $165 a ton but they were asking over $200 a dead-weight ton, when business was good and men wanted them and were willing to buy them. Over here at Hog Island when we had completed all of our work and the last rivet had been driven, they had 75 or 80 steel freight cars that had cost them $2,200 apiece to procure.

The board had no use for them at all. I am told that a man came along and said that he would like to buy the freight cars; they asked him how much he would pay for them. He replied that he would give them just what they cost-$2.200 They replied no, that they did not believe they had better sell them at that time, but that they would lease them to him for a while. They were leased for a nominal rental. that they were put on the market at auction, after the peak was over, when nobody wanted to buy freight cars, and 15 of them sold for only $1,400 each, 10 for about a thousand dollars each, and the rest of them stand there to-day rotting out.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. GOOD.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman spoke of selling the ships. Is the gentleman aware that when Mr. Payne was the Chairman of the Shipping Board he appeared before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and stated to that committee that he had used every possible endeavor to sell those ships at a reasonable price, not to exceed the world market price, and that he could not find any buyers for 25 per cent of them?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know what Mr. Payne stated before the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. I think it was a great misfortune that after Mr. Payne was placed on the Shipping Board he was not permitted to remain there. One of the failures of the Shipping Board has been, from its very inception, the tying together of men who could not work together and the changes in the management. Gen. Goethals, a man who wants to go-and go like thunder-all of the time, was tied up with a man from San Francisco who was so stubborn that he would not go at all, and yet that combination was expected to build ships to carry on the war.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I happen to know the man from San

Mr. GOOD. And I happen to know him, too. I do know that the Committee on Appropriations urged that these ships be sold, and the old board seemed to be afraid of criticism that the sales would show too much loss. There never would have been any criticism to speak of if those boats had been sold at a price that was fair, taking into consideration what the tonnage of the world costs, so long as they were not sold abroad. Here we are trying to build up a merchant marine, and then just think of the foolish policies that we have been adopting in respect to the sale of these ships. Before the war the cargo tonnage of Great Britain cost her less than $26 a dead-weight The cargo belonging to the United States cost us less than $45 a dead-weight ton. While a good deal of this tonnage was sunk, and especially European tonnage, yet when you take into consideration that the cost at which the new tonnage was acquired, the cargo tonnage of Europe to-day does not stand her more than $65 or $70 a dead-weight ton, if it stands that much, and here we were talking about putting a great merchant marine upon the seas to fly the American flag, and for a year and a half after the armistice the Shipping Board was talking about getting Americans to buy our boats at $200, $185, and more recently $165 a dead-weight ton when they would have to compete with bottoms that cost their competitors less than 875 per dead-weight ton. There ought to have been a fixed policy, and it ought to have been announced two and a half When the war was over our policy should have years ago. been to sell American ships at a price and upon such terms as that they could compete with the world, because if you sell on any other basis you will never keep an American merchant marine on the high seas.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman recalls, of course, that at one time, when the Shipping Board were making efforts to sell, they were met by an injunction, issued in the District

Not in respect to these ships. The injunction had reference to the sale of the German ships that were taken over. I think there were 13 of them. I think that injunction was a very great mistake, but it applied only to the 13 captured German ships.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman will recall the further fact that it was distinctly stated to the committee that practically all the ships that had been sold had been turned back to the board by those who had purchased them.

Mr. GOOD. Of course. They were sold at a price that purchasers never expected to pay for them and never could pay unless the high prices for freight continued, and nobody expected that they would continue. It was a gamble upon the part of the purchaser, but if the whole thing had been set up on a substantial basis and the ships had been sold, and this extra cost of $125 a dead-weight ton or more had been written off as the cost of the war, as it should have been, there would have been a different story to tell. I am not complaining because these ships cost too much money. What I am complaining about is that we did not sell them on a basis so that American shipowners could compete with their foreign competitors, and thus avoid this great loss in operations by the Government.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think that if there is any criticism to be visited on anyone for failure to sell these ships, that criticism lies more at the door of Congress than at the door of the Shipping Board?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, not at all. Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

I can not answer two questions at once, and I think the question of the gentleman from Tennessee is worthy of a moment's reflection. What has Congress to do with the management of this corporation? The Emergency Fleet Corporation is the biggest corporation in all the world. It had more than $3,000,000,000 of property, or did have before it sold any of it. The administration of that greatest corporation in all the world called for an executive ability of the highest order, and yet, strange to say, from the time of its very inception we had change after change in executive heads. We had Goethals and Denman, we had Schwab and Piez, we had Hurley and Payne and Benson and others, and how in the name of common sense could you expect to have anything except disorder, failure, and loss all along the line when you were changing your drivers every six months?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I suggest to the gentleman that we have no drivers at the present time. There has been a vacancy on the board for several months. There are no members of the board at the present time because the President for some reason has neglected to make the appointments.

Mr. GOOD. We still have Admiral Benson, and I hope that in the very near future we may have a Shipping Board, and I hope it will be composed of men whose business experience has been broad enough to assist them in grappling with big undertakings. I believe the President will soon make the appointments of the members of the board, and when made the high character of the men appointed will justify any delay occasioned by the fact that the President would be satisfied only with men who will fill the bill and who will stay by the job.

I know it is a big question, and what I have said is not intended as a reflection on the big men who were at various times placed at the head, but my criticism was that the President changed the head and the personnel of this organization alto-gether too frequently, and the result bears failure, extravagance, and losses,

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. There is no way of keeping a man in his job.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; he could during the war.
Mr. HARDY of Texas. The question is in connection with what the gentleman from Tennessee stated, as to whether it was not the fault of the Congress rather than the Shipping Board. May I state that the Shipping Board came

Mr. GOOD. I will answer a question, but-

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does the gentleman know whether Mr. Payne did not seek the advice of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries and ask for the passage of a law that would determine the policy of this Government as to the sale of these ships, and we passed the law and that policy was pursued by the Shipping Board? We passed a law directing him as to the method of sale and-

Mr. GOOD. The law has been on the statute books all along authorizing and directing the sale; that authority is in the original act. Is it necessary for the Congress, when it creates a great corporation with $3,000,000,000 capital and turns its administration over to the President, to say to it where it must sell its freight cars or 100 pounds of scrap? Is it possible that when we have a great corporation of this kind that provides for the administration of its affairs by the President that Congress itself must commence to carry on the administration?

It would be a mistake; it would result in a dismal failure to throw any such burden as that upon the Congress, just as it resulted in failure in this case when we gave the President the

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for one more question there? Does the gentlemen think that the Shipping Board would have been justified in ignoring the policy prescribed by the law passed by the Congress as to the sale of these ships?

Mr. GOOD. Congress authorized the sale of these ships-Mr. HARDY of Texas. Upon certain conditions, which they could not comply with.

Mr. GOOD. What I am complaining about is not the failure to carry out the policy that was granted, 18 months after the armistice was signed. I am complaining because of the failure to carry out the provisions of the original act that authorized the sale. There was never any time, long before Congress passed the law referred to, when the Committee on Appropriations was trying to get the Shipping Board to sell these ships and we refused to give appropriations, but told them to sell the ships and use the money. But the board refused to sell. Less than six months ago the director of operations came before us and said that he would have for next year an operating surplus of more than $50,000,000. The hope of making these large profits prevented the board from adopting a policy for disposal of the ships. Now they did not send the director of operations before us at the recent hearings. Oh, no! he was an optimist, he saw larger profits in operations, but they sent the assistant before us, and he says that the losses in operations for the last three months of this year will amount to $18,000,000. He said that they would have that much loss next year before they get on a paying condition. Do you know that you have a fleet down here in the lower Potomac of 274 wooden boats chained up together, and every three months you are compelled to pay over $111,000 to keep those ships that you can not give away? You can not find a man who will take one of those ships if you will give it to him. We are paying now about $500,000 a year, and at one time they told us they could Why did not they do it? sell them.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the distinguished chairman of the greatest committee in the House yield to an humble Member of Mr. GOOD. I will yield to the very distinguished Member from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman speaks of the want of policy. During the entire Sixty-sixth Congress, which was in session two years, the gentleman was the real boss of the House of Representatives when his party had a majority of 47 Members.

Mr. GOOD. I will yield for a question but not for a eulogy.

[Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask him if during that whole two years, when he had control of this House, if he ever sought to give a policy to the Shipping Board, which was the creature of this Congress

Mr. GOOD. Oh, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] and the other members of the committee and I added my humble voice to the plea and begged them to sell the ships.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but you should have directed them to sell at a certain price-

Mr. GOOD. And the gentleman would have made a point of order against the bill if it had contained such a provision.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not make points of order against wise

Mr. GOOD. Then the gentleman will not make a point of order on any of the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. No, but I am going to make points or order on some things, because I do not believe in paying $10,000 for men whom the gentleman was once in favor of taking off of instead of adding to boards.

Mr. GOOD. Now, so much for the Shipping Board. I hope in the very near future we shall have some businesslike administration of that office. We have done everything we can to compel this board to sell these ships, but now there is no sale at any price. They are operating ships at a considerable loss. They have something like 600 steel vessels tied up at the piers, and in many cases it is costing us $1,500 per month for each vessel while it is tied up. They also made a contract of charter with other companies, which was a most foolish and unbusiness-like charter. Under that charter, for example, a concern with, say, 10 large steamships and having trade routes established, finds because of the depression that their trade fell off and their steamers went out of various ports with very small cargoes. Finally it commenced to tie up its boats. Then it went to the Shipping Board and said that they could use three of the Shipping Board's cargo vessels, and entered into a charter arrangement with the Shipping Board for three vessels. Then it would tie up its 10 boats because they were running at a loss and it would send out the three boats which it had chartered from the Shipping Board under a contract that if the company made any money the profits were to be divided with the Shipping Board, and if they lost the Government of the United States would pay every penny of the loss. That is the condition, and yet you wonder why it has been necessary to bring in deficiency bills.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield for a question.
Mr. FESS. Is the running of the ships at a loss due to the lack of cargo, or what is it?

Mr. GOOD. At the present time it is due practically to a stoppage of the movements of freight. There is not enough freight to be moved, and it is a rare thing that a vessel now leaves a port with a cargo sufficient to pay its expenses.

Mr. FESS. I have had the impression also, if the chairman please, that some of our legislation in the past has been rather detrimental to the shipping interest, such as the seamen's act that we passed. Is that impression right or wrong?

Mr. GOOD. I really could not tell the gentleman in regard to I do not believe the committee has ever taken any testimony on that subject. I am inclined to think from what I have read that the La Follette Seamen Act, if that is what the gentleman refers to-

Mr. FESS. That is what I refer to. Mr. GOOD. That it costs a great deal more to operate under that act than is required to operate under the maritime laws of other countries. That has been my understanding.

Mr. FESS. If the gentleman will permit another question: If the Government is running the ships at a loss it is going to be difficult, is it not, to sell them at almost any price? How can private enterprise run the ships profitably under the same con-

Mr. GOOD. They can not, of course, sell under present conditions. But conditions are very abnormal. The freight movements will begin again, and business will be revived again throughout the world very soon, I have no doubt. I think we are at a very low ebb at the present time, and as trade commences and commerce commences to flow there will be a demand for these ships, and I have no doubt there will be a demand for them to carry commerce at a profit.

Mr. FESS. It strikes me that since we are so anxious to build up a merchant marine the present condition is a very discouraging one.

Mr. GOOD. Well, it may be discouraging, but I think it is not without hope. I believe that in the very near future we will be able, when the situation becomes a little more normal throughout the world, to again establish trade routes on which commerce may be carried profitably.

Now, what we have done in this bill is this: We have appropriated only an amount of money necessary to complete the 34 cargo vessels. We do not carry anything to pay claims, to pay losses, for operations, or anything of that kind. But here are contracts for the construction of ships that must be carried Ninety-eight per cent, as I recall, of the vessels of the Shipping Board are completed, and of the 2 per cent that remain to be completed they are 70 per cent completed. It will require approximately $61,000,000 or $62,000,000, maybe a little more, to complete those vessels. If the Government of the United States does not provide the money with which to pay those claims, to pay wages as they come due in the shipyards, we would be liable to damages, and we felt we should appropriate here enough money to pay for the balance of the construction of those ships, and leave the funds now in the hands of the Shipping Board and receipts estimated at $50,000 on for next year for cancellations and for operations. The Shipping Board estimated the expenditures for cancellations for next year would amount to $40,000,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I recall that when the sundry civil act for 1921 was under consideration the gentleman from Iowa was very much opposed to making direct appropriations, and insisted upon a provision to the sundry civil act which largely necessitated the rule that was then brought in. that in this act direct appropriations are made. May I ask the gentleman what change of conditions has come about to cause him to change his views?

Mr. GOOD. The amount, as I recall, in this bill for completing the construction program is about $62,000,000 for the Shipping Board for the remainder of the year and for next year. When the sundry civil estimates was under consideration in the committee the director of operations estimated the operating profit would amount to $60,000,000 for next year.

Now he says there is a loss of $18,000,000 in this year, and my recollection is he estimates the loss will be the same amount for the same three months of the next year, then he hopes to at least break even. The wiping out entirely of the profit that was anticipated, based on the statements of the director of operations, makes it necessary for us to supply the money from some other source; and there is only one source, and that is by direct appropriation. But we do not make the fund available for all purposes. We make it available only for the extinguishment of these contracts; and I think the gentleman will agree it will be a mistake if we make the Government liable in damages by closing down certain yards because there is no money available.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no criticism to make.

I think the appropriation should have been made.

Mr. GOOD. But the gentleman will see that if we are right now, and need only $61,000,000, we were right before, when the director of operations estimated a net gain from operations of $60,000,000; while now the assistant director says they will not make any of the $60,000,000 for operation which they counted on when the sundry civil bill was under consideration. Here was an expert on operations. We knew nothing about it. He said the profits would amount to $60,000,000 for the next year; now he says there will be only losses.

Now we also carry $15,000,000 in this bill for the Federal Board for Vocational Education. When the sundry civil bill was under discussion the director of the vocational board came before the committee, and stated that they were not paying out money as rapidly as they anticipated, and that would have an unexpended balance at the end of this fiscal year, on June 30, of $15,000,000; and, if we would make that amount available for next year, we could reduce their estimates by that amount. We did so. Now, then, they come back and say that they have spent practically all the money they had for vocational rehabilitation. They claim now that they will not have $15,000,000 on June 30, but must have $15,000,000 more to pay the obligations up to the 1st of July.

What has happened is this; we might as well be frank about it: When this industrial depression swept over the country about the first of year, young men and old lost their jobs, and as the young men who were in the late war lost their positions they naturally-it was only human-put their names on the Federal pay roll through the Federal Board for Vocational Education, and the result is this great influx of persons who are now demanding vocational training. It will require $30,000,000 more for vocational education for this year than it was estimated would be required for the last four We have placed in the bill the amount that was estimated for the purpose.

You talk about deficiencies. Look at one of the estimates in the Navy Department. Here was an item originally estimated in the naval bill, for fuel in the Navy. Mr. Daniels originally estimated for only $10,000,000 for fuel for the Navy.

Congress gave him the $10,000,000, and before they had practically started with this fiscal year they came back and said they had to have $20,000,000 more, and Congress gave it to them. Now they again come back and say they must have $6,600,000 more for the rest of this fiscal year. They say that practically all their fuel was gone when they came before the committee early in April; that all the money that had been appropriated for fuel for the Navy for the year, $30,000,000, had been expended, and they wanted $6,600,000 Certainly there was great laxness and looseness in making the estimate in that case. Now we carry $6,000,000. It will be necessary, however, for them to tie up more of their vessels, but inasmuch as the naval bill as it passed the House recently is predicated upon the belief that some of these vessels must be tied up, it occurred to the subcommittee that we might as well commence that tying-up process on the 1st day of June as on the 30th day of June, and we have reduced the estimate by $600,000 for that reason.

There is also carried for hospitalization in this bill $8,700,000 under the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. All of it is due to the increased number of patients that are receiving hospital treatment.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Is that for maintenance alone?

Mr. GOOD. It is for maintenance as well as supplies and things of that kind.

We carry in the bill—and I will not take time to allude to but a few of them—many items of legislation. Some of the items will probably provoke some discussion. A few years ago the Government took over several of the quarantine stations. And in taking over this New York station we provided that the same fees collected by the State of New York for that service should be continued. Last month we collected in fees at the quarantine station at New York $118,000, which will more than pay all expenses. That quarantine station is more than selfsupporting. We collect practically nothing in fees at Philadelphia, at Boston, and at Baltimore. We carry in the bill a provision that gives the Secretary of the Treasury the right to establish and collect fees that are reasonable, not excessive of the cost.

Now, the Red Star Line, I think it is, whose boats sail from New York, has changed its place of sailing from New York to Boston, and we have to provide additional facilities there. But the Secretary has no authority to collect additional fees for the fumigation of ships and for the services that are rendered at quarantine stations. At the New York quarantine station we collect altogether approximately $700,000 or $800,000 a year. There are some of these services that ought to be self-supporting.

Take, for example, the Steamboat-Inspection Service. Every year we pay out a million and half dollars in inspecting boilers. Seven per cent of it is in connection with ocean vessels, and a large part is in connection with river and lake craft. The Secretary came before us and said if he had authority, without imposing hardship on anyone he could collect the cost for that service. That whole service is for the benefit of the steamships and the public that uses them, and the public pays for the service. That whole cost can be assessed and collected, and one million and a half dollars saved to the taxpayers. As we take on new services we should try and see if it can not be self-supporting. It seemed to the committee that this service ought to pay the expense of its administration.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. FESS. Is not that the practice with every other Government outside of our own?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and the same is true in regard to inspection service wires.

Now, in regard to the hospitalization of the soldiers, we passed a bill, just before Congress adjourned, carrying $18,500,000 for hospitals. But that bill was drawn at a time when the survey by the department had not been completed. President Harding, shortly after he was inaugurated, called in Dr. Billings, of Chicago, one of the greatest diagnosticians in the United States, and also Dr. White, an expert, and one or two other men prominent in their profession, and these men volunteered and went out and made a survey of the hospital facilities in the United States in which to provide hospital facilities for the soldiers.

They came back with a unanimous report. They point to what has been done at Johnson City, Tenn., where, by the expenditure of a million dollars, they made available a thousand beds for tubercular patients and created the best tubercular hospital in the world to-day. They examined the experiment, where, with the expenditure of another million dollars, the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes reconstructed the hospital at the old soldiers' home at Marion, Ind., where they have provision to-day for the most scientific treatment of a thousand patients suffering with nervous disorders. These physicians have said that if the Secretary of the Treasury had authority to use the fund appropriated in a businesslike way, using the money for the enlargement of this Government institution, if it could be enlarged profitably, spending the money for building an addition to this one, if an addition was needed, and placing the hospitals of the country where the sick men of the country live, so far as possible, they would be able to provide hospitals for less than one-half of what they could get the same bed capacity for by going out now and building entirely anew, as they will be compelled to build under the recent act.

More than that, we have 10 soldiers' homes. The soldiers of the Civil War in those homes are on an average more than 78 years old and are passing off very rapidly. They will soon be gone, and they have gladly given up barracks, have gladly segregated themselves into certain buildings; and to-day the American Legion stands back of this movement as the most sensible movement that can be provided in order to secure hospitals for the soldiers at the earliest possible time. We have carried in this bill a provision, subject to a point of order it is true, which permits the Secretary of the Treasury to take that fund and use it where it can be used to the best advantage to secure hospital facilities at the earliest possible date and without wasteful expenditures.

There are other provisions in the bill. One of them will involve some discussion. To-day we have in the office of the Secretary two young men as assistant secretaries drawing $5,000 a year each, whose terms of office expire on the 1st of July.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield for information? The gentleman stated that the fund to which he referred is now placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Treasury, who has the locating of these hospitals.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. He has no board behind him?

Mr. GOOD. The Secretary of the Treasury has that power and under the present law locates the hospitals.

Mr. HUDSPETH. He must report the locations which he was selected.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but he has secured this board that is to help him in locating these hospitals and in formulating his plans. Now, the Secretary of the Treasury came before us and asked for an assistant. These two assistant secretaries go out soon. The Secretary pointed out that just at the time there were so many problems thrown upon the Secretary of the Treasury. He has many bureaus and Government activities under his jurisdiction. There are about 40 different bureaus under the Secretary of the Treasury. Many of them have grown up because of the war. Many of them we can not get away from if we would. We must continue to look after property acquired during the war, that was turned over to the Secretary of the Treasury. In this bill we provide for an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury at $10,000 a year, which salary is the same as that paid to the members of the Federal Farm Loan Board, and I think it is only reasonable and just. He needs this kind of an assistant. The estimate designated him as under secretary, but as there was some objection to this we designated him as First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. Whatever we call him we should give the Secretary the assistant,

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa

has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to prefer a request for unanimous consent that the time be extended in spite of the agreement-

The CHAIRMAN. The time was fixed in the House, and it can not be changed by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BLANTON. But if no one makes a point of order against the request

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain the request. Mr. BLANTON. This is a very important bill.

THE CHAIRMAN. The unanimous-consent agreement was reached in the House, and the committee has no right to change it.

Mr. BLANTON. It might save some points of order being made later.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have 10 minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 10 minutes remaining. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, in making the request to revise and extend before beginning my remarks I do so because I see the futility of covering a vast question of this nature in 10 minutes, but I shall proceed as fast as possible. It is a question that strikes at the very vitals of American life. It is a question which the whole Atlantic seaboard and much of the western country are most deeply interested in. It is a question which touches the fireside and the happiness of millions of people, and to discuss it in 10 minutes would be impossible, and so I shall add to my remarks what remains un-

I have felt for sometime that Congress must do something toward the investigation and remedy of the present price of anthracite coal in this country. To that end I introduced a resolution by which I hoped the Department of Justice might take hold of this matter and relieve Congress of any burden in connection therewith. Accordingly, on April 22, 1921, I in-troduced House resolution 68, which is as follows:

House resolution 68.

Resolved, That the Attorney General be requested to report to the House of Representatives as promptly as possible the following information:

mation:

First. Any information in the Department of Justice which would show whether or not the present price of anthracite coal of $14 to $16 per ton to the consumer is a fair and just price at this time and under present peace conditions.

present peace conditions.

Second. Any information in the Department of Justice to show whether or not the present exorbitant prices are maintained by unfair methods or illegal combinations of operators or dealers therein.

Third. Whether there is sufficient legislation to enable the Government to handle and control the present anthracite-coal situation; and if not, what additional legislation would the Department of Justice recommend to deal therewith.

In answer to that I received a letter directly from the Department of Justice, and I believe a copy of it, or perhaps an original along the same line, was sent to the committee. That letter is as follows:.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, D. C., May 4, 1921.

Hon. J. CHARLES LINTHICUM, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Your letter of the 30th ultimo transmitting a proposed resolution requesting certain information relative to the price of anthracite has been received.

Answering the inquiries contained in the proposed resolution, you are advised as follows:

1. There is no general information in this department indicating what would be a fair and reasonable price for anthracite to consumers. I am informed, however, that, at least until recently, the Federal Trade Commission has been gathering production-cost statistics with respect to anthracite, and it is likely that it has valuable information upon the subject.

to anthracite, and it is likely that it has valuable information upon the subject.

2. There is likewise no information in this department indicating that prices generally are being maintained by unfair methods or illegal combinations of operators or dealers, nor is there any information in the department indicating that the contrary is true. An indictment was recently obtained, however, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia charging the defendants, all the large wholesale and retail dealers in coal in the city of Washington, with engaging in a conspiracy in restraint of trade, effected, amongst other means, by inducing all persons engaged in the local retail coal trade to become members of the Coal Merchants' Board of Trade and then to refrain from competition either by selling to each other's customers or to the customers of defendants or by reducing prices, and by preventing those who refused from obtaining a supply of coal. This case has not yet been tried.

of defendants or by reducing prices, and by preventing those who refused from obtaining a supply of coal. This case has not yet been tried.

Complaints of similar situations existing in other communities have from time to time come to the department; but such a situation elsewhere than in the District of Columbia not involving interstate commerce is one to which Federal laws do not apply.

You have already been advised in a letter dated April 26, 1921, that the restoration of competitive conditions in the production of anthracite expected to result from the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the Reading case may have the effect to lower prices.

3. Your third inquiry requires a consideration of the causes of the high prices of anthracite generally. The enforcement of the antiprofiteering law, recently held invalid, created the only occasion for a consideration in this department of causes of high prices. This, of course, gave rise to no necessity for a general economic investigation of the subject, and the investigations of the department were in consequence limited to instances where profiteering was the cause. The Department of the Interior have for some time been gathering and publishing statistics as to production of anthracite and bituminous, together with kindred information as to the elements affecting production. Such information would no doubt be of interest to you upon this particular point. So far as I am aware, no thorough investigation of this subject has been had to develop definitely whether a situation exists requiring remedial legislation, and therefore this department does not possess knowledge of facts which would enable it to make recommendations as to legislation required.

Respectfully,

Respectfully,

GREY D. GOFF,
Assistant to the Attorney General.

From what I have said it will be seen that the Lever Act having been found unconstitutional, we are without means to prosecute any profiteers, either operators or dealers, in anthracite coal, and likewise we are unable, except in the District of Columbia, to prosecute under the Federal law organizations which combine to set prices and to prevent competition which might lead to a reduction in the price of this commodity.

I also call attention to the fact that according to the testimony of Mr. Francis Walker, chief economist, Federal Trade Commission, testifying under the Calder resolution, Senate resolution 350, page 2019, and so forth, it is shown that information upon the cost of production of coal from 1917 to the end of 1918 was obtained by the Fuel Administration, but when the price regulation was lifted the National Coal Association, through its counsel, Rush Butler, raised the question as to power to collect this information, and through the activity of the National Coal Association the Maynard Coal Co. procured an injunction restraining collection of further data, from which time the Federal Trade Commission and Fuel Administration have been unable to procure figures upon which to base a fair price for the commodity.

It is a rather strange coincidence that a certain attorney, according to this testimony, wrote a brief for the Fuel Administration, in which he upheld their right to secure same, and later became counsel for the coal company and secured the injunction prohibiting its collection. We are therefore in position of having no law to prosecute profiteers, none to restrain combinations outside of the District of Columbia, and now there exists this injunction restraining collection of information which would lead to the setting of a fair price to the consumer.

COAL AREA.

Anthracite coal is procured from the eastern slope of the Appalachian Mountains from an area not larger than the State of Rhode Island. There are about 12 company concerns, so called by reason of their former association with railroads, and from 70 to 140 independent concerns. One company gets out a price and others follow, which is what is called company coal price or circular price. When coal is scarce the price is low; when coal is plentiful the price is high. This occurs because when coal is scarce the independent companies have a chance to compete, and when it is plentiful the company concerns have such an abundance that the independent operator is unable to compete by reason of his crude and expensive methods.

GIRARD ESTATE.

Stephen Girard left to the city of Philadelphia in trust 4,480 acres of this valuable coal land, the administration of which trust was by an act of the Pennsylvania Legislature assigned to a board called "directors of city trusts." The leases are usually made for short periods and are based upon the price of the coal, hence the higher the price the greater the royalty.

The table which follows will show how this revenue to the Girard estate has increased threefold in the past five years:

1915	$0.55
1916	. 52
1917	. 60
1918	. 74
1919	1.04
The total royalties for these years are as follows:
1915$1,099,	968, 54
1916 1, 437,
1 1917	683 76

Why this should be upon a percentage basis I am not able to say, but that it is a great hardship upon the consumer I am sure we will all agree.

PRODUCTION COSTS.

The cost of production of coal, according to testimony of Mr. Walker, on page 2017 of the hearings, I have referred to, based upon figures given by coal operators for 1918, was $4.10 per short ton and $5.11 per long ton. As I said, since 1918, by reason of the coal company's injunction, no information has been obtained, but we do know that in 1920, which prevails at the present time, labor increased 17.4 per cent, to $3.49 per ton; supplies rose 41 per cent, to 93 cents per ton; and overhead charges rose 47 per cent, to 69 cents per ton, making a total for 1920, which Mr. Walker, on page 2019 of the hearings, said still prevailed January 17, 1921, of $5.11 per ton. The following table will show the total cost of production of 100 tons of Average "company" cost of production of 190 short tons (a) of anthracite of all sizes (d) f. o. b. cars at mine, fresh-mined product (b).

	November- December, 1918 (e).	Estimated, April-No- vember, 1920.
Labor Supplies Overhead	$297 66 47	(f) $349 (g) 93 69
Total	410	511

(a) Anthracite coal is sold both long and short ton, but production figures are commonly given for long tons.

(b) "Fresh-mined coal" costs more to produce than washery coal, but they are mixed in the output; thus, if washery coal be included, the cost of the whole is reduced about 7 per cent, from $511 to approximately $476 per hundred short tons.

(c) Selling prices for the different sizes are determined by the commercial demand for each size and by the quantity of each produced. The less marketable steam sizes result from the natural breakages of the coal during the process of mining and preparing it for the market.

(d) The cost per ton of producing all sizes of fresh-mined anthracite is the same.

(e) The cost of production in November and December, 1918, ran unduly high, owing to decreased production.

(f) Estimated on basis wages, increase April 1, 1920, of about 17.4 per cent.

per cent.

(g) Estimated on basis of reported increase in adjacent central Pennsylvania a bituminous field of 41 per cent and 47 per cent, respectively, for supplies and overhead.

Labor Supplies. Overhead	$332 74 53	(f) $390 (g) 104 78

There is a difference of about $1 per ton more for the production of coal in 1920 and 1921 than in 1918. To this must be added the additional cost in freight rates of 40 per cent. The freight to Baltimore at this time is $3.64 per ton, whereas in 1918 it was $2.60 per ton, a difference of $1.04, which, together with the cost of production, would add about $2.64 per ton over 1918.

Dealers' prices (at Baltimore) have increased from 1918 to 1921 nearly $5 per ton, while the increase in production and freight has been but $2.04 per ton. Operators have increased their price at the mines $2.31, while the cost of production has increased but $1 per ton.

COMPANY OPERATORS' PROFITS.

It is quite evident that there is something radically wrong when we find the coal operators and coal dealers making such tremendous profits out of their business. I have no objection to any concern making money, but when it is exorbitant and works a hardship on both the rich and the poor, the latter more particularly, because they can not pay cash nor buy in large quantities, then I am in favor of placing some curb upon the handlers of this great natural monopoly.

I hold in my hand a letter from Mr. J. Appleton Wilson, of Baltimore, in which he calls my attention to an editorial in the Baltimore Sun of April 21, calling particular attention to outrageous profits made by the Pennsylvania and Reading coal companies, their profits for 1920 being nearly 133 per cent over 1919 and 60 per cent over 1918. Take the case of the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad Co. They own the coal company of that name. In 1909 they issued dividends to their stockholders in the shape of stock in their coal company of $6,590,700, since which time dividends have been paid-

Per co	ent.
1913	20
1915	50
1916	60

And so forth.

This coal company's earnings increased from 1919, $1,362,972 to $4,981,000. They have asked the Interstate Commerce Commission to allow them to distribute as dividends a profit of $90,000,000, and the commission has already authorized distribution of $42,277,000 thereof. Those who know the railroad business are fully aware this great earning was not made except through the transportation of coal and ownership of great anthracite fields.

WASTE, SMALL SIZES, DIRT, ETC.

The question of price, however, is not the only matter which concerns the public, but the great waste which now takes place, both in transportation and sale of the refuse which comes from a ton of coal. When one pays $14.25 for a ton of furnace coal he does not receive furnace coal alone, but 10 to 15 per cent of impurities, which runs his price up to $15.75 per ton; not alone that, but he receives now a ton of coal of which at least 25 per cent is smaller size, and should be so classed.

The public pays for and loses the cost of hauling this refuse from the mines to the yards and to the homes-a tremendous expense when calculated through its entire course. It becomes a nuisance to the householder, and rapidly depreciates the furnaces and stoves in which it is used. Certainly something should be done to prevent this tremendous waste and nuisance. I hold a clipping from the New York Times of April 23 last, in which it says that the comptroller of New York is holding up vouchers of over $1,200,000 to coal dealers for the winter's coal supply to the public schools and police departments. Much of the coal is found to be slate and large quantities of coal dust, which is a nuisance to not only the large consumers of the country but the small consumers as well, all experiencing alike the hardship of the waste, lack of sizing of the coal, and the care which formerly obtained in its distribution.

PENNSYLVANIA ANTHRACITE COAL TAX THE LAST STRAW.

The governor of Pennsylvania has just approved a bill placing a production tax on all anthracite coal mined in that State. This is manifestly unjust and truly a great hardship upon the consuming public. The United States Constitution says:

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

Certainly this tax is against the spirit if not the letter of that provision.

The tax specified in the act is 1½ per cent ad valorem on all coal mined, and under another bill 2 per cent on selling price, which is to be with the consent of operators and relieve them of all damage suits, commonly known as the Fowler or cave-in This will mean, after deducting waste and undesirable coal, about 5 per cent on all domestic sizes. It will hit the householder, both poor and rich, and at a time when they can least afford it It would be just as fair for Maryland and Virginia to place a tax on the great sea-food production of the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries, the States of California and Florida to tax the golden fruits from their domains, or the States of the sunny South to place a tax upon cotton and its vast by-products.

I lay these facts before this House, and will soon ask an investigation and proper legislation in the interest of the public and against this vast monopoly. [Applause,]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the anthracite coal question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the anthracite coal question. Is there objection?

There was no objection, The Clerk read as follows:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

GENERAL EXPENSES.

Executive office: The accounting officers of the District of Columbia are authorized to pay to J. Thilman Hendrick the salary of a Commissioner of the District of Columbia for the period from September 17, 1920, to March 4, 1921, inclusive, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1761 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee what is the necessity of this provision in a deficiency bill?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Hendrick was not confirmed, but he served as District commissioner.

Mr. BLANTON. And he actually served during the four months?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. Mr. BLANTON. And received no salary from any other source?

Mr. GOOD. He received no pay as a commissioner. I do not know about any other private source.

Mr. BLANTON. Was his time devoted somewhere else where he did receive a salary?

Mr. GOOD. No; he gave his time to the District. The gentleman asked if he got a salary anywhere else, and I say I do not know, because he might be an officer of some corporation and receive a slight remuneration. I do not know about that; but he served as commissioner and has not been paid.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Rent Commission: For an additional amount for salaries and expenses authorized by section 103, Title II, of the food control and the District of Columbia rent act, approved October 22, 1919, $15,000, to continue available during the life of the commission.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that portion of the paragraph which reads "to continue available during the life of the commission." What is the life of the commission

Mr. GOOD. It expires in October, 1921.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any necessity for the commission to be held over that long?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; the rent commission expects to commence a great many suits to recover the excessive rents that have been paid.

Mr. BLANTON. Paid by whom?

Mr. GOOD. Paid by the tenants to the landlords, and these suits are to enforce the provisions of the act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order instead of making it, and I want to ask this question of the distinguished chairman of the committee. I have been informed that where excessive rents are charged they are charged in 90 per cent of the cases by the lessees against sublessees, and that the real landlord does not reap any benefit from it. sublessees who lease the premises to others who are guilty of most of the profiteering.

Mr. GOOD. I suppose that is true in part. Mr. FOCHT. No; under the Ball bill the sublessee can not charge any more than he pays the landlord.

Mr. GOOD. If the premises are furnished he can charge for the furniture.

Mr. FOCHT. But he can not charge more for the rent.

Mr. BLANTON. I have heard numerous complaints made where landlords are getting the same rent that they received back in 1916 and the early part of 1917, but the party to whom the property was leased rented it to other parties at a profiteering rate, and it is the protection we are giving these parties by this continued act that I would protest against.

This money will be used largely for this purpose. The rent commissioners have been called upon to fix the rents in many cases and they have so fixed the rent, but a higher rent has been collected and they propose now to collect that excess rent that was taken in violation of law.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For 1922, $1,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike I want to ask the Chairman about this apout the last word. propriation for 1922. Why is it necessary to make an appropriation for 1922 in this bill? Is there an estimated deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. No, the jurisdiction of the court was changed under the act of March 3, 1921. It gave this court additional jurisdiction, changing and enlarging the punishment from cases involving $100 to cases involving $1,000, so that it has largely increased the work of the court, and the appropriation is altogether inadequate for contingent expenses. It is to bring in about 1,200 new cases and that is the reason why it is necessary to give this additional amount.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For additional employees from June 1, 1921, to June 30,-1922, inclusive, at annual rates of compensation as follows: Jury clerk, $1,600; four enrolling clerks, at $1,600 each; stenographer and typist, $1,400; in all, $10,183.34.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph that it is new legislation on an appropriation bill unauthorized by law. These are new positions and not deficiencies.

Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman desires,

Mr. GOOD. By the act of March 3, 1921, they increased the jurisdiction of this court, giving them jurisdiction of an additional class of cases, and they can not take care of the work with the present force. It brings in over 1,200 cases immediately.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman ever seen a crowded docket cleaned up?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but here they have given this municipal court an additional jurisdiction. My recollection is that they formerly had jurisdiction of causes up to $100. They have changed the original jurisdiction from $100 to $1,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I think they can do the work by working a little mite harder,

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Texas to this fact: By the act to which the gentleman from Iowa has referred, the exclusive jurisdiction of this court was raised from $100 to $1,000, and that act goes into effect on June 1. They have been provided with no clerks, with no appropriation to take care of the large number of new cases which will come before the court by reason of the act passed in March of this year.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. Mr. WINGO. How many clerks have they now? Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Five, and a messenger.

Mr. WINGO. How many judges?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Five. If the gentleman will permit, I will read a portion of a letter which was written to our colleague, the gentleman from Virginia, Mr. Moore, who is unavoidably absent. It is from Judge Aukam.

Mr. BRIGGS. Is he one of the judges of the court?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes. A portion of the letter reads as follows:

as follows:

The act of March 3 last, increasing the exclusive jurisdiction the court from $100 to $1,000 and requiring a record to be kept of every case, goes into effect on June 1 next.

The tenfold increase of original jurisdiction, in addition to the nearly 1,200 cases now pending and awaiting trial in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia and subject to immediate transfer for trial in this court, renders this force indispensable.

Our present clerical force (five, and a messenger) handle over 21,000 cases a year. They are often required to put in extra hours of service to keep the work current.

During the coming year this court will be called upon to dispose of over 30,000 cases and to enroll the same. The granting of the full force requested in the current deficiency bill will simply allow one clerk to each of the five judges, as up to this time we have never been able to take any clerk from the clerk's office into the courtroom.

This great increase in cases requires many records to be kent.

This great increase in cases requires many records to be kept. The judges of this court state that it will be absolutely impossible to transact the business of the court unless they have some additional employees.

Mr. BRIGGS. Are these courts courts of record now? Mr. BYRNS of Tennesssee. They are, under the act passed in March.

Mr. GOOD. And they have no one to make the record?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. That is correct.

Mr. GOOD. No one to preserve the record, and yet we have made them a court of record.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is for the purpose of giving them necessary clerks to keep the records.

Mr. BRIGGS. That is the work that they are already performing now, which the judge states deprives them of even a clerk in the courtroom.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee whether his distinguished copartner in watchfulness from South Carolina [Mr. Byrnes] approves of this

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have not conferred with the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. If he does I shall withdraw the point of Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman from South Carolina had heard the hearings as I have I feel sure that he would approve of the item.

Mr. BLANTON. Because with a unanimous opinion upon the part of the Byrns brothers all obstacles and objections must disappear.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I also want to call attention to the amount of money deposited with the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia in the way of fees, etc., from 1909 to the end of the fiscal year 1919 from this court. They amount to $348,012.59, while the total expenses of the court for the same period amount to $219,832.18, leaving a surplus unexpended of earned fees in the Treasury during that period of $128,160.41.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman will recall also that it was stated that many of these rent cases it would be necessary to commence in this court.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. WINGO, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman tell me how many judges there are in the court that has jurisdiction of these cases that are transferred?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There are five judges in the District Supreme Court, and the cases involving amounts between $100 and $1,000 will be transferred to this court, where there are also five judges.

Mr. WINGO. And it is not intended to transfer all of this clerical help.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; they keep whatever clerical help they have.

Mr. WINGO. This question is prompted by the last argument the gentleman made with reference to the revenues from this court. Is the reason for this additional clerical assistance the increase in the business or for the purpose of taking up the

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It is clearly on account of the increase in business, which has been tenfold, as the judge states. I wanted to make that statement for the information of the House

Mr. WINGO. I am not objecting to it at all.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If it were not for this greatly increased business the appropriation would not be recommended. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask one other question of the chairman of the committee. This court with five judges has criminal jurisdiction, has it not?

Mr. GOOD. The police court has jurisdiction.

Mr. BLANTON. Has not this court criminal jurisdiction?

Mr. GOOD. I really could not tell the gentleman. Mr. BLANTON. It has, and there are five judges.

Mr. GOOD. But only five clerks.
Mr. BLANTON. They now have five clerks, a clerk for each We are told by the officers of the District of Columbia that crime in the District is greatly decreasing by reason of the prohibition law. If that is the case, the court business must decrease, and I think it will decrease all of the time as the years go by if the law is properly enforced. I think they will have an opportunity in the Senate to make whatever showing they desire for this necessity, and I insist upon the point of They are new positions, unauthorized by law in a deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. GOOD. They are authorized by law. The only trouble is that they are authorized by law after the last appropriation act was passed.

Mr. BLANTON. They are new positions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa contend that these positions were provided for in the act increasing the jurisdiction of the court?

Mr. GOOD. I think the positions are created by law, but I am not sure that the title of our bill is broad enough to take them in

Mr. BLANTON. This is a deficiency bill for deficiencies in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an item for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and it is clearly subject to the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

FEDERAL BOARD FOR VOCATIONAL EDUCATION.

Vocational rehabilitation: For an additional amount for carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to provide for the vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States, and for other purposes," approved June 27, 1918, as amended, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $15,000,000.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. There have been many suggestions in the newspapers and elsewhere that there has been neglect of our disabled soldiers. Some of those charges go to hospitals and some of them go to the rehabilitation work. I asked the Chief of the Rehabilitation Service to give me a statement of the amount of this work up to date. He gave it to me as late as April 1, and I think it is quite a remarkable showing. Those eligible for section training, which is training with allowances, amount to 114,584 people. Those eligible for training in section 3, which has no pay allowance, amount to 80,075. As of April 1, 1921, the following numbers have entered training: Training for pay, 81,481; training without pay, 10,496; training under the Elks Fund, 89; making a total now in training of 92,066.

He makes this observation also, which I think is of value: On March 15, 3,123 men are reported as having completed training and 7,370 as having discontinued. Approximately 50 per cent of the latter have entered employment as the result of training, this in addition to the 3,123 definitely reported as rehabilitated or completed. I think the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations made a very pertinent remark in general debate when he spoke about the increased demand for appropriations because of a deficiency of from $15,000,000 to $30,000,000, as the closing down or slowing up of business has caused a great many persons who heretofore might be at work to seek the training because they were dissatisfied with the prospects without training. The figures show that the board is using about 2,000 schools and 8,000 plants and factories for the training of men. It also shows that up to March 1, 1921, the board had spent $89,521,414 since the passage of the rehabilitation act of June 17, 1918, two and a half years ago. Of this amount $68,000,000 has been spent in direct allowances for maintenance to the men themselves. The overhead for the entire time since the organization of the rehabilitation work, which includes rent, office equipment and supplies, salaries, printing, travel and subsistence of employees, telephone and telegraph, etc., was approximately 14 per cent. We thought when the Committee on Education last year made an investigation of the rehabilitation work that the overhead charge was too heavy. This overhead has not been reduced to less than 8 per cent in the month of March, 1921, during which month the total expenditures were $11,044,330, of which $8,250,000 went directly to the men themselves. Gentlemen of the committee, there is an immense amount of criticism, much of it psychologic, I think, because it is an easy matter for us at this time to criticize and find fault especially if it applies to the disabled-I am referring now to the newspapers throughout the country. I have looked over the work of other countries, and I give it to you as my honest judgment that a remarkable service has been rendered here in our country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FESS. One additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. I do not think that any country in the world has the record for rehabilitation work that this country has. While there may have been some falling down, as was in-evitable under the circumstances, this work is still under the organization that was established at the beginning, and, while it is coming into rather efficient service, all agree there must be a better coordination of the departments dealing with the problem. However, I do not think there is going to be much more complaint of the rehabilitation work. thought that it was due to Members of the House to make this statement. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma motion merely for the purpose of answering one statement of the gentleman. He thinks that the board has reached a pretty good state of efficiency. Yet complaints are still coming that the men themselves can not get a reply from the board until they appeal to their Representative or Senator. is one board, generally speaking, that the Congress has given practically every single cent that it has demanded. Generally speaking, the Committee on Appropriations has never turned down this board in its financial requests, and it does seem to me that the men over the country themselves should be able to get a reply to their letters. Their letters should not stay down here in this office of the board for a week or two weeks or three weeks or even a month unanswered until the man finally gets the ear of his Representative or Senator. We can send a letter down there and get an answer back in two or three days. If they can answer our letter so promptly why can not they answer the letters of the men? I think this board ought to be checked up on this subject and given to understand that a letter from an ex-soldier somewhere in the country asking for something that the country owes him, something that the Congress is willing to give him through this board-that it should understand that that letter is entitled to just as much recognition and just as prompt an answer as a letter from a Congressman or from a Senator.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I will.

Mr. FESS. I have heard complaints of the War Risk Insurance not answering letters expeditiously, but is the gentleman sure that the Federal board is subject to that complaint?

Mr. BLANTON. If the distinguished educator from Ohio will go over to his office and ask his secretary about it he will find out that in his office, likely, complaints have come from men in Ohio to the effect that they can not get a reply, and he will likely find out that his secretary has been down there raking this board over and making them do its duty in answering such

Mr. FESS. My friend is very gratuitous about something that has never occurred in my office.

Mr. BLANTON. It has occurred in my office, and I am sure it has occurred in other offices of this country. Letters from the ex-service men sometimes take two or three weeks to be answered, and men all over this country apply to us before they get action by this board.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $3,750 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for salaries of commissioners for the fiscal year 1921 is made available for the payment of difference in compensation between the rates of $7,500 and $12,000 per annum to such commissioners as were in office June 5, 1920, if otherwise entitled thereto.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking one question of the chairman about these items. Why do they occur, these three paragraphs?

Mr. GOOD. That is because the salary of the members of the Shipping Board was increased from $7,500 to $12,000, and there was no appropriation.

Mr. BEGG. Is it not a back appropriation, it is just from the time of the increase?

Mr. GOOD. Just from the time the increase applies.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $10,500 of the unexpended balance of the appropriation for salaries of commissioners for the fiscal year 1921 is made available for the payment of compensation to the entire board of seven members created under the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, at the rate of $12,000 per annum.

Mr. GOOD and Mr. HARDY of Texas rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] is recognized.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Good: On page 14, line 18, after the word "annum" insert a comma and "and also for the compensation of William S. Benson as agent of the President, at the rate of $12,000 per annum, from March 4, 1921, to the date of the termination of his services as such agent."

Mr. GOOD. There is no board at the present time. At the time he was a member of the board he received $12,000 a year. He received no salary as admiral, but from March 4 up to the present time he has been the agent of the President in the transaction of the business, and ought to draw his salary.

Mr. BLANTON. And he draws no other pay? Mr. GOOD. Nothing except his retired pay.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman states that he drew his retired pay in addition to this salary?

Mr. GOOD. He has always drawn that.

Mr. BLANTON. During the time he has drawn his salary as commissioner?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. So far as I know, there is no law in the United States that takes from an officer of the Army or the Navy any portion of his retired pay if, perchance, he is given some other position the salary of which is fixed by law.

Mr. BLANTON. I did not so understand the law to do that.

Mr. GOOD. The comptroller has so ruled.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. It has been suggested that that applies only to positions confirmed by the Senate. It is only to those positions that it applies.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask permission to proceed for 10 minutes. I do not know that I will take it all, but I do not expect to have anything further to say in reference to this bill. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I was agreeably struck with the moderate tone of the chairman of this committee in the beginning of his address, but frankly it seemed to me that when he began to discuss the Shipping Board he lost that moderation and that some of his criticisms seemed unjust and unfair and not borne out by the facts, as I happen to know some of them.

A good deal of criticism was directed at the Shipping Board because its personnel had been changed very frequently, and I myself am willing to admit that that was an unfortunate fact, but those who are posted on the occurrences and facts and occasions which arose and produced friction between officials of the Shipping Board (the first being between Gen. Goethals and Mr. Denman) know that change in personnel was largely, if not wholly, unavoidable. The public press began to bespatter both men with their criticisms, and the President, I think, in all wisdom, wrote a polite, cordial letter to both of them, asking them to resign, which they did. I wish to say, while not acquainted with Gen. Goethals, I was acquainted with Mr. Denman, and he was a thoroughgoing, brilliant executive of great ability, a gentleman of honor, high personal character, and courage. He and Gen. Goethals differed. They both resigned. I wish I had time to go further into the differences between them, but I shall not undertake it.

Following Mr. Denman as chairman, I believe came Mr. Hurley. Mr. Hurley was perhaps not a systematic man. I ought not to criticize him, but that is as it seemed to me. But he was the man for the day and the hour, who stirred things up and began and continued the building of ships, possibly with no little of waste. Certainly not with the economy a man would extects if he had time to weigh carefully all his measures, but we needed ships. Mr. Hurley then resigned, without a stigma upon him. This was after his great work of building had been largely completed. Then the President had to appoint a chairman, and his choice fell upon Mr. J. Barton Payne. I think every member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, before whom he appeared, when he related the story of his administration, was willing to say that he was the right man for the place, and would say it to-day. I do not believe a stronger executive or administrator ever took charge of a bureau of the Government than John Barton Payne.

It may be that in promoting Mr. Payne to a place in the Cabinet the President, from the standpoint of the Shipping Board interest, made a mistake, but I do not believe so. been counsel for the Railroad Administration; he had been instrumental in bringing order and system into the affairs of the Shipping Board and our vast shipping administration. administration seemed to be functioning well. I say this because I attended several of the meetings of the Shipping Board and their numerous heads of departments. Besides the members of the board, there were some 8 to 12 heads of departments, and all of these in their weekly meetings made full reports to the Shipping Board, with Mr. Payne presiding. As far as a layman could see, every interest of our Government shipping seemed to be carefully looked after and cared for by efficient men. It must be remembered also that other members of the Shipping Board, some of whom had been with the Shipping Board from the beginning, remained on the board. So that while it is easy to criticize the President for transferring Mr. Payne, any fair-minded man who knows all the facts must say that no real harm came to our shipping interests by the change, Mr. Redfield had resigned from the position of Secretary of Commerce, and the President believed that Mr. Payne was good material to fill his place, and believed that in Admiral Benson he could appoint a fit successor to Mr. Payne as chairman of the Shipping Board. I am not specially acquainted with Admiral Benson, but I know those who are, and who all speak of him in the highest terms, and any man who will study his statements before committees of Congress when called on by them to testify about shipping matters will believe him to be a man of splendid ability and well fitted for the place to which he was appointed. But it seems to me that it does not lie in the mouths of Republicans to criticize Admiral Benson or any of the present members of the Shipping Board.

I say this because last Congress passed a new shipping act providing for doing away with the old board and creating a new board, having more members and, I believe, higher salaries. Mr. Wilson nominated and sent to the Senate the names of his appointees for the new Shipping Board. The Republican Senate held up these appointments, thus continuing the present chairman and members of the Shipping Board and the various heads of the departments and officers acting under them. understand it, Admiral Benson is not now the legal chairman of the Shipping Board, but this bill provided for his pay as agent of the President in charge of Shipping Board affairs. seems strange to me that the Republican President should retain Admiral Benson, for nearly three months now, if he was not thoroughly competent, since he could have replaced him by an abler or better man. The gentleman from Iowa and other Republican leaders have been criticizing the Shipping Board Mr. Harding has had ever since his election in for a year. November, 1920, to find suitable men for chairman and members of the Shipping Board, and yet he has not named them. Criticism is cheap and easy-the selection of better officials and a better administration of Shipping Board affairs is difficult.

Now, the big criticism is directed at the Shipping Board for not selling our ships. Let me tell you gentlemen something. The Republican Party came into power in House and Senate in 1918, and almost immediately afterwards we began winding up of the affairs of the war. Under the original shipping act, which created a revolving fund of some $50,000,000, we had the right to build and buy and sell ships. The Shipping Board had authority to sell the ships they had. And when Congress met in May after the election in 1918 one of the first questions presented to us was presented by the Shipping Board, as I re-

Mr. Payne came to us I think in 1919 or early in 1920 and said, "Gentlemen, I am not in favor of Government operation of ships. I want to sell them, but I do not want to make a slaughter sale. I want to sell them at the world market price or what I can get for them, not below a reasonable price." he was in the same shape as many other men in public life, of being damned if he did and damned if he did not, and he asked us to declare and prescribe a policy of the Government in reference to the operating, leasing, or selling of these ships. So the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] a moment ago was strictly in order when he said if there was any fault in the failure to sell these ships it was the fault of Congress and not of the executive officer. I think all of us agreed with Mr. Payne in his general statement and with his views and ideas, He said, "My idea is, first, to sell the ships if I can find an American purchaser who will give a reasonable price. But I do not believe we ought to give them away." And propaganda was spreading over the country at that time on both sides. some to depress the price of ships and cause them to be sold for a song, and others going to the other extreme and urging the Government to not sell them at all but operate them itself. Mr. Payne stood between the two. He wanted to sell them and have them operated by private owners or operators, but he wanted to get what they were worth. He wanted them privately operated and not operated by the Government, but on terms fair to the Government, and when we passed the law of June 5, 1920, we declared the Government policy. Congress did not pass this act till the date named, although our committee, as I remember it, passed a similar law through the House the session before, which went to the Senate and got hung up. read you the section as to sale of ships passed by a Republican Congress

Here is what we said:

Here is what we said:

That in order to accomplish the declared purposes of this act and to carry out the policy declared in section 1 hereof, the board is authorized and directed to sell, as soon as practicable consistent with good business methods and the objects and purposes to be attained by this act, at public or private competitive sale after appraisement and due advertisement, to persons who are citizens of the United States except as provided in section 6 of this act, all of the vessels referred to in section 4 of this act or otherwise acquired by the board. (This included all merchant ships owned.) Such sale shall be made at such prices and on such terms and conditions as the board may prescribe, but the completion of the payment of the purchase price and interest shall not be deferred more than 15 years after the making of the contract of sale. The board in fixing or accepting the sale price of such vessels shall take into consideration the prevailing domestic and foreign market price of the available supply of and the demand for vessels, existing freight rates and prospects of maintenance, the cost of constructing vessels of similar types under prevailing conditions, as well as the cost of the construction or purchase price of the vessels to be sold, and any other facts or conditions that would influence a prudent, solvent business, man in the sale of similar vessels or property which he is not forced to sell. All sales made under the authority of this act shall be subject to the limitations and restrictions of section 9 of the "Shipping act, 1916," as amended.

No well-informed man can truthfully say that the Shipping act, 1916," as amended.

No well-informed man can truthfully say that the Shipping Board has not earnestly endeavored to sell our ships ever since the passage of that law under the restrictions provided by it.

We passed this law at the urgent request of the Shipping Board, to declare the policy of the Government, and the law was approved by the President as soon as it was presented to him. And no man can justly say that the board has not endeavored to carry it out. But they failed to sell the ships. Why? Mr. Payne came before us and, among other things, he testified that the offers of purchase of these ships were so few and small in tonnage that he regretted to tell us about it. My recollection is that he said one purchaser had offered to buy three or four big, good ships, the International Mercantile Marine, of which P. A. S. Franklin is the manager; but altogether he did not have offers to buy at any price shipping that amounted to 5 per cent of our tonnage. He was trying to dispose of it. I do not know what luck his successor has had in selling, but he will tell you he has done his best, and I believe him.

Gentlemen, it is easy to criticize and say, "You should have sold," or "You ought to have sold"; but we know this condi-

Here was the propaganda to depress or to boost the price of Here were prospective shipowners, on the one hand, who thought they could drive down the price of ships so as to get them for almost nothing, while on the other hand there was a propaganda to demand a high price for the ships. There was even an injunction brought to prevent the sale of two or three big ships by the Shipping Board, and the injunction was sustained. I myself do not think the ships should have been sold except at a reasonable price. But the Shipping Board, during those seasons of stress and trial, did just as most of us have done. They did their best, and the citizen who criticizes them to-day, if he had had their place at that time, would have done no better. In all fairness perhaps I ought to say that private shipowners were not without some reason for refusing to buy these ships. Loud-mouthed propagandists were declaring that American ships could not be successfully operated in competition with the world under our laws. Competition had driven our ships from the sea a few years before. Perhaps it was natural that private capital, not understanding the real reason why our shipping was driven from the sea, should hesitate to venture into an effort to rebuild our mer-There was some reason for believing that the chant marine. Government alone was strong enough to reinstate us on the seas and firmly establish our lines of foreign trade, which was the declared policy of the act of 1920.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If the previous members of the Shipping Board were so derelict in not selling these vessels, as they should have sold them, and especially in view of the fact that they have been practically without a policy since March 4, would it not have been very wise for the new administration to have appointed and confirmed a new Shipping Board at once and not have waited for three months without having done anything in that regard?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. That is absolutely true. But the President of the United States is not the man who is criticizing, and he is not the man who would criticize, the Shipping Board for failing to do what was impossible. He was in the Senate when the act of 1920 was passed, and he knows the conditions that existed. Doubtless he heard the testimony of Mr.

Payne.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will my colleague yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not also true that all during the Sixty-sixth Congress the distinguished chairman had 47 majority in his party, and he could have carried through any policy he saw fit?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Yes. The party now in control of all the branches of the Government was in control of the legislative branch of the Government at that time, and they had the right to declare the policy of the Government. If they wanted to sell the ships, or if they wanted to give them away to the operators, they had the right to pass that law. After long delay they did pass a law declaring the policy of the Government and the President approved the law. The law that was passed has been lived up to. It was a right law.

Now, the man who has been in charge of the operation of the ships, in 1920 declared that he believed that we would make a profit out of the ships. They did make a profit out of the ships for a time, but we are not making a profit now. The railroads are not operating now at a profit. When we realize the vast amount of shipping we have now and the small amount of freight we know that if all our ships were privately owned they could not be operated at a profit under the present conditions, seamen's law or no seamen's law, and I want to say in passing that that seamen's law is here to stay. Every possible charge has been made against the conduct of the Shipping Board, and yet I say that when you examine the conditions under which they labored you will find no cause of criticism and every rea-son for the belief that they have been loyal and devoted to their duty and excellent officials. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I might add a word or two more, but I fear I shall not have the time. It is not the seamen's law that has prevented them from operating at a profit, and the amendments of the seamen's law, which certain shipowners are seeking to pass, will not enable the ships to operate at a profit. The seamen's law has been taxed with every sin under the sun. They claim that law forces them to pay higher wages, employ more men and greater equipment than any of their foreign competitors. One provision which has been severely criticized is that which quires that 75 per cent of the crew shall be able to understand orders given by the officers of the ship. One great ship operator a few years ago declared that he was forced to sell his ships by this language test, because under it he could not continue to use his Chinese crews. It so happened that he had himself testified before our committee that his Chinese crews did understand their officers' orders. Another man comes in and says that under the seamen's law you require too many men in the crew. Still another says you must have 60 per cent of the deck crew able seamen, and that is too much efficiency.

That may be true, but I do not believe it.

When you take into consideration the practical conditions that obtained at sea before that law was enacted, where one ship ran into an iceberg and nearly all the passengers drowned, where another ship sinks at the wharf and all hands perish, and another ships burns in a river and a picnic crowd dle, either because of a lack of life-saving apparatus or because of lack of efficient men, it is no wonder that Congress acted and passed the seamen's act and in that seamen's act declared that a ship must not only have men 75 per cent of whom understand the orders of officers but that of those men 60 per cent of those who were in the deck department and navigated the ship should be efficient men in the management of ships, and the American people are going to demand that seamen shipping on the high seas under the American flag shall not be so ignorant of our tongue that they can not understand the orders of the commanding officer when he commands them to right the ship or so unskilled they can not safely navigate the ship or handle life-saving equipment in case of catastrophe. They are going to require that a certain percentage of the seamen on American ships shall be able to handle lifeboats and navigate the ship properly; and I want to say to you that it is not the efficiency requirements of the law or the cost of labor that is at present preventing the profitable operation of our Shipping Board ships. Before you can run ships profitably on the sea you must provide cargoes for them to carry.

We must provide agents and use business methods and enterprise so as to get cargoes. If you will give me a ship that runs full laden from New York to Liverpool and comes back full laden, it can pay the American standard rate of wages and make successful and profitable voyages. But let me go to Liverpool or to London half laden and come back with no cargo at all, and no kind of legislation will enable me to cross the ocean profitably. We could not do it if we paid no wages at all. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I hold no brief for seamen. I have no feeling against shipowners. I am earnestly anxious to see the American flag sail all the seas. I know that the privilege of navigating ships with small or unskilled crews will not keep our flag there. A great deal has been said about the great labor cost of operating American ships under our laws. The unversed will be astounded perhaps to learn, first, that of the total cost of operating an American ship labor amounts to only 10 per cent. But let me quote the testimony of Admiral Benson before the Subcommittee on Appropriations, May 9, 1921, page 543 et seq.:

* * While freights were high there was no difficulty in meeting the expenses of the Emergency Fleet Corporation, but early in 1920 it was quite evident that the rates would fall considerably, and in July they began to fall very rapidly. The situation was hastened by the action of our foreign competitors in cutting rates. The board took every possible means to meet this situation, keep up the rates as well as we could, until it became quite evident that action would have to be taken to meet the cuts that were being made in certain trade routes particularly. This was done and then the general world situation produced a condition where the cargoes were reduced to almost nothing. Very little of our cotton, grain, and coal was going out of the country.

The competition became very keen. We kept the various trade atmost nothing. Very little of our cotton, grain, and coal was going out of the country.

The competition became very keen. We kept the various trade routes supplied with ships, and as fast as it was discovered on any particular route that we were losing money the number of vessels operating was reduced accordingly, and in making the reductions we took out the type of ship that was least efficient and laid it up. Instead of putting them at docks and paying wharfage, we put into operation the plan of mooring the ships in bunches in southern streams, particularly in Virginian waters, where the ice is not so bad in winter, and putting a small number of men to look out for a whole bunch of ships, thereby avoiding the wharfage dues and also reducing the number of personnel. As a sample, particularly in the wooden ships, they were at one time costing on an average of about $2,500 a month. From the last report I got they were costing us about $91 a month. They are down here now tied up in the James River about 35 or 40 miles above Newport News. I feel we have almost reduced that expense to a minimum, although I still hope to cut it down somewhat. Steel vessels are being handled on the same general principle, except that necessarily we are keeping enough of them in the various principal ports to meet any situation which may arise.

This quotation, I think, sufficiently shows the handicap under

This quotation, I think, sufficiently shows the handicap under which our present great shipping tonnage is laboring. The admiral says further, on page 551 of the hearings:

There is a little mistaken idea there, I think; or, rather, I think that the question of wages is always a little exaggerated, because under any system it is not much over 10 per cent of the total cost of operation. I feel that we have got to get Americans on our ships and build up our efficiency. I think that we have too many men on some of our ships, and I think that our laws ought to be modified to that extent. The real evil I am afraid of is this, that pretty soon shipowners will refuse to sign any Americans, and we know that there are hundreds of thousands of men drifting around on the beach who are able to work, and they will take on those foreigners at a very much lower price, and that will seriously interfere with our getting a full American personnel on board our ships. That is something that we are working toward very earnestly, and recently many of our ships have gone out with 100 per cent American crews on board. We will have to reduce the pay, but I am not in favor of too great a reduction now. I believe that our men ought to have good quarters on board the ships and that they ought to give good work.

I would not put it exactly on the basis of foreign competition, but I would put it more on the basis of the actual living relations. I believe that we can deal with our merchant marine on that basis, and I believe that we can build it up on that basis so that it will be ready as a naval reserve or as a military auxiliary, as provided for in the premible of the bill, and that it will be in a position to compete in any way we want as a commercial fleet.

We observe several things from the tables. The number of American crew is 48, the British 45, the Japanese 59, and the Norwegian 40. But you may note that the deck department, which navigates the ship, has in American ships 16, the British 18, the Japanese 21, and the Norwegian 17. In the steward's department United States ships have 8, British have 6, Japanese have 6, and Norwegian have 3. These have nothing to do with navigating the ship, nor is their number prescribed by law. In the engine room America has 24, British 21, Japanese 32, and Norwegian 20. The seaman's law did require in some instances an increase in the engine department, and we did it advisedly, because we believed that to permit a shipowner to require more than eight hours per day of labor in hot firerooms was inhuman, and many witnesses testified with very little contradiction .o cruel conditions arising from long hours on some American ships. The seamen's law prescribes 3 watches, or 8 hours' labor out of 24 in firerooms or engine rooms. The aggregate labor out of 24 in firerooms or engine rooms. The aggregate labor costs in American, British, Japanese, and Norwegian ships are, respectively, $5,315, $3,924, $2,869, $3,378.

I want to analyze this further. It is perfectly clear that the difference in wage cost of $1,391 between American and British labor cost can not make one prosper and the other perish. Else how can the British ship compete with the Japanese and the Norwegian? It is clear that England prospers above all nations on the sea for other reasons than cheap or inefficient You note that she has more able seamen than any other nation and pays more wages than any nation except America. What makes England thrive on the sea is her seamanship, superiority, and her system of business management in securing trade and cargo, and if America ever wins on the sea it will be by precisely the same superiority. Before 1914 American ships in competition labored under one handicap that was absolutely insuperable—that was the 50 per cent more that our ships cost than the ships of our competitors. That handicap is now gone, because our Government has the ships and is ready and anxious to sell them to our merchants at no more than the British going price of ships. If American business men and American shipowners have the will to win on the sea and business sense equal to the British they can win.

They have many advantages. Under our coastwise laws, foreign ships being excluded from carrying freight or passengers from one United States port to another United States port, they must frequently, and at great expense, go empty, say, from New York to Galveston. This advantage alone will more than balance any difference in favor of the foreign ship in operating expenses, if there is any such difference. Again, many of our ships are oil burners, and on that account require fewer men in their crews than their coal-burning competitors. An oil burner requires at least one-third less crew and has at least 20 per cent more cargo space than a coal burner of the same tonnage. Then our ships being all new ought to have more up-todate equipment and loading and unloading devices, and ought to make a quicker voyage and turn around. Then the volume of our freight is greater than that of any other country, and that ought to give our ships an advantage.

It is claimed, perhaps with truth, that lack of marine insurance facilities in America on account of burdensome tax laws has operated against our shipping in favor of the British. If this is true, it ought to be remedied. The Merchant Marine Committee is working on a law to remedy this. It ought to be passed—the quicker the better. With this done, it is up to our American business men whether, with more than equal opportunity, our American merchant marine will live or die.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, it is indeed strange to have a discussion here in which the statement is made that in pursuance to a law that was enacted back in 1917 the failure to sell these ships is due to a Republican Congress. Nothing could be farther from the truth.

At the very outset, when Congress enacted the law to acquire the ships, the policy was laid down with regard to their operation and disposal. A Democratic Congress wrote the law and the act of June 15, 1917, after providing for the construction of these ships, at the time when we were in war, reads:

All ships constructed, purchased, or requisitioned under authority herein, or heretofore, or hereafter acquired by the United States shall be managed, operated, and disposed of as the President may direct.

Not as Congress shall direct, but you gave the whole policy of acquiring the ships, of the building of a merchant marine, and the disposition of the ships, not into the hands of Congress, but into the hands of the President of the United States, and whatever policy was pursued in the acquisition of the ships or in the failure to sell the ships was due not to Congress but due to the failure of the President of the United States. Our failure, therefore, to have a policy to dispose of these ships was due to President Wilson.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I did not interrupt the gentleman, and I am going to talk only five minutes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If the gentleman does not wish it, I will not interrupt him.

Mr. GOOD. Now, with regard to the operation of the ships, we went into that matter somewhat, and we found that the latest information with regard to the operation of ships was given by taking a crew list and the monthly wages on selected American, British, Norwegian, and Japanese vessels in the summer of 1919, and a single-screw, coal-burning cargo ship, Atlantic and Gulf Coast, 8,800 tons dead-weight, class C, was taken as the type.

For the American vessel there were 48 in the crew, with a monthly wage scale of $5,513.

The British ship had 45 in her crew, with a monthly wage scale of $3,924.

The Japanese ship had 59 in her crew, with a monthly wage

The Norwegian ship had a crew of 40, with a monthly wage scale of $3,378.

The United States monthly wage scale was $5,513, and the British was next, with a monthly wage scale of $3,924, or almost $1,500 a month more for the wages of the crew of the American vessel, while the Japanese operating expense was only about one-half of the American cost.

Now, I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] that the difficulty is we must have the cargoes first; but having the cargoes, I am sure if we are to place a merchant marine that is to be maintained upon the high seas, and if it is to be a merchant marine in which we will take pride, we must be able to furnish that merchant marine to the American operators at somewhere near the cost per dead-weight ton that our competitors are able to buy their ships. And with our competitors to-day being able to buy ships in Great Britain for less than $75 per ton, any American would be a fit subject for an insane asylum who would attempt to buy ships for $165 a ton, the program fixed by the President of the United States, and even as high as $220 a ton, and attempt to run those vessels in competition with that kind of capital cost and also with that kind of operating cost.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the clerk will read.

The clerk read as follows:

Not to exceed $17,000 of the unexpired balance of the appropriation for salaries of commissioners for the fiscal year 1921 is made available, and in addition thereto the sum of $3,633.33 is appropriated, for payment of salaries of the following commissioners at the rate of $12,000 per annum for the period while acting as such commissioners, notwithstanding their nominations were not confirmed by the Senate: William S. Benson, Frederick I. Thompson, John A. Donald, Joseph N. Teal. Guy D. Goff, Charles Sutter, Chester H. Rowell.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to inflict myself on the committee, but I must reply to the attack of the gentleman from Iowa on ex-President Wilson. I do not think it is right, it is not fair, it is not true to say that the President ordered these ships to be sold for $165 a ton. The President never opened his mouth on that subject. We investigated this thing during 1919 and 1920.

Mr. GOOD. I am talking about the time after the armistice was signed when Congress did act.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The gentleman is talking about a time about which I do not think he knows anything as a matter of fact, because Mr. Payne was before us asking us to declare a policy, and the President was not trying to fix the price of these ships at all, and never did try to fix it. We all know that powers placed in the hands of the President had to be executed by proper agents. The Shipping Board was the proper agent to handle our shipping and ships. Mr. Payne was wanting to sell them, and he wanted to know how and at what price and on which terms he ought to sell them.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. In just one moment. The gentleman did not yield to me a moment ago, but I want to yield to him if I can. Acting through Mr. Payne, the President wanted the price fixed, he wanted the time fixed, he wanted the credit fixed. Mr. Payne very properly came to Congress and asked for a law declaring the policy of the Government in these regards. He wanted a law under which to sell these ships, and the Republican Congress had the power to fix the price, the time, the credit, and everything that they thought ought to be fixed. The Republican Congress was elected in November, 1918, before the armistice. They were called together by the President in May. 1919, in order to pass laws necessary to meet the postwar conditions. They did not pass any law declaring our policy until June, 1920, as to sale of ships. Since that time the Shipping Board has tried to carry it out. If anybody is to be blamed for our having the ships on hand, it is the Republican Congress; but in my judgment nobody is to blame for the existing conditions and the impossibility of finding purchasers. Of course, you could not sell the ships now for what you could have sold some of them in 1920.

The Shipping Board was not permitted to sell except to American citizens, and they were ordered practically to sell at the world market price, so as to put our shipowners on an equal footing with the other shipowners of the world, and to-day they have authority to sell at the world market price, but buyers will not buy. Mr. Payne came before us and we asked him, "What is England selling for? What are her shipbuilders contracting for?" and all those things were taken into consideration, when we passed this law and all this criticism is unfair. It is especially unfair to say that the President declared a policy under which they could not sell the ships. That is not true, gentlemen. Now, if the gentleman from Iowa wishes me to yield to him-

Mr. GOOD. I will take some time in my own right. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the armistice was signed on November 11, 1918. At that time the only statute upon the books with regard to the sale of these ships provided that the President should provide for the disposition of them. In those days Mr. Hurley was coming before the Committee on Appropriations for shipping estimates. He was chairman of the Shipping Board. He did not have behind him a board of men that were united on a policy for the sale of these ships. were gentlemen on that board appointed by the President who did not want to sell the ships at all. They wanted the Government of the United States to engage in the operation of the ships and did not believe in their sale; and those who did want to sell the ships, aside from Mr. Hurley, wanted to sell them at around $200 a ton, being fearful that there might be some criticism if they sold the ships for less than they cost.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD.

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas. Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does the gentleman know when Mr. Payne was appointed chairman of the Shipping Board?

Mr. GOOD. I can not give the gentleman the exact date. Mr. Payne never came before the Committee on Appropriations while he was chairman of the board.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I think it was in 1918, and I simply give you, I think I can say, the word of every member of the committee that he came before us and asked us to declare a

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Payne never appeared before the Committee on Appropriations on behalf of the board during the Sixty-sixth

Congress

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Payne was not appointed to the Shipping Board until after the beginning of the Sixty-sixth Congress

Mr. HARDY of Texas. When was that? Mr. CHINDBLOM. In the summer of 1919.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. In the spring of 1919. That was when it was.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Payne was not there long enough to formulate a policy, though he did some very good work, as has Admiral Benson and other chairmen. Mr. Hurley never had behind him a Shipping Board who wanted to sell the ships at all unless they could get some unreasonable price for them, and that is what I complain about.

Mr. Payne I have a very high regard for, and my only criticism has been that the President never left any man at the head of the organization long enough for him to become familiar with the duties of the office. About the time that he became familiar with the duties he was moved on, and John Barton Payne only remained there a short time. He was Secretary the Interior for almost two years. He was the Director General of the Railroads, and so on. The trouble has been that we never of the Railroads, and so on. The trouble has been that we never had a policy, and from 1918 until March 4, 1921, the act which gave the President the power to sell these ships was on the statute books. Since March 4 the President has had a big problem on his hands in trying to select a Shipping Board allotted to various sections of the country, as I think the law very unwisely allots them.

Now, whatever may be the policy in the future it can never be anything like as bad as it has been in the past. I sincerely hope that the President will be fortunate enough in filling these positions to find men of such commanding ability that they will bring order out of confusion in the Shipping Board, No one has ever been able to come before the Appropriations Committee and tell us what the situation was in regard to their finances. Why, when we had the sundry civil bill before us, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] was asking if the conditions had changed, and at that very time the Shipping Board had a claim against the War Department for $200,000,000. They never could make out their voucher for the claim, and finally, rather than have the large appropriation of five or ten million dollars for auditing claims between the War Department and the Shipping Board, they did what I think was very wise, they settled this balance after that for something like $67,000,000. Now, we know something about the claims of the Shipping Board that are outstanding, and we know that they are not making any money out of operation as they claimed they were making. We know that they are losing money at the rate of $5,000,000 a month instead of making money at the rate of $5,000,000 a month. All these things brought about a change that makes it necessary to make the direct appropriation at this

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I am very fond of history, more of ancient than modern because generally you can assert your own theory about ancient history, and nobody can dispute you except the man who has no more information than you have. For that reason I have been kept awake this afternoon by the discussions of the alleged past mistakes of the Shipping Board. I am one who is interested in the present and future of our merchant marine and not interested in the dead past, so I have listened closely to see if some one would tell us the present policy of those in charge of our ships. I have asked for this information often, but no one has been able to give me a reply. If any gentleman will rise and tell me I shall be glad.

Mr. GOOD. I think the gentleman will have to ask Admiral Benson.

Mr. WINGO. I remember quite distinctly that during the last administration I listened with a good deal of sympathetic interest to the repeated criticisms of our former President in having unauthorized "personal agents" and "personal representatives," and as one who is very sympathetic with the present President, appreciating the problems that confront him, I have regretted his following the footsteps of his predecessor in having recourse to "personal representatives" and "personal agents" whom nobody is responsible for, and even his own party can not tell what the policy of the personal agent or personal representative is. Can the gentleman tell me what the policy of the personal agent of the President is?

Mr. GOOD. Does the gentleman mean with reference to the Shipping Board?

Mr. WINGO. That is what I am talking about.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, I think before very long—

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman give me the present policy?

Mr. GOOD. Here is a matter involving $3,000,000, and the gentleman asks me a question, and before I can get three words out of my mouth he interrupts.

Mr. WINGO. I want to know the present policy, now.

Mr. GOOD. I can tell the gentleman that we are going to substitute a business policy for the lack of business policy of the Democratic administration. We are going to put men in the positions and keep them there where they can prove their worth and not send them to other places. It is going to unravel-

Mr. WINGO. I decline to yield further, Mr. Chairman, Mr. GOOD. Then the gentleman does not want any information.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman has not given me any information, and although I confess that the gentleman may have the advantage of me so far as knowledge of administration policies I have intelligence enough to know the difference between information and declamation, and the gentleman is giving us declamation. [Laughter.] He says, "In the future we are go-ing to put in business methods." In the name of common sense, when is this administration going to commence to function? Why stand here day after day and say that some time in the sweet future, at an indefinite date, you are going to appoint a duly constituted legal board and they are going to put in a business administration? That is the answer that you give after you have been in control of legislation for two years. I have not criticized this administration, I have publicly said, "Give it a chance." But when I ask you to tell me what is its policy at the present time you regale us with declamation about what you are going to do in the sweet bye and bye. What is the matter? Oh, the echoes have hardly died away in this Chamber when during the last administration you gentlemen denounced us because we heard the master's voice in the White House. Now you sit here as silent as the tomb of Cæsars waiting for orders and you have not a single idea and you have no idea what they will be; you have no hope even of the future that you dare express in an audible tone because you are waiting for the master's voice. Gentlemen never heard me defend a bad policy when the Democrats were in power.

Mr. GOOD. We never heard the gentleman offer any criti-

Mr. WINGO. Oh, yes; if the gentleman had been on the floor he would have heard me criticize them severely in some instances. I voted to pass more bills over the President's veto by one than did the gentleman from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Iowa is going out of Con-Before he goes I hope he will use his influence to help the President of the United States out of what most evidently is some kind of a dilemma which is holding up this Shipping Board situation. I do not know what it is. I hope to God it is not petty politics, which seems to be the chief concern of those in control. I hope it is an unfortunate failure to get good men to take the place, as claimed. If so, then the President is not to blame. But here the shipping of the world is slipping away from us, and we are sitting still, doing nothing, waiting, waiting, waiting, and nobody can tell us what the policy is or whither we are drifting. You simply say that we are on our way, we do not know where, but that we are going to get there sometime. Gentlemen, pick up and go to work. The election is over and the war is over. Quit talking about the past. The big problem is the present, and gentlemen should face that problem with courage, and if you do you will be entitled to the credit that goes with duty well done; but you can not forever sustain yourselves on what you claim to be the bad reputation of those who preceded you, and who were not as competent as you hope to be, when the only thing you do at the present time is follow what you say were the mistakes of your predecessors. [Applause on Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Toward the completion of vessels now under construction, $36,852,000.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Good: Page 15, line 6, after the figures "$36,852,000," insert: "Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for any authorized expenditure of the United States Shipping Board, Emergency Fleet Corporation, in an amount not to exceed the sum expended by such corporation from April 1, 1921, to the date of the approval of this act, on account of vessels under construction during that period."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, at the time we had the hearings the Shipping Board had $26,000,000 of cash and they had anticipated receipts for the rest of this year $18,000,000, making $44,000,000 cash available for this year. Since that time it has been necessary for the Shipping Board to continue to make weekly payments on construction of ships, and it was the intention of the committee in giving $36,000,000 for the remainder of the year to have them use that fund for construction after April 1, but the wording of the provision would only permit them to use it after the act became available. They have paid out some ten or twelve million dollars already on construction, and this amendment will enable them to replace that which they paid out for construction only out of the appropriation.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, in response to the inquiries that have been made by Members as to what will be the policy of the present administration with regard to our merchant marine, I think it well to call attention to the fact that although the present administration went into power 2 months and 17 days ago, at which time there was not only not a full Shipping Board, but not even a legally constituted board, because those who were appointed on the board by President Wilson had not been confirmed, with the exception of two members, and there was not a quorum, yet the only excuse that has been offered for the delay is that which has been stated in the press from time to time, namely, that the President is holding up the appointment of the entire board because he is endeavoring to persuade a certain man to accept the chairmanship of it. Who is this man? It is J. A. Farrell, the head of the United States Steel Corporation, one of the greatest monopolies and trusts in the world, if not the greatest, and the one concern that has been more interested in the sale of a commodity entering into the construction of our present merchant marine and in the sale of steel which would enter into future ship construction than any other concern on earth. Why is it that this man's qualifications are such that it is necessary to continue waiting for a longer period than 2 months and 17 days in an effort to persuade him to become the chairman of that Shipping Board, to deal with and dispose of our Government merchant marine, which cost the people $4,000,000,000? Is he the only man in the United States who is capable? Is he the only man in America who can be appointed to assume that position? What peculiarity is there about Mr. Farrell, and especially in the light of the position he holds and his environments and his interests, that impels this administration to continue awaiting his pleasure, and at the same time for Republican Members of this House to criticize the board, that has no authority at all, for not acting? [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. I am wondering why the gentleman should criticize Mr. Farrell, the head of the United States Steel Corporation, when the former President of the United States, Mr. Wilson, called Mr. Charles M. Schwab, the head of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, to the same position. Did the gentleman make the same criticism of Mr. Schwab and the administration at that time?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. In the first place, Mr. Schwab was called to that position when we were absolutely in a war emergency, and when every man was presumed to be patriotic enough to lay aside personal considerations, and, in the second place, President Wilson did not hold up the operation of that board for 2 months and 17 days in order to try to persuade Mr. Schwab to accept the appointment.

Mr. MADDEN. It was nearly a year after the Shipping Board was organized before they began to build any ships. They were fighting about the kind of ships that they should build and where they would get the material.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Then it was a question of organization, and getting action-

Mr. MADDEN. And they did not get it.
Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. No. I admit that the President made a mistake in appointing Mr. Schwab, although, in so doing, his motives were pure, because he could have had no ulterior motive in appointing a Republican. [Applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. Then why are you criticizing the motives of the present President of the United States?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. [Applause.]
Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa an amendment to strike out the section. I want to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Less than two years have elapsed since he appeared on the floor of the House and very eloquently and distinctly and emphatically told us that as long as he was chairman of this great Committee on Appropriations he was never going to bring in a bill providing a single dollar of appropriation more for the Shipping Board.

That was when he brought in the sundry civil bill less than two years ago. The gentleman does not deny that, does he?

I do not remember the words I used.

Mr. BLANTON. That is substantially what the gentleman I am one of those who believe in the doctrine that a wise man changes his mind but a fool never, and I am not saying that the chairman of the committee should not change his mind some time, but when he called attention at that time to the fact that the Shipping Board had expended about $3,500,000,000, with its enormous revolving fund that had been allowed it by Congress, and had access to the receipts of the enormous sums of money that it could take in which might run up into the several hundred millions of dollars of cash at any time, and that it did not have to turn a single dollar of that money back into the Treasury, but could use it and reuse it as a revolving fund as long as it wanted to, my distinguished colleague from South Carolina at that time got upon the floor and called attention to the fact that instead of limiting the Shipping Board to its receipts and of cutting off the appropriation the Congress should have this department come in before the Congress every year and account for every single dollar that it had received and expended, turning back into the Treasury all money received, and then whatever money it needed to carry on its business be appropriated. and then the Congress of the United States and the people could tell something about the number of millions of dollars that this Shipping Board was using.

The gentleman admitted that you could not tell anything The minority admitted that you could not tell about the books. anything about the books. It was practically the unanimous verdict of the Congress that you could not tell anything about the Shipping Board's books, but we did show here that they had spent over $500,000 a year for rent of buildings-just for rent to carry on the office work-over $500,000 a year for rent of buildings in the cities of Washington and Philadelphia!

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask for two minutes more.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the [After a pause.] The Chair hears gentleman from Texas?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it was the unanimous opinion of the committee and of the Congress that they should be able to tell something about their books, and my distinguished col-league from South Carolina called attention to the fact that there was only one way that we could force them to show Congress the exact condition of their business, and that was by making them turn back every single dollar of receipts into the Treasury and then make direct appropriations for their needs. I want to ask the chairman a question now, with the foregoing preamble: Has the chairman decided upon a policy yet about the Shipping Board? Is he going to require the Shipping Board to turn its receipts back into the Treasury and come to us for its money, so that we can tell something about its books and the business, or has he just changed his mind and come over to them because in a change of administration they become his Shipping Board? Has he adopted their mode of business? Here is an item of over $30,000,000, and in the next paragraph of this bill there is another item of appropriation for $25,000,000 more. What is the policy of the chairman? The country would like to know what is his policy with respect to this Shipping Board?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not recall what I said on the floor of the House in regard to the future policy of the com-I used pretty strong language. I felt then it was necessary to use strong language to try to force the Shipping Board to something like a business policy. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] and myself, I think, never had any question with reference to the information of the strong tentes. with reference to the inefficiency and the lack of business methods with which this board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation conducted its business. We had some differences in regard to how appropriations should be made. But I have been surprised to-day at the defense of this board-

Mr. BLANTON. I am not defending it.

Mr. GOOD. Here a short time ago we discovered that the Shipping Board had placed on file a resolution that absolutely prohibited a single contractor on ships from decreasing the wages of any employees engaged on those vessels. Here the price of commodities and living had been going down and down and here were employees whose salaries had been increased 300 per cent and they came before us a short time after President Wilson sent word over to the Railroad Wage Board at Chicago and directed them immediately to act and they acted and increased the wages of the railway employees that required $618,000,000 of the people's money, and here was the Shipping Board just before election passed a resolution that ship contractors should not decrease the wages of a single employee, no matter whether the contract was a cost plus or a flat contract. We had to use strong language then because we believed that it was absolutely necessary to try to get some one on this board to bring about some business policy.

Now, some criticism has been made of the President because he has not appointed a Shipping Board. I want to say to you when you look at this act which requires the President to select a couple of commissioners from the Pacific coast, a couple from the Atlantic coast, a couple from the interior, and then when you realize the fact that the President is trying to get $100,000 men to fill $12,000 places you will only begin to visualize the President's difficulties. I have great consideration for the President in this matter. I regret the delay in the appointment, but I believe we will soon have a board capable to do the task before it. Just as we are beginning to see, and the world is beginning to see, the effect of a great national foreign policy, and see how the world is pleased with it and how our own people are pleased with it, so I doubt not that we shall soon see a great American policy inaugurated by a new Shipping Board, and that American policy will be to place these ships in private ownership under the American flag and such conditions that they can compete with every competitor.

That, I think, will be the American policy, and must be based upon some such consideration. I believe you will see men on this board who will be able in a very businesslike way to effect that result. Criticism is made of Mr. Farrell, who has been picked by the press to head this organization. not know whom the President has in mind for this high and important place, but the gentleman who makes the criticism appears to be so ignorant of the actual facts that he does not know that Mr. Farrell will not be permitted under existing law to practically purchase a ton of steel. Yet such is the case. No new contracts are to be let for ships. all of the steel and the equipment already purchased. great problem of the Shipping Board will be to sell and dispose of these ships and to operate them until disposed of. During the war one of the men whose genius brought real order to the Emergency Fleet Corporation, a man who was able to turn out ships, was Charles M. Schwab. Another was Charles Mr. Schwab was the outstanding figure, and it was his wonderful genius that produced real ships for us. two men, above all others, were the men who accomplished real things in the production of ships. Their appointment by President Wilson was to his great credit. They were great officials. You will not find that Mr. Schwab in the discharge of his duties ever did a thing that was unfair or took an unjust advantage in favor of his company, and if the President is fortunate enough to secure the services of Mr. Farrell to head this board, he will and the country will be fortunate indeed, and it is indeed unfortunate that any criticism should be made here at this time that might embarrass the President, if he is attempting to bring to the service such a distinguished and able man as Mr. Farrell.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

There is a real amendment pending. The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman first let this matter be cleared up? Then he will be recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. My amendment was merely a pro forma one. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his amendment. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will again report, without objec-

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the completion of vessels now under construction, fiscal year 1922, $25,000,000.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not want to make a speech. I simply want to quote the language of the select committee appointed by the Republican majority in the last Congress to investigate the Shipping Board, and let its unanimous report confute and refute a great many things that have been said on the Republican side of the House to-day.

From page 24 of this report-I can not read it all-I want to read two little excerpts. The first is:

read two little excerpts. The first is:

It must be remembered that the Shipping Board, in dealing with the war emergency, was confronted with many difficulties. The program of construction, as well as operation, was gigantic. It involved an expenditure of more than three and a half billion dollars, a sum greater than any expended by any corporation in a similar period of time. Many of the officials and board members were without experience in either shipbuilding or operation. No adequate organization existed at the beginning. A complete organization to carry out its large program had to be created. There was a shortage of shipbuilding skill as well as shipbuilding facilities. The need for ships was imperative and constantly increased during the combat period.

Then, omitting several paragraphs, I read as follows:

Considering the program as a whole, the accomplishments in the number of ships constructed, the tonnage secured, and the time within which the ships were completed and delivered, constitute the most remarkable achievement in shipbuilding that the world has ever seen.

[Applause on the Democratic side.] The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment is withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Relief and protection of American seamen: For the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries, and in the Panama Canal Zone, and shipwrecked American seamen in the Territory of Alaska, in the Hawaiian Islands, Porto Rico, and the Philippine Islands, $1,000,000.

Mr. SCHALL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Is there objection?

The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, records, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several embassies and legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, repairs, postage, telegrams, furniture, typewriters, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the Diplomatic and Consular Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1921, $92,000.

Mr. REED of New York, Mr. O'CONNOR, and Mr. CHIND-BLOM rose

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr.

REED] is recognized.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to have the attention of the members of which I introduced in the latter part of the Sixty-sixth Congress. Before I state the purpose of the bill, which will be offered later as an amendment to this deficiency bill, I wish to state that I am speaking for no ordinary industry in this coun-This bill was introduced at the request of the poultry men of the United States, whose products, according to this last census, amounted during the fiscal year of 1919 to $1,250,000,000. The purpose of this bill, which will be offered as an amendment, carrying an appropriation of $15,000, is to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, with the cooperation of the State agricultural colleges, experiment stations, and the United States Council of the World's Poultry Congress, and other organizations, to prepare and send an exhibit to the International Poultry Congress to be held at The Hague, Holland, during the week of September 6-13, 1921, and also to send three delegates who are to be officials or employees of the Department of Agriculture. Nineteen countries have already signified their intention of sending delegates and exhibits to this congress.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is that going to help the poultry business? Mr. REED of New York. Yes. They figure that it will.

Mr. BLANTON. Can the gentleman from New York in this way teach our housewives down on the farms in Texas how to better raise chickens and ducks and geese, eggs, or any other thing?

Mr. REED of New York. I can not speak for Texas. I am not going to discuss that matter at all, gentlemen. Unless this appropriation is carried at this time, it is going to disappoint the poultrymen, the agricultural colleges, experiment stations, and poultry organizations, who are preparing this splendid exhibit. It is rather gratifying to all of us that after obtaining most of our varieties of poultry from foreign countries we have been able to develop this small industry into a great business amounting to $1,250,000,000. It is quite natural that this request should come from nearly every State in the Union, especially when we consider the magnitude of the business as it has been developed in the various States. For example, in the State of Alabama the last census shows the poultry production amounted to $14,799,000, exceeded only by dairy products, corn, and vegetables. In Colorado the poultry production amounted to $9,007,000, exceeded by dairy, corn, wheat, and vegetables. The poultry production of Delaware amounted to vegetables. The poultry production of Delaware amounted to $3,210,000, exceeded by corn, wheat, and vegetables. The poultry production of Iowa, the great banner corn State of the Union, amounted to $70,212,000, exceeded by corn and oats. The State of Kentucky produced $26,210,000 worth of poultry, exceeded only by corn. The State of Maine produced $7,725,000 worth of poultry, exceeded by dairy products and vegetables. The poultry production of the State of Maryland amounted to $1,727,000 exceeded by corn wheat and vegetables. The $1,737,000, exceeded by corn, wheat, and vegetables. The poultry production of Mississippi amounted to $904,000, only exceeded by dairy products, vegetables, fruits, and nuts.

Missouri produced $66,271,000 worth of poultry products, exceeded by corn and wheat. Montana produced $7,399,000 worth of poultry, exceeded by wool and wheat. New Hampshire produced $4,341,000 worth of poultry, exceeded by dairy products and vegetables. The State of Ohio produced $64,-109,000 worth of poultry, exceeded by dairy products, corn, and wheat, while Tennessee produced $29,072,000 worth of poultry, exceeded only by corn.

Time will not permit me to give the figures of poultry production in many of the other States, some of which are noted for their poultry production.

It is obvious from these figures that through the efforts of the colleges, experiment stations, the national and allied poultry associations, State poultry associations, and other organiza-tions interested in this subject have made this one of the leading agricultural industries of the country.

There are special reasons for immediate action. This is the last opportunity that will be had to enable our Secretary of Agriculture to officially represent the United States of America at The Hague in September. The time is too short to hope for another appropriation bill covering this specific item. This bill has been acted upon favorably by the Agricultural Committee on two occasions, and each time the report has been unanimous. There is a movement under way now for holding the World's Poultry Congress in the United States in 1924. The Canadian Government has already made appropriations for the Canadian exhibit at The Hague in 1921, and has extended an invitation to have the next congress held in Canada.

In view of the fact that the United States has more money invested for teaching and research in poultry husbandry than any other nation, probably more than all the nations combined, the committee for just a few moments with reference to a bill I hope that this amendment when offered may receive favorable consideration and that in view of the importance of the item that a point of order will not be made against it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. O'CONNOR: On page 16, line 4, insert a new paragraph as follows: "Passport Bureaus: For Salaries and expenses of maintenance, fiscal year 1922, of passport bureaus, as follows: New York, N. Y., $20.820; San Francisco, Calif., $7,500; Chicago, Ill., $17,500; Seattle, Wash., $4,500; New Orleans, La., $7,500; in all, $57,820."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Will the gentleman reserve it? Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I will reserve it. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have a letter from the Secretary of State in which he so clearly and forcefully shows the need and necessity for these passport bureaus provided for in the amendment which I have offered and which has just been read that I think it would be the part of wisdom for this committee to consent to have the Clerk read the letter during my time. I therefore make the request that the communication be read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'CONNOR. I would be glad to do so, but will not the gentleman kindly let the Clerk read this letter, because it covers the situation completely and is illuminating to a degree?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to have read in his time the letter he indicates. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 20, 1921.

The Hon. James O'Connor,

House of Representatives.

Sir.: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 7, 1921, inclosing a communication to you from Mr. F. W. Ellsworth, vice president of the Hibernia Bank and Trust Co., New Orleans. La., in which he advocates the establishment of passport agencies in cities in which the obvious necessity of their existence is clearly shown.

Orleans. La., in which he advocates the establishment of passport agencies in cities in which the obvious necessity of their existence is clearly shown.

In response to your request for information relative to the desirability of securing appropriations for the continuance of the passport bureaus at New York and San Francisco, with the possible establishment of additional bureaus at other important centers, I am now pleased to inform you that estimates for this purpose have been forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to the Congress.

In order that you may properly judge of the relative cost of maintenance as compared with the revenue of these bureaus, your attention is directed to the following tabulation which shows the estimated number of applications to be taken and the cost of maintenance of each bureau, Perhaps the most striking feature in this connection, as you will observe, is the fact that the fees derived from the taking of passport applications at all of the bureaus would amount to as much as or more than their cost of maintenance. In other words, they may be considered as self-sustaining.

Location of bureau.	Number of applications (at $1 each).	Cost.
New York. San Francisco Chicago Seattle. New Orleans	41, 094 5, 109 5, 600 1, 200 5, 000	$20,820 7,500 17,500 4,500 7,500
Total	58,003	57, 820

Were the bureaus abolished the major portion of those fees would be lost to the Government, as such work as the taking of applications for passports would devolve upon the clerks of Federal and State courts, which latter are allowed to retain these fees.

It may be remarked that no provision has been made for a bureau at Key West, Fla., as the Cuban Legation has informed this department that no passports are now required for Americans entering Cuba from the United States.

You are aware of the great convenience to the public afforded by these agencies where timely information regarding the requirements of foreign governments is given out by specialized officials, and where it is possible to assemble all essential documents relating to the proof of nationality and the right of the applicant to possess an American passport, Confusion and loss of time are the inevitable result of entrusting such work to the clerks of courts who are not specialized on the subject and from whom applications arrive at the department in incomplete form.

Since the traveling public is subject to many delays, annoyance, and expenses incidental to the existing passport requirements, I feel that it is desirable to afford such facilities at home as will ameliorate rather than multiply the hardships in this regard. As this can be done at a nominal expense, if not indeed without expense to the Government, I deem it very desirable that provision should be made therefor.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. I yield. Mr. BLANTON. The cally purpose of the gentleman's amendment would be to furnish facilities for obtaining passports?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, may I have five additional minutes?

Mr. CANNON. Is the gentleman proposing to offer the amendment to this bill at this time?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes. There is a point of order pending against it.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I reserve the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. The only purpose is to afford, as the gentleman thinks, better facilities for obtaining passports for

Mr. O'CONNOR. It is not only my purpose, but evidently from the tenor of the letter just read it is the disposition on the part of the State Department to facilitate the procurement of passports

Mr. BLANTON. Where they do not obtain the passports direct, is not this the situation: One of the gentleman's constituents in Louisiana wants a passport. The gentleman on behalf of his constituent applies at the State Department, and in 24 hours there starts to Louisiana through the mail an application blank will full instructions.

That reaches Louisiana in three days' time. His constrient fills it out and it reaches the gentleman in three days thereafter, and in 24 hours the gentleman can get that passport and forward it to his constituent. I state that because the State Department is efficient. There is efficiency in the State Department.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Does the gentleman think it is entirely fair for him to make a speech during my five minutes? I yielded to an interrogatory.

Mr. BLANTON. I was just trying to give the gentleman the reasons why I made the point of order.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I think the gentleman from Texas is slightly mistaken about the modus operandi pursued in securing passports. A clerk of the United States court for the eastern district of Louisiana is authorized, for instance, to make out the papers preliminary and forward them to the Passport Division of the Department of State at Washington; that is, make an application for a passport and after the papers have been re-ceived the imprimatur of the Passport Division is given and then the passport is mailed to New Orleans. Of course I am using New Orleans illustratively. The same thing applies to Chicago, to Seattle, to San Francisco and to any other place in this country where a citizen is desirous of securing a pass-

Will the gentleman yield for a brief question? Mr. BEGG.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. Is it not a fact to-day that every county in the United States has a passport officer in the clerk of the court?
Mr. O'CONNOR. There is a clerk who may make out the papers preliminarily; I mean make out the application for the applicant for the passport.

Mr. MADDEN. That applies only to the clerks of the Federal court, does it not?

Mr. BEGG. We have it done in Sandusky, and we have not a Federal court there.

Mr. O'CONNOR. The clerk of the court can make out the preliminary papers or the application, as I have already explained, and forward them to Washington, where they will have to remain in the Passport Division of the State Department until they are viséed, and then they are returned to the point where they originated.

Mr. BEGG. Yes, but it is just a question of the time it takes a letter to come and go back.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Which, of course, means considerable delay, friction, and unnecessary annoyance to men and women who have to make relatively unexpected trips and should not be put to the inconvenience of waiting in a seaport for two weeks or more for papers to be forwarded, viséed, and returned from Washington.

Under my amendment the officer will be authorized to issue passports direct to the applicants in New York, New Orleans, Chicago, Seattle, and San Francisco, and he will receive a salary, and the amount of the fees will be covered back into the Treasury.

I believe that if the Members of this Committee of the Whole had listened attentively and carefully to the reading of that letter signed by the Secretary of State there would be no objection at all to this amendment. It is in conformity to the suggestion of the Secretary. I believe the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] would unhesitatingly withdraw the point of order that he made against it, if he had time to consider the wisdom of adopting the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will permit me, I want to preserve this $50,000 to pay the salaries of two or three of these extra officeholders whom my friend from Iowa [Mr. Good] has provided for in this bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I know the gentleman's disposition to avoid unnecessary expense by the Government. But, gentlemen, you do not save the Government any $50,000 by defeating this amendment. Let me read from the Secretary's letter: "Were the bureaus abolished the major portion of those fees would be lost to the Government, as such work as taking of applications for passports would devolve upon the clerks of Federal and State courts, which latter are allowed to retain these fees."

As stated by the Secretary, $58,003 was collected in fees to cover a service that cost $57,820. Why not continue such a service upon an honorable salary basis? I do not like a fee system-it is somewhat analogous to the tipping system, which has rendered personal service in this country to-day almost ignoble, and one can say truthfully it is a fact that a tip system is gradually taking away the courage and manhood of the people dependent upon it. Put our passport clerks and all other officials on a salary and permit a fee to be charged and covered back into the Treasury as a charge by the Government to cover the expenses. I do not want my countrymen to "crook the pregnant hinges of the knee, that thrift may follow fawning," or to wait, hat in hand, as mendicants almost on their own countrymen for their fees, their oboles, and their bonuses. Make them decent, upstanding, and upright men, of whom you may be proud. Put them on a salary basis and let the fees come back into the But, gentlemen, all of this is beside the question, which is that the people in the great cities covered by the amendment are entitled to have passports issued to them on application, particularly where the statistics show that it could be done without cost to the Government. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. The charges are not tips, but fees to Federal clerks for applications. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. O'Connor] offers an amendment adding to the bill passport agencies at New York, San Francisco, Chicago, New Orleans and other places. This is a bill providing for deficiencies for the year ending June 30, 1921, and for prior years. The amendment is clearly subject to a point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Campbell of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted-

To Mr. Rainey of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. Dunbar, for five days, on account of going to Indiana.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, May 23, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

SENATE.

MONDAY, May 23, 1921.

(Legislative day of Friday, May 20, 1921.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

GREAT FALLS POWER DEVELOPMENT.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, chairman of the Federal Power Commission, transmitting a report from the Board of Engineers for Rivers and Harbors on the plans submitted by J. H. Levering for power development on the Potomac River below Great Falls, which was ordered to lie on the table.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of Hawaii, favoring an amendment of the Hawaiian organic act so as to provide for the rehabilitation of the Hawaiian people through the enactment of a law to establish an Hawaiian homes commission, and for other purposes, substantially as set forth in a proposed bill attached to the resolution and made a part thereof, which was referred to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

Mr. LADD presented resolutions of Leeds Chapter, American War Mothers, of Leeds; Woman's Auxiliary to Ted Valerius Post, No. 97, of Larimore; American War Mothers, of Shey-enne; Women's Auxiliary Unit of Ernest De Nault Robertson Post, No. 14, of Jamestown; Rotary Club of Grand Forks; Women's Auxiliary Earl V. Jefferson Post, No. 18, of Hope; and sundry members of Women's Auxiliary of Barry-Hoof Post, No. 72, of Napoleon, all in the State of North Dakota, favoring the enactment of legislation providing adequate relief for disabled ex-service men, which were referred to the Committee on

He also presented a petition of sundry apple growers of the Hood River Valley, Oreg., praying for the immediate repeal of section 15-A of the transportation act, 1920, fixing the rates for common carriers, so as to revest in the Interstate Commerce Commission the power to make rates based on what products will stand, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Denhoff, Goodrich, Carpio, Sykeston, and Woodworth, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Fargo, N. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation to promote Americanization and to improve the conditions for immigrants at Ellis Island, N. Y., so as to prevent discontent, socialism, bolshevism, anarchy, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. ROBINSON presented a resolution adopted at a mass meeting of sundry citizens of Fort Smith, Ark., on May 15, 1921, favoring the enactment of legislation for the recognition of the Irish republic, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Farmers' Union of the Southern District of Logan County, at Chismville, Ark., favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

To also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the State of Arkansas, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation imposing higher tariff duties that would increase the cost of raw materials entering into the manufacture of necessities of life, and also affording tariff protection to old-established industries which should not need protection, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CAPPER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Asbury, Lawton, Pratt, Hoxie, Bloomington, Brewster, Winfield, Vic-toria, Gorham, Russell, Otis, Galatia, Lawrence, and Princeton, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit gambling in grain and other agricultural products, which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the National Milk Marketing Conference at Chicago, Ill., May 3, 1921, protesting against railroad rates on agricultural products as unreasonable and unbearable; favoring immediate investigation by the Senate committee into the operation and rates of railroads, and requesting that the Senate committee thoroughly sift such questions as income, expenses, rates, wages, and credit so as to find some solution of the railroad problem, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers' Association adopted at its forty-fifth annual convention, favoring the enactment of legislation repealing the provisions of the transportation act authorizing the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix intrastate rates, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. WILLIS presented a resolution of the Buckeye State Building & Loan Co., of Columbus, Ohio, favoring the enactment of legislation exempting from income tax an amount received by an individual as dividends or interest from domestic building and loan associations, organized and operated exclusively for the mutual benefit of members, not exceeding $500, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the American Bar Association at St. Louis, Mo., August 25, 26, and 27, 1920, recommending that the Committee on the Judiciary favorably report the bill to bring about a more certain, speedier, less expensive, and less technical administration of justice in America, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the American Association of Flint and Glass Manufacturers at Pittsburgh, Pa., on February 8, 1921, favoring the enactment of legislation to prohibit the importation of the product of any workshop where child labor is employed in any part of such workshop, mills, mines, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

LONG-STAPLE COTTON.

Mr. President, a few days ago I received a telegram from Mr. D. R. Coker, of Hartsville, S. C., in reference to the duty placed upon cotton in the emergency tariff bill. desire to insert the telegram and sections 16 and 17 of the emergency tariff bill, found on page 3, together with my answer to the telegram from Mr. Coker, all of which goes to show that there is grown in the United States very little of the cotton which is protected by the act. This provision will be a protection to the manufacturer of cotton goods. Mr. Coker is one of the best-posted men on long-staple cotton in the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to insert certain documents in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HARTSVILLE, S. C.

Senator N. B. DIAL, Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Press reports quote section 16, emergency tariff, as protecting inch three-eighths and longer cotton. Is this correct? If so, it will not apply to large part Egyptian and Peruvian crop and will not protect any American cotton except Pima and sea-island. If tariff protects any cotton, should it not apply to all staples inch eighth and longer, as bulk of imports between inch one-eighth and three-eighths?

DAVID R. COKER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 13, 1921.

D. R. COKER, Hartsville, S. C.:

We agree with you. We Democrats offered an amendment of one inch and one-eighth and above on cotton. The Republicans voted this down. No chance to amend now.

No. B. Dial.

SUBSECTIONS OF EMERGENCY TARIFF BILL AS PASSED BY BOTH HOUSES OF CONGRESS

16. Cotton having a staple of 13 inches or more in length, 7 cents per pound.

17. Manufactures of which cotton of the kind provided for in paragraph 16 is the component material of chief value, 7 cents per pound, in addition to the rates of duty imposed thereon by existing law.

THE GARABED INVENTION.

Mr. HEFLIN, Mr. President, Garabed T. K. Giragossian, who claims to be the inventor of a free energy generating machine, has requested me to have printed in the Congressional Record a brief explanation regarding the matter, in which he gives his reasons for refusing to exhibit and operate his machine in the presence of certain people on a former occasion. I ask that the statement be printed in the Record. It is not very long.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 23, 1921.

Senator J. THOMAS HEFLIN, Washington, D. C.

Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: On account of an unfavorable report, the prevailing idea among the public and our Congress is that my free energy generating engine, or the so-called "Garabed." is a failure. That is absolutely wrong. I did not have any intention of demonstrating the working engine for the reasons which I have given in the inclosed memorandum, which I have addressed to the Hon. Calvin Coolings, the President of the Senate.

It is only just and in the interest of all concerned that our Congress should be informed of the truth and the precise facts, and in this memorandum I have fully explained and pointed out the obstacles and causes of delay of the advent of costless energy.

I hope and trust that it will be possible to submit this memorandum to the kind consideration of the United States Senate, and that it may be printed in the Congressional Record.

Sincerely believing that you are so generous as to render such valuable service to the public, I have the honor to remain,

Yours, very respectfully,

Garabed T. K. Giragossian.

GARABED T. K. GIRAGOSSIAN. MEMORANDUM ADDRESSED TO THE VICE PRESIDENT.

"I beg to give an account elating to .. certain matter that has aroused the interest of the United States Congress, as well as agitated the mind of the public.

"Under the pressure and dictation of an unneglectable duty, the motive of this communication is aimed to dispel the erroneous idea and wrong conception formed about it by some diverse Therefore it is gratifying to inform you that a circumstances. free energy generator of my invention, which involves the matter referred to, has been constructed by me. It will substantially verify more than I have ever dared to claim for it. By virtue of its character and operation, this working engine will entirely eliminate the possibility of any doubt and cavil, or dispute concerning its complete feasibility, as well as about the boundless use and successful utilization of the Garabed system. The wheels of all industries and crafts are to be run, moved, and propelled by free energy; and the fire or heat and light of cities, hamlets, and farms can be supplied by costless electricity that will convert this planet of ours into a blissful paradise.

Regrettable it is that for a very long time the construction of it had been hindered by many adverse circumstances.

"As regards the fundamental cause which protracted the advent of this great work, it has already been submitted to the kind consideration of the proper authority, and there is nothing now particularly new to say.

"Three days after the approval of the President of the House joint resolution 174—Public resolution No. 21, Sixty-fifth Congress—concerning my work, I forwarded a memorandum to Hon. Champ Clark on February 11, 1918, which has been printed in the Congressional Record of the same date on page 2121. Any person who would read it attentively hardly could expect that I would disclose the essential secret of my work, as I did not—and I am constrained yet to withhold it—for the same very reasons which are pointed out in my above-mentioned memorandum, in which my reference was to an amendment of the bill. The said amendment, inserted in section 3 of the bill, reads as follows:

"And that he is the first and original discoverer and inventor thereof, and that he is the original discoverer and inventor thereof.

"Anyone who had not given serious consideration to my objections to it or had not read the whole memorandum carefully would naturally have lost his former confidence in me. Surrounded by slanderers and at the mercy of patent pirates, how could a man have a commanding and impulsive incentive, and what benefit could he expect from exposing his work? No sensible man when made familiar with this affair will blame me nor will he lose his former confidence in me because I did not make my work of a quarter of a century of hardship an easy prey to patent thieves.

"I am not seeking the blind confidence of any person. I did not exploit nor abuse any confidence reposed in me, as I will not in the latter part of my life. I am not after a favor, nor do I wish to be looked upon as a beneficiary. The demand and value of my work is continually growing every day. I can dispose of it at any conspicuous place with a material remuneration more than my highest satisfaction. With me this is not a business proposition, but a sacred duty, imposed upon me by the benevolent environment of the country, where since 30 years ago I have enjoyed freedom, friendship, learning, and so forth, and where I conceived and contrived my work. Thus, under many moral obligations, I am striving to dedicate it to the service of man under the sway of the Stars and Stripes, "Nevertheless I am not willing to make it a prey to parasites. I am fully justified and vindicated in my pursuit by irrefutable facts illustrated in my aforesaid memorandum, which will stand as an indestructible rock, and it will also absolve me from any blame, guilt, and responsibility in taking such a course or for withholding my work from the public in the past as well as in the future, which step, however, I may be forced to take reluctantly.

"In the tumult and stir of the World War I could not find any other means to protect my rights against most formidable conspirators, whose objects were to frustrate the noble aim of our Congress and to convert its mentioned resolution into a gold brick or a judicial joke. To this very end they exerted and exercised their utmost skill, and they are responsible for that amendment. Undoubtedly they well calculated and expected rightly that this amended bill would serve as a trap or bait for an idiot, or it is to stand in the way of an ordinary man of common sense as a preventive obstacle to restrain him from exhibiting his invention.

"Certainly the contemplated amendment has had the required potency. If the beneficent object of the Congress shall be disregarded, the literal meaning of it is that the successful verification of the entire practicability of my work can not make me the legal owner of it, in spite of the nonexistence in public operation and in practical use of anything similar to my work. It offers also an unrestricted privilege and enticement to any man to copy my invention and exploit it as his own. The prevention of such infringement is thus rendered impracticable.

"By reason of the said clause the finding of the authorized committee is ordained to be inevitably defective, invalid, and devoid of the requisite power to protect my right. No verdict determining and defining the originality of disputable matters can be regarded fair and authentic unless the same judges had examined thoroughly all and every case of all claimants or contestants. That is the reason that not a scientist whom I requested to serve on the authorized committee would assume the responsibility to deal with or issue any certificate concerning the originality of my work. There is only one way to solve a problem of this kind which is in practical use, namely, 'the person who delivers the goods is entitled to the reward.' This principle is the foundation stone of all patent offices of the civilized world. All patent laws are supposed to be issued in conformity with this very principle. But the clause in question denies this simple and universally adopted principle and right to me.

"It is against human reason and judgment. It is against the American principles and ideas and against the principles and conception of any civilized country that a person should substantially verify the complete feasibility of his invaluable invention, and yet, in the absence of any of its kind, he will not be recognized the legal owner of his invention, as in my case. Why should not a civilized nation protect with all its power and means the right of a discovery capable to shape and elevate the destiny of mankind? Our Congress proved by its acts its willingness to do so. The original resolution concerning my work had passed the Senate and House, showing I had thus been recognized the legal owner of my work, if I could but verify the feasibility of my claim or invention.

"After the 'pocket veto' of that resolution, special interests,

"After the 'pocket veto' of that resolution, special interests, by all their means and expert distorters, as well as also professional crooks, intensified their schemes and propaganda, which culminated in bringing a fraudulent invention to the very floor of the House of Representatives at the time when the discussion of House joint resolution No. 174 had commenced. Some people insisted that it could perform whatever was claimed for my work. In the same session the amendment was attached to the said bill.

"Under the circumstances Congress was fully justified in doing this. Then it was my unavoidable task to wait patiently until the said amendment could have ample time to fulfill its specific function.

"Undoubtedly Congress adopted the said amendment, so as not to deprive others of their rights of priority in similar inventions, if some person may really possess such a similar invention.

"Sincerely being desirous to be helpful to genuine inventors, I also, in the aforesaid memorandum, have explicitly and definitely reliquished my right to the interest of real inventors or discoverers who are capable of producing a free energy generator similar to my claim. False claimants would naturally ignore my relinquishment, as they did, continuing still more violently their insolent and slanderous attack upon me. They circulated fictitious tales in the newspapers, with the express purpose of making the public believe, by deception, that I have stolen their inventions, and that they have engines or drawings of the kind I have.

"If there were an atom of truth in their claims, they should take the unique and beneficent advantage of the great favor which I have done by exhibiting to the committee a machine. And by so doing my legal and moral right ended there. And it is a self-evident and simple fact, as any person, even of illiteracy, can also draw spontaneously the obvious, unmistakable conclusion that if any person could produce a working engine of a costless energy generator, I can make no claim whatsoever for it, yet my opponents did not show anything useful, nor come forward, nor try to get my aforesaid machine, while so nefariously was their clamoring that whatever I would demonstrate belonged to them.

"But those tricky pretenders, restless with excited appetites, were waiting in their ambuscade for the appearance of the fat

"The transparent plot of those conspirators apparently was to pounce upon my rights in some way. Thence I would have been dragged from court to court, so as to prove there that I was 'the first and original inventor or discoverer thereof.'

"However, I preferred to bring this matter by an undesirable protraction before the tribunal and conscience of our people. Over two years this case was on trial, and its indisputable outcome is self-evident as well as self-explanatory.

"All these claimants in question have had ample time to verify their claims. The demand of the times and all trends of the events were working to their advantage, but they failed entirely. The lapse of time has automatically and conclusively exposed the falsifications of those mistaken and would-be inventors or obnoxious imposters and slanderers. And thus the said amendment has so thoroughly and splendidly fulfilled its function. Therefore it is to be hoped fervently that our Congress will deem proper to eliminate it from the public resolution No. 21, Sixty-fifth Congress.

No. 21, Sixty-fifth Congress.

"Granting that there were no persons who could slander me of stealing their inventions, yet at the same time my legal, and especially moral, right of my work would have been subjected or liable to a prolonged contest on account of an arbitrary interpretation relating to the aforesaid amendment.

"Immediately after the passage of the bill in question I heard that some opponents were jubilant over the idea that the originality of my work must be defined and decided through the investigation of the so-called 'ancient art,' and by that procedure the real motive behind the bill or the legal safeguard of my right would have been frustrated. I have held that prediction was sound for the reason that in conformity to their previous declarations they could put into operation and exploit my work as their own invention long before the termination of such a preposterous investigation.

"On April 12, 1918, in Washington, D. C., in the Interior Department, in the presence of some gentlemen, Secretary of the Interior, Hon. Franklin K. Lane, proposed to two members of the committee who would examine my work that in case of the verification of my claim they should define the originality of the matter through an investigation of the 'ancient arts,' and then after that to render a certificate to the effect of whether or not I am entitled to be the legal owner of the work. They flatly refused to do so. Prof. A. E. Kennelly, the chairman of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology faculty, said in substance, mainly speaking in plural terms, that an investigation of the 'ancient arts' might take several months, with the expenditure of a considerable sum of money. At any rate, he rejoined, 'It is not the especial line of our occupation. We only undertake the task of examining and deciding whether or not it is practical, without assuming any other responsibility whatsoever.' Thereupon Mr. Lane suggested the idea that the certificate is to be written by assumption about the originality of the work.

"It is a very obvious fact that any rendered certificate based upon assumption can not have the legal potency as a safeguard to my right. Furthermore, in the opinion of some prominent people, the eventual certificate in question, written or composed in whatever phrase or term, must be considered illegal, invalid, or worthless if it is to be rendered to me prior to submitting my invention to an antiquarian investigation in order to establish its priority in the 'ancient arts.'

"European countries are now very hard pressed, especially by reason of scarcity of fuel. To their manufacturers a ton of coal costs about $100. They are lamenting and struggling for the reparation of the war ruins, as they have to mean for many years yet, under the heavy burden of the World War debts.

"Those are the countries who have offered to mankind intellectual giants and commanding geniuses. And those are the nations that have been able to put on the battle fields 10,000,000 men at an astounding cost. Why are they not seeking a remedy for their distress in the so-called 'ancient arts' by the appointment of a committee composed of one or ten hundred scientists?

"For many centuries a great army of men, including the master minds of the time, are striving in vain to solve the problem of energy; and the whole world admits and deplores the nonexistence of a source or available means of obtaining it freely and abundantly. And while with the march of civilization we are more intimately realizing the ever-growing need of this prime necessity of life, progress, and happiness, and we are destroying by fire more and more every day coal, which is the most valuable substance among the exhaustible natural wealth, scientists are looking on the enormous waste with alarmed and aghast mind, for they can utilize it several times beneficially and profitably to all concerned by costless electricity.

At such a juncture when a man offers the remedy in quest, in the minds of some people yet he is not entitled to a reward. If he can save his skin from patent sharks, he must be hurled into an inextricable labyrinth especially constructed for his doom under the name of 'ancient arts.'

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McLEAN, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, to which was referred the bill (S. 1811) to amend the Federal farm loan act, as amended, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 65) thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1016) to amend an act entitled An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 66) thereon.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 997) conferring jurisdiction upon the United States district court for the eastern district of South Carolina to hear and determine the claim of the owners of the Danish steamship Flynderborg against the United States, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 67) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 82) ratifying the reestablishment of the boundary line between the States of Pennsylvania and Delaware, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 68) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WATSON of Indiana: A bill (S. 1863) to amend an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, by defining the meaning of "substantial interest"; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. UNDERWOOD:

A bill (S. 1864) for the relief of the estate of C. C. Spiller, deceased; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHIELDS:

A bill (S. 1865) authorizing the Postmaster General to reinstate and reappoint W. H. Randle as a clerk in the Railway Postal Service (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. BALL:

A bill (S. 1866) to amend the act of Congress entitled "An act to establish standard weights and measures for the District of Columbia; to define the duties of the superintendent of weights, measures, and markets of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1921; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 1867) granting Parramore Post, No. 57, American Legion, permission to construct a memorial building on the Federal site at Abilene, Tex.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 1868) to extend the period for construction of Eagle Rock Reservoir, under the act of March 3, 1891; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. McCORMICK:

A bill (S. 1869) to provide through cooperation between the Federal Government, the States, and owners of timberlands for adequate protection against forest fires, for reforestation of denuded lands, for obtaining essential information in regard to timber and timberlands, for extension of the national forests, and for other purposes, all essential to continuous forest production on lands entirely suitable therefor; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

AMENDMENTS TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 58, line 16, before the word "officers," to insert "flying," so as to make the paragraph read:

There shall be a Chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the flying officers of the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps, etc.

On page 59, line 22, after the word "Navy," to strike out the period and to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That flying units or detachments shall in all cases be commanded by flying officers.

And on page 59, line 22, after the word "Navy," to strike out the period and to insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That not to exceed 10 per cent of the officers in each grade below that of rear admiral who fail to qualify as aircraft pilots or as aircraft observers within one year after the date of their detail into the Bureau of Aeronautics shall be permitted to remain detailed in this bureau.

Mr. McKELLAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 39, line 18, insert the following proviso: "Provided, That all cadets found deficient during the present or last session, and whose resignations were asked and received by the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, if reappointed to the academy, shall be admitted to the academy without regard to the age limit now provided by law and placed in the class one year behind their former class."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore

S. 82. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North, at or near the city of Pembina, N. Dak.;

H. R. 2173. An act authorizing the construction, maintenance. and operation of a private drawbridge over and across Lock No. 4 of the canal and locks, Willamette Falls, Clackamas County, Oreg.; and

THE DYE INDUSTRY.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before proceeding to a consideration of the naval bill I desire briefly to invite the attention of the Senate to a matter that was discussed when the emergency tariff bill was under consideration. It will be recalled that the Senate Finance Committee reported the emergency tariff bill with a provision which gave the dye monopoly of the United States further power to strengthen its strangle hold upon the American consumers of dyestuffs. Notwithstanding the growth of this industry and its tremendous profits and its ability to meet any reasonable competition, it was potential enough to secure legislation which in effect prohibits the importation of dyes for a number of months. Not satisfied with this embargo provided in the emergency tariff bill, it has renewed its activities, as I am advised, at the other end of the Capitol, and I have just been told by a distinguished Senator that the subcommittee of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House has recommended that the licensing embargo provision be con-tinued for a period of five years. When the embargo provision was under discussion in the Senate the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] denounced the entire emergency tariff bill and challenged particular attention to the indefensible embargo provision respecting dyestuffs. He then predicted, as I recall, that if the Senate adopted this policy of embargo and license—a policy which finds no precedent in former tariff bills and which is un-American and indefensible upon any economic grounds—the dye monopoly would demand and obtain further legislation which would continue this vicious policy for an indefinite period.

It appears that the prophecy of the Senator from New Hampshire will soon be realized. It pretended that it needed further protection and asked for an embargo for a period of six months. It was claimed, as I understood, that in the general tariff bill which is to be enacted suitable tariff rates were to be imposed, but that pending enactment of general tariff legislation, and only for a limited period, the embargo which was the result of the war should be continued. Of course, it was a mere pretense. The scheme eventually was to secure legislation of an unusual character as a precedent to secure the same legislation in a general tariff act. Doubtless the Dye Trust felt that to pass a law imposing from 400 to 1,000 per cent tariff rates would not be tolerated. It therefore became important to obscure the issue and to prevent the public from knowing just what result The embargo provision is a practical interdiction The Dye Trust would not be satisfied with reasonwas sought. of imports. able tariff; indeed, there is a reasonable tariff now imposed. It wants a complete monopoly of the dye industry and unfettered authority to impose upon the manufacturers and other consumers of dye products whatever prices its cupidity demands. During the war a licensing system and an embargo scheme was enacted. It was justified as a war measure; it can not be defended in peace times; and yet this voracious trust is determined to perpetuate in peace times war policies and fasten upon the people an obnoxious and vicious system under which it may conceal its acts of spoliation and robbery.

In 1913 when the Committee on Ways and Means was considering the question of a tariff upon synthetic dyes, witnesses brought before the committee, some of whom were manufac-turers, testified that a tariff of 35 per cent ad valorem with a small specific rate would be satisfactory. The existing tariff is more than 35 per cent, but that does not meet the demands of the Dye Trust, and, as stated, it is determined to have a complete monopoly and for that purpose is seeking legislation that will prevent any importations whatever. I have before me the American Economist, a paper published by the American Protective Tariff League. As its name implies, it is an advocate of tariff duties and it seeks protection of American industries. However, it has opposed the dye embargo scheme and has maintained a consistent and rational attitude in opposition thereto. In its issue of May 20 of this year, there appears an illuminating article copied from the New York Daily News Record of May 13. The article was written by Warren F. Done, editor of the Manufacturer, the official organ of the Philadelphia Manufacturers' Club. Speaking of this article, the American Economist

It exposes the false pretenses, the greed, and the monopolistic aims of those dye manufacturers who are seeking to fasten the license embargo system upon the people of the United States. On account of its extreme length, we are unable to publish it in full, but it is of such importance and exposes so thoroughly the fake patriotism of the would-be monopolist that we make very extensive quotations as follows.

I shall take the liberty of inserting at this point, without reading, the article as it appears in the Economist.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The article is as follows:

Inasmuch, however, as these great industries have elected to carry their indifferently camouflaged issues directly to the people in a hugely financed campaign of subtle evasion and deliberate false pretense, evidently for the purpose of first creating and then manipulating such a public misunderstanding as will afford additional pressure with which to force stubborn public-spirited Congressmen to an accession to their special-privilege demands, it becomes distinctly in the public interest to know.

know:

1. What it is that the domestic dye industries want.

2. The real reasons why they want it.

3. What would be the result of giving them what they want.

It is well to take up the three distinct phases of the question in the order just named.

SAYS MONOPOLY IS SOUGHT.

SAYS MONOPOLY IS SOUGHT.

To summarize the first proposition in a single sentence, the domestic dye manufacturers want a complete and unrestricted monopoly of that industry, free of all foreign competition that might in any way regulate or restrict domestic price, at the expense of other industries and the entire consuming public of the United States.

The war—not our late entry into it, but the outbreak of it seven years ago, in 1914—brought us that which we had not had before, which we need and which practically everyone will agree we must maintain jointly for commercial and military prestige, a great development of the chemical industry.

But it is here; we have it. It is not a desire, but an actuality; not a dream, but a fact. We have it in corporations that rank among the largest and most potent combinations, not only of the United States but of the world—such concerns as the Du Ponts, the $100,000,000 Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation that only showed a net profit of $16,179,939 for the year 1920, and a dozen others of great financial power and industrial prestige.

INDUSTRY " SECURELY INTRENCHED."

Under circumstances more favorable by far than ever encouraged any of the earlier industries which have builded this country to greatness this industry grew and expanded at prodigious strides. The unusual and abnormal demands for every ounce of output were equaled only by the arbitrary or artificial barriers which prevented all outside competition. It was harvest time for the chemical and dye industry and prices and profits were proportionate to the unusual opportunities.

And so we have the American chemical and dye industry of to-day, equaling if not eclipsing in financial power many of the longer established industries, rapidly paralleling all others in manufacturing efficiency and consequent industrial prestige.

These latter are the essential facts, concerning which the domestic dye industry is so assiduously endeavoring to pull the wool over the eyes of Congress and the American public; that it is here securely intrenched, firmly established, amply financed, and certainly well able not only to survive but to progress and prosper under the same laws and principles of fair and equitable competition as govern every other industry in this country.

"UNPRECEDENTED PROFITS."

"UNPRECEDENTED PROFITS."

But a subjection to the same laws and principles of fair and equitable competition as govern every other industry in this country is exactly what the dye industry of the United States does not want. It had its unprecedented expansion and profits as a Government-protected monopoly, and a Government-protected monopoly, and a Government-protected monopoly, and a Government-protected monopoly is wants and is willing to spend much money to remain. * * * It is only necessary to say here that, like all unjust, uneconomic, and un-American monopolistic privileges, this embargo has encouraged and begot not only inferior products, but prices from 100 to 500 per cent above those which would be established and maintained under fair competitive practices, with adequate tariff protection preventing any form of foreign dumping. Upon the eve of a peace to be obtained under his own resolution, and which otherwise automatically would suspend the embargo operations of the War Trade Board, Senator Knox has offered the amendment that would extend this special privilege of the dye industry coincidental with the six months life of the emergency tariff bill; and Representative Nicholas Longworth, who has been the congressional major domo of the domestic dye monopoly, is preparing to offer another bill that would continue this licensing system for another five years.

Alleges hypocrisy and deceits.

ALLEGES HYPOCRISY AND DECEIT.

Two years ago, under the Hill bill, the dye industry of this country accepted tariff protection, said that it was ample and all that it wanted. Since that time the dye industry has never been able to disprove its own statement. The single defense, if it may be called one, that the dye industry has been able to make for its unprecedented demand, and the one with which it is attempting to first gas and then hog-tie the rest of the country, is that it is a necessity for the successful conduct of a war.

Admitted, and without question or debate. The hypocrisy and deceit enters when this already overgrown young man attempts to describe himself as a swaddling infant. If there were not so many usually level-headed men in and out of Congress who give serious ear to this fantastic petition, it would be regarded as a joke for concerns whose combined assets run into hundreds of millions of dollars, whose exports were $67,000,000 in 1919 and more than $25,000,000 in 1920, and whose profits have been such that new concerns whose capitalizations exceeded $40,000,000 entered the field in the first three months of this year, describe themselves as an infant industry unable to survive and expand even under the protection of tariff duties which would prevent foreign dyes coming here at prices less than their own would have to be render a fair profit.

SEES THE INDUSTRY HAMPERED.

Of course the chemical industry—and a very efficient and well-established chemical industry—is a necessity in war. This country intends to have it. But the wool for clothes, the leather for shoes, the food for sustenance, and a score of other commodities too numerous to detail here are necessary for the soldier long before he is able to throw the gas bomb that the chemical industries would manufacture. Did anyone ever hear of the industries that produce these receiving the special class privilege of a peace-time embargo?

If it is true, as the domestic dye industry alleges or confesses, that after having been unprecedentedly pampered to this stage of its physical growth and financial strength, it lacks either the business capacity or the commercial courage to survive honest competition, even under the protection of a fully ndequate tariff, then those vast enterprises ought immediately and unanimously to suspend all other operations and devote themselves henceforth to the manufacture of a single color—yellow.

and devote themselves henceforth to the manufacture of a single color—yellow.

What, then, is the real reason for the domestic dye industry's insist-ent demand for a continuance of the embargo? It brings us to the second phase of the proposition.

QUOTES RAMBO ON COMPARATIVE PRICES.

QUOTES RAMBO ON COMPARATIVE PRICES.

I quote here but briefly from a statement recently made by Joseph S. Rambo, president of Rambo & Regar (Inc.): * * *

"Take a hosiery mill which dyes silk and cotton stockings. Before the war it used about 6 pounds of Zambesi black V, at 30 cents, for dyeing 100 pounds of hosiery. Now, if it feels it can afford a black of the same character, it probably would use the domestic product at $2 per pound, which is about 20 per cent weaker. In other words, a prewar cost for dyeing at $1.80 per hundred, as against a present cost of $15, or an advance of about $13 per hundred pounds. Now, a mill dyeing a thousand pounds of hosiery per day is not at all exceptional, and its increased cost on this basis for dyestuffs alone would be $130 per day, $650 per week of only five days, or approximately $34,000 per year.

per day, $650 per week of only five days, or approximately $52,000 per year.

"An ordinary sized denim mill uses about a quarter of a million pounds of Indigo per year. The difference between its present cost at, say 60 cents, as against the prewar 15 cents, would, roughly, be $112,500, or over 10 per cent, on $1,200,000 capital." * * * Dr. Bernard C. Hesse, in an address before the Franklin Institute, November 6, 1919, stated that "coal-tar dyes affect the livelihood of more than 1,000,000 employees in this country, working in upward of 11,000 of our manufacturing establishments, operating in 24 different lines of industry, having an invested capital of more than $2,500,000,000, and producing annually $2,600,000,000 of manufacture, because idea of what this monopolistic condition means to the consumers, to whom the domestic dye industry is making such a play upon the grounds of what it calls patriotism, and from whom the same domestic dye industry is consistently endeavoring to conceal all the real facts. * * *

domestic dye industry is consistently endeavoring to concear an each real facts. * * *

A short time ago a domestic textile manufacturer wanted a quantity of a certain dye, and applied to the War Trade Board for permission to import. The import price was $6.90. The War Trade Board refused the permit, and informed the manufacturer that he could purchase his color in this country. The manufacturer made his price inquiry and also an analysis of a sample. The domestic price was $7.70. He wrote to the War Trade Board, setting forth these facts, and renewing his request for a permit to import. The War Trade Board wrote back that $7.70 was "a fair price."

"PREMIUM UPON INFERIORITY."

Assuming that the War Trade Board's opinion was correct, and that $7.70 was a fair price to charge for the domestic product under prevailing production costs here, even though it was an inferior dye, does not the very statement contain a fact of extreme significance? If $7.70 is a fair price for the domestic product, and $6.90 is the selling price in America of the foreign product, then upon the very face of the situation an additional ad valorem duty of 11 per cent (based upon American valuation) would more than protect the home industry in the manufacture of that particular color. And, even assuming that under the stress of a gruelling competition for a place in the American markets, the foreigner might sell that dye here for $5, an additional duty of 36 per cent on the American value would amply protect the domestic manufacturer.

The difference in quality would still remain as an advantage to the of 36 per cent on the American value would amply protect the domestic manufacturer.

The difference in quality would still remain as an advantage to the foreigner. Very well. The American people never contemplated, nor will they ever willingly indorse, a protection, much less an embargo, in behalf of an inferiority to be foisted upon themselves. Honest and aggressive competition is in itself the essence of the incentive for constant improvement in a product. Remove competition and the situation itself places a premium upon inferiority. Any price at all may be charged, and there is no necessity to incur either the trouble or the expense of an honest product.

But when anyone begins to talk of these things, the domestic dye industry, this mammoth "infant" that has been nurtured upon monopoly and whose stomach will contain nothing else, starts the brass band, oratorically unfurls the American flag, figuratively waves it aloft, and loosens another volley of the aniline brand of Americanism. And various newspapers and other publications throughout the country, woefully misled or quietly but sufficiently subsidized, echo the farce up and down the land.

And we come now to the third and most serious phase of the whole proposition—what would be the result of giving them what they want?

Mr. KING. At the expense of repetition I want to reread this.

Mr. KING. At the expense of repetition I want to reread this paragraph:

The domestic dye manufacturers want a complete and unrestricted monopoly of that industry free of all foreign competition that might in any way regulate or restrict domestic prices, at the expense of other industries, to the entire consuming public of the United States.

This article shows the Frankenstein character of this monopoly, and I am afraid this monopoly represents the views of other combinations and monopolies in the United States that are seeking to exploit the public. Under the guise of "protection," crimes have been committed against the American consumer. The American people have been robbed and plundered by corporations that have secured legislation in their behalf. It has been contended that the dye interest was an infant inductor, and with the dye interest was an infant inductor, and with the dye interest was an infant inductor. dustry, and without protection it could not survive. As I have stated, "protection" was granted, but that does not satisfy this gigantic trust which has risen in our country. There were many who felt that the development of the dye industry was important, and they were willing to grant a reasonable tariff if by so doing the industry could be established. Not only was the industry established, but within the past few years it has made millions. I am told that its plants have been amortized, and that its profits have been stupendous.

I have before me a report of the Allied Chemical & Dye Corporation which shows that on December 31, 1920, its current assets amounted to more than $95,000,000. Its gross income for the year ending on that day, after provision for de-preciation, and so forth, had been made, totaled nearly $30,000,-000, and its net income was nearly $19,000,000, with taxes amounting to $2,563,000. This corporation acquired on December 31, 1920, in exchange for stock of its preferred and common stock, substantially all of the outstanding stock, both preferred and common, of the General Chemical Co., Solvay Process Co., the Semet-Solvay Co., the Barrett Co., and the National Aniline & Chemical Co. (Inc.). The general balance sheet shows under the head of "assets" that this company has property of the value of $141,000,000, and its other assets bring the grand total of its general assets to the sum of $282,743,000. E. I. DuPont de Nemours & Co., as Senators know, is engaged in the dye business. It is one of the large corporations controlling that industry in the United States. To contend that this corporation is an infant, or needs legislation for its protection, is preposterous. The total assets of this company, as shown by its balance sheet of December 31, 1920, amount to more than $280,000,000.

I am not objecting, Mr. President, to large corporations, nor do I complain about individuals uniting for the purpose of carrying on legitimate business undertakings. Our industrial system calls for large investments and for corporations possessing great resources. I am protesting, however, against individuals or corporations forming combinations in restraint of trade or for the purpose of stifling competition. I am protesting against the organization of trusts and monopolies and their control, or attempted control, of legislation, either State or National. Our Nation has grown economically and industrially under the competitive theory. The law of supply and demand has resulted in industrial progress and in the development of our country. There has been a mighty struggle for a number of years between the people and monopolistic greed. Combinations have been formed for the purpose of exploiting the people and of imposing upon consumers burdens of an intolerable character. Some of the corporations existing in our country today have reached their positions of financial strength and power, not in a legitimate way but by plundering the people.

The American people are willing for legitimate profits to be They welcome the investment of capital and they desire to see all forms of industry prosperous and progressive, but the American people do object to monopolies dominating our industrial life or our political institutions. This is a Government of the people, and it is their right to live under just and equitable laws. The basis of democracy is a denial of special privileges and an insistence upon the doctrine of equal rights to all. It looks, however, as though we are to have a return of corporations and trusts and monopolies and com-binations—vicious and oppressive organizations preying and feeding upon the people. They are attempting to take the Government under their wing. It would seem that already some of these so-called "infant" industries have taken the majority under their powerful and extended wings. Are we to have a return of corporations and monopolies instead of a rule of the people?

It was shown by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Moses] that the dye industry had spent thousands of dollars in securing legislation. Are these corporations and monopolies to intrench themselves in the Capitol and to write tariff schedules, as in the past they were permitted to do? My informa-tion is that corporations and individuals seeking legislation are here demanding not only a pound of flesh, the granting of which would mean the oppression of the people, but insisting upon cutting deeper and longer strips from the economic and industrial body of the Nation, the result of which would inevitably be the further exploitation of the great consuming public. Whenever tariff legislation is proposed the beneficiaries of special interests and trusts are to be found.

Mr. President, I believe in what has been denominated the "capitalistic" theory of government—that is, in the right of individuals to own and control property and to make contracts. I believe in a policy that develops individualism, encourages initiative, promotes self-reliance, strengthens local self-government, and breeds a nation of independent, virile, and self-governing people. I am opposed to communism and socialism and all political and economic philosophies which are destructive of the doctrines and spirit which constitute the base of our form of government. But wise systems of government may perish if evils are permitted to exist. This is a Republic so long as it is a government of by, and for the people.

long as it is a government of, by, and for the people.

It will cease to be a Republic if it becomes a government of monopolies and combinations and trusts which control the fountains of legislation, and the political authority and power of the people to secure their own aggrandizement and to execute their own sinister and selfish purposes. There will be no communism, and socialism will not spread in the United States, if we adhere to the democratic principles laid down by the fathers. If the rights of property and the rights of individuals are respected, if the competitive system is maintained, and if each individual feels that he has a fair show and equal opportunities, there will be no soil under the flag upon which will grow the poisonous or rank weeds of communism or destructive socialism.

But I want to warn those who are engaged in business, those who have formed corporations and whose interests and holdings are extensive and whose properties are of great value, that they owe an obligation to this Republic, to their States, and to the people. If they misuse their corporate powers, or if they form trusts and combinations which destroy competition, or throttle individual enterprise and initiative, if they seek to dominate business, control legislation, and bring within the sphere of their influence and authority the functions and powers of governmental authority, State or national, they will be betrayers of their country and the precursors of their own downfall. There can be no absolutism in this Government and there can be no autocracy and absolutism in business. must remain a free country with free opportunity for the humblest. The man of small means must have his chance for success. No legislative pitfalls must be dug to trap the honest and progressive business man. If socialism grows and economic heresies are developed, capital will be largely responsible. If capital abuses its opportunities and if monopolies and combinations are permitted to thrive and to exercise their despotic power, an irresistible demand will develop, either for nationalization of many industries or for governmental control of the

If men engaged in big business and in great enterprises are wise, they will deal fairly with the public. They will seek no special privileges. They will desire no advantages. will not covet enormous dividends. They will be satisfied with reasonable returns upon their investments and will find compensation in the joys arising from the knowledge that they have been of service to the people. Big business should seek the public weal and the advancement of the cause of the people. It should seek to cheapen products and not enhance their prices. It should seek cheaper transportation, improved methods of production, and greater rewards for labor. It should be more interested in bringing joy and happiness to those who toil and to lighten their burdens and to bring sunlight into their lives than in the amassing of stupendous fortunes and piling up assets to be estimated in hundreds of millions, if not in billions. The capitalistic system can be preserved, and our economic system will be maintained so long as justice and fair dealing obtain. Unrest, discontent, and violent agitation will follow the unrestrained exercise of monopolistic power. When the people believe that corporations and combinations organized in restraint of trade and to destroy competition control the Government, or influence legislation or become oppressive and dangerous to the rights of the people, legislation will be demanded by the people, either for governmental ownership, as I have indicated, or for governmental control.

The remedies suggested for monopolistic evils may be worse than the disease and wholly illusive, and foolish remedies, political and economic, have often, as history teaches, been projected, but they will be offered if economic oppression is permitted. If my voice could be heard, I would raise it in an appeal to the business men throughout our broad land to follow the paths of justice and righteousness and fair dealing. If big business—those who have control of great masses of capital—desire industrial peace and national prosperity, they must apply in their business activities the golden rule and the principles of justice and of fair dealing. This is a time for plain speaking. Corporations and trusts must be told that they can not run this Government; that they must not put their impious hands upon the States or the Federal Government or seek to dictate their policies or control their political and governmental activities. I have heretofore stated to those engaged in bus ness that their peace and prosperity and the peace and prosperity and happiness of the American people rest largely in their hands—in the hands of those who are interested in corporations and business enterprises and control many of the important resources of our country.

Recently we had before us the packers' bill. There is a measure now pending known as the coal bill. The passage of these and other measures will be demanded by the American people unless the corporations of our country deal prudently and fairly with the people. If they destroy competition, if they interfere with the law of supply and demand, if they seek to oppress and exploit the people, then the day of reckoning will come, and corporations will be destroyed or they will be put into strait-jackets and controlled by Federal agencies and State agencies, which, though they will destroy their efficiency, will attempt to curb their voracity and cupidity. I repeat it is for the interest of the American capitalist and the American business man that he conduct his business activities in harmony with the highest principles of morality and justice.

During the war combinations were formed that did stifle competition and interfere with the operation of the law of supply and demand. They were tolerated because of war conditions, but the war is over and monopolies and trusts must cease their wicked exactions and their criminal exploitations.

The Lockwood committee in New York is rendering a great public service in revealing the combinations, criminal and cowardly, which have been robbing and plundering the people. Mr. Untermeyer has uncovered evils and exposed to the public the hideous forms of thieving and scoundrelly combinations. Other States should immediately conduct investigations to ascertain the machinations and criminal activities of corporations and combinations intrastate in character, and there should be sent to the penitentiary these malefactors who have preyed and are still preying upon the unprotected public.

I hope the new Attorney General of the United States will make the Sherman antitrust law a sharp and shining sword for the punishment of these combinations engaged in interstate commerce, whose criminal operations have been so oppressive. There are trusts and monopolies in our land. They are cynical and callous and treat with the utmost contempt Federal and State statutes whose provisions they have so flagrantly violated. I repeat, Mr. President, what I suggested a moment ago, that the perpetuity of this Republic depends upon internal forces.

No foe from without can ever destroy this Republic. It is in danger from no foreign power. Its enemies are internal. It will continue to be the light of the world; it will continue to be an example to the world, so long as the principles embodied in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States are adhered to, and so long as we are guided by the spirit of justice which in the end must dominate and regn supreme throughout the world.

A few days ago I offered a resolution which was referred to the Judiciary Committee. Believing that lobbies were in Washington and that interests would appear for the purpose of securing legislation I felt that an investigation upon the part of Congress was important. I asked for the appointment of a special committee which would be authorized and instructed to investigate the charges that corporations and combinat ons engaged in various lines of trade and commerce and industry are carrying on extensive propaganda throughout the country and are maintaining offices and lobbies in Washington for the purpose of influencing legislation. I also asked that the dye industry be investigated and a report made as to whether it is controlled by a combination of corporations and whether it is a monopoly and has employed agents and attorneys to influence Congress in behalf of special legislation in its interest. resolution is much broader than this, but I shall not discuss its provisions at this time. I sincerely hope that the Judiciary Committee will report the resolution. In my opinion, the situation calls for an exhaustive investigation along the lines indicated in the resolution. At a later date I shall discuss the question of monopolies and their effects upon our economic system, and also the Sherman antitrust law and its achievements as well as its infirmities. At this time I shall not further trespass upon the Senate.

NEGOTIATION OF TREATIES.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask for the publication as a public document of certain committee reports of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the House, certain public documents in relation to the power of the President to negotiate treaties, these documents having been hitherto printed and the copies having been exhausted, a report of Mr. Henry Winter Davis, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House in relation to the Mexican situation at the time of Maximilian, and a public document by the late Senator Hale, of Maine, in relation to the power to recognize a new State. I ask that these may be printed in one document as a public document.

Mr. HARRISON. All those have been printed and are now public documents, so that it is merely a reprint which is re-

Mr. BRANDEGEE. One or two of them are reports of committees and have never been printed as a public document, but simply printed as reports, but it was long ago, some of them back in the time of President Lincoln's administration in 1864, and the copies are very nearly exhausted. I think it would be of considerable interest if they could be correlated and printed in one Senate document so that Senators engaged in looking up this question may have them all in one document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON of Georgia in the chair). Are the documents sent to the desk in the order in which the Senator would like to have them printed?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I can arrange that with the printing clerk. I should like to have in connection with it certain portions of the debate upon the Cuban situation printed. I will furnish the portions to the printing clerk later. I wish to have this included in the document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the order will be made as requested by the Senator from Connecticut.

JOINT COMMISSION OF AGRICULTURAL INQUIRY.

Mr. GOODING. I ask unanimous consent out of order to report back from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with amendments Senate concurrent resolution 4. It is the unanimous report of the committee on the concurrent resolution submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenboor] on the 12th instant, proposing to create a joint commission to be known as the joint commission of agricultural inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. In the resolution provision is made for an appropriation to be expended out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and I suppose under the law before the resolution goes to the calendar or before the Senate can act on it, it will have to be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Mr. GOODING. Yes: I had that reference in view.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Curtis in the chair). The quest'on is on the next committee amendment passed over, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The next committee amendment passed over was, on page 27, after line 12, to insert the following:

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to acquire 1,000 acres, more or less, at or near Camp Kearny, Calif., for a site for a lighter-than-air aviation station and to pay for the same an average price of not exceeding $100 per acre out of any funds appropriated for aviation pur-

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that amendment went over at my request. If there be no other Senator who desires to make any objection concerning it, I desire to withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment passed over.

The next committee amendment passed over was, under the head of "Pay of the Navy," on page 30, line 22, to strike out "$72,421,647" and to insert "$87,798,447."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there are several Senators who are interested in the amendment which has just been stated who are absent. I am therefore compelled to suggest the absence of a quorum in order that they may come to the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the committee amendment passed over, which will be again stated by the Secretary.

The reading clerk again stated the committee amendment which had been passed over.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE resumed the speech begun by him on Monday the 16th instant. After having spoken for about three

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Wisconsin to say that he has concluded for the present?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If it is agreeable to the Senate, I shall be glad to yield the floor at this time. I can not finish to-night. I can finish in a short time to-morrow.

Mr. LODGE. If there are other Senators who are ready to speak, I think it would be well to go on a little longer to-night, and to-morrow the Senator can take the floor again.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield the floor for the present, Mr.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The reading clerk called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. Caraway, Mr. Dillingham, Mr. Gooding, Mr. Nicholson, Mr. Simmons, Mr. Sterling, Mr. Sutherland, and Mr. Townsend answered to their names when called.

Mr. CAMERON, Mr. BROUSSARD, Mr. KING, Mr. CAPPER, Mr. ASHURST, Mr. ERNST, Mr. McKINLEY, Mr. LADD, Mr. McCor-MICK, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. CURTIS, and Mr. SHORTRIDGE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-nine Senators have anwered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I desire to talk for a few minutes upon the pending amendment, which is the amendment increasing the appropriation for pay of the Navy from $72,-421,647 to $87,798,447. This is the amendment in which is involved the increase of the personnel of the Navy from 100,000, as provided in the bill as it passed the House, to 120,000 as provided by this amendment. So the question which will really be settled by the vote upon this amendment is whether for the next fiscal year we will provide for an enlisted personnel in the Navy of 100,000 men or an enlisted personnel in the Navy of 120,000 men, and that question involves an increased expenditure of more than $15,000,000.

If it be not necessary to maintain the Navy for the next fiscal year with a personnel of more than 100,000, this $15,-000,000 increase proposed by the committee will be absolutely wasted. I contend, Mr. President, that there can be not the slightest excuse for maintaining the Navy during the next fiscal year with a personnel of 120,000 men.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield. Mr. POMERENE. Do I understand the Senator to say that the increase of 20,000 men, which is contemplated by the report of the Senate committee, over and above the House provision, would mean an increase of only $15,000,000?

Mr. LENROOT. That is the conclusion I draw from this amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. So that, as the Senate committee bill makes an appropriation of $100,000,000 over and above the bill as it passed the House, as I understand, it is the Senator's opinion, then, that $85,000,000 means new or additional ships or harbor improvements?

Mr. LENROOT. No; because there are other increases in the bill which were made upon the theory of this amendment being adopted; for instance, subsistence of 20,000 more men than were contemplated in the bill as it passed the House. I can not give the exact amount which would be saved if the personnel were kept down to 100,000, but it would be much more than the $15,000,000 involved in this particular amendment.

Mr. POMERENE. Then, Mr. President, may I ask what items of expenditure are included in the $15,000,000?

Mr. LENROOT. This is just pay of the enlisted personnel of the Navy

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What law at present fixes the number of men in the Navy?

Mr. LENROOT. The number is fixed at 140,000 as the

Mr. POINDEXTER. One hundred and forty-three thousand. Mr. LENROOT. One hundred and forty-three thousand, to be accurate.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is fixed by existing law?

Mr. LENROOT. By existing law. Mr. President, there is exactly the same situation in the Navy that we have in the The Army reorganization bill provides for an Army of 280,000 men as a maximum, but at the last session of Congress, by joint resolution, the Secretary of War, as Senators will remember, was instructed to cease enlistments in the Army until the Army should be reduced to 175,000 men.

The Army appropriation bill passed by the House at this session, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, and now upon the calendar, appropriated for an Army of 150,000. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs have increased that to 175,000, or 110,000 less than the Army reorganization act authorizes. In other words, because of the absolute necessity of reducing the expenses of the Government, we have cut down the authorized strength of the Army by more than 40 per cent, while in the Navy, where the same reason for economy exists, the Senate committee proposes that the personnel of the Navy shall be only 20,000 less than its full authorized strength.

Mr. President, the determining question in deciding whether we shall have a personnel of 100,000 or a personnel of 120,000 in the next fiscal year seems to me ought to be, What will there be for the Navy to do? Does any Senator upon this floor believe for a single moment that there is any possibility whatever of our being engaged in any war in the next year, or the next two years, or the next five years, which will require a personnel of more than 100,000 men? I can not believe that there is any Senator who believes that. Then what is the reason for saddling this extra expense upon the country at this time?

It is said by members of the committee that unless we do that we will not be able to man all the ships we have. But the committee says that when this 1916 program approaches completion they are going to abandon some of these ships, they are going to treat them as junk, and put the men aboard the new Unless we need these ships which are so soon to be treated as junk, why could they not be treated as junk now, unless there be some possibility at least of their being required in the service?

Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, a similar question recently arose in Parliament respecting the personnel of the British Navy. The navalists and the militarists there insisted upon maintaining 127,000, as I recall, as the maximum personnel. Others insisted that it should be reduced, and finally there was a reduction which was predicated upon the fact that there would be an abandonment of many of the old ships; that they would be junked, and that the men would be placed upon the more recently constructed vessels.

There is no reason in the world, as the Senator has said, why we should not dispose of hundreds of the old ships we now have, because they are obsolete, and they serve no useful purpose. But unfortunately some in the Navy have been obsessed with the idea that we should present the appearance of having a tremendous armada, and we sent to the Pacific coast a lot of obsolete ships, supposing that they would make an imposing appearance. They are there now, useless, obsolete, obsolete, and costing the Government millions of dollars great roots for the cost of the cost of lars every year for their maintenance.

Mr. LENROOT. That is true, Mr. President, and there could not be the slightest reason for that action, unless there be some possibility that even these ships shall be called into service in war with some great power during the next fiscal year.

Mr. President, Japan is constantly being held up before the Senate and before the country as one with which we may almost any day become involved in war. I am not going into that, but I do say this, that I do not believe there is a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, I do not believe there is a man in the United States of America, whatever views he may hold as to the possibility of complications with Japan in the future, who believes for a single instant that there is the slightest possibility of war with Japan within the next year, or two years, or five years.

With reference to this Japan scare, there is a curious thing, Mr. President, to which I wish to call attention. We have an Intelligence Division in the Navy and we have an Intelligence Division in the Army, and there are in those organizations bright men, but I have not been able to find that we can get any accurate information as to what Japan is doing, and I am just a little suspicious, Mr. President, just a little suspicious, that if the truth is known concerning Japan's activities, and it does not fit in with the scheme for enlarging the Navy with tremendous appropriations at this time, there are some people who do not care to have the facts made known.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the Senator does not mean to imply that it is not known here that four battle cruisers are being built in Japan?

Mr. LENROOT. No; I am talking about personnel now. When we come to the construction part of it, I think the Senator will admit that when Japan builds her four cruisers we can finish two of our cruisers and then be away ahead of Japan.

But, as to what Japan is doing, once in a while we get some news, Mr. President, that is not all of this character, because most of it seems to come just at a time when it is hoped it may induce Senators to vote for the highest personnel and the largest amount of appropriations. Last week I cut this clipping out of the New York Times, referring to what Japan is doing to-day with the personnel of her Navy, and I wish to read it:

JAPAN REDUCING NAVY—GOVERNMENT HAS ORDERED SECOND SQUADRON RETURED FROM SERVICE, (Copyright, 1921, by the Chicago Tribune Co.)

HONOLULU, May 15.

A Tokyo dispatch to Nippu Jiji, a local Japanese daily, says a special naval commission appointed by the navy department to investigate conditions of the department relative to finances has recommended that the second squadron and a portion of the third be retired from active operation to reduce maintenance costs. The dispatch says the Government has issued orders to this effect.

The Japanese War Department has also appointed a special committee, the dispatch continues, to investigate the army administration with a view to making recommendations for a reduction in expenses.

That is what Japan is doing, and yet it is proposed by the committee to increase by 20.000 men the personnel provided by the House, at an expenditure of $15,000,000 in pay alone, and I do not know how many million dollars in other items of the bill affected by the 20,000 increase.

I said the other day-and I wish to repeat to-day-that this Government must reduce its expenditures. If we do not do so, the people of the United States will find somebody who will. Expenditures can be reduced. They can be reduced in this bill without in the slightest degree affecting the safety and the protection of the United States

What is the Navy for? Why, in the minds of some people it seems to be thought that we must have a Navy to provide commands for naval officers, to make a fine showing upon the sea, but I have always had an idea that the purpose of the Navy was to defend and protect the United States. When there is no possible danger to the United States in the immediate future, it is the duty of the Congress to economize in these expenditures. Here is one place where we can economize to the extent of a good many million dollars.

I wish some members—yes, I wish every member—of the Naval Affairs Committee could go away from the Senate for a little while and go about the country and find out what people are thinking and saying about some of these questions. I know what the sentiment is in the Middle West, although I have not been there of late. I have had occasion to come in contact with business men of the East and men coming to the East from every part of the country. You may talk to these men about the League of Nations and they are mildly interested. You may talk to them about the place of the United States upon the Reparations Commission and the supreme council and they are interested; yes. You may talk to them about a tariff and they show some interest. But the one thing they are thinking about and talking about to-day is taxation and Government expenditures. They are expecting from this Congress, and they have a right to expect from this Congress, a reduction in expenses; but there is very little prospect of it if the Senate shall adopt increases like this, amounting to $100,000,000, in the naval bill alone.

Why, we hear that we had a referendum last November, and we had. But I wish to say to you deliberately that if this bill with these increases could be submitted to the people of the United States for a vote the bill would be beaten worse than Cox was last November. It would not, in my judgment, carry a single State of the Union, because the South would vote against it as well as the North.

That is the situation we are in to-day. I wonder where Republican members of the Naval Affairs Committee think the Republican Party is going to carry out its pledges with such increases as this proposed in the bill. I wonder where those gentlemen think this Government is going to economize with the increases they propose in the bill? We have certain fixed charges. We have to pay the interest upon our Liberty bonds. We have to expend money in increasing amount for the care of our disabled soldiers and sailors. We ought to, we must, and we will do that. But if we can not make any reduction at a time like this, when never in the history of the United States was there less danger from attack from any power within the next five years than now, then I do not know when it could be

Upon the matter of personnel, the acting chairman of the committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poindexter] told us the other day that in 1916 the personnel of the Navy was only 55,000 at a time when the European war had been going on for two years, at a time when any man knew that we were in great danger and that at any moment we might be engaged in war. Then it was proposed by the bill as sent to us from the House to almost double that number, and yet the Senate committee is not satisfied with that and proposes 20,000 additional. I do not know what can be in the minds of the members of the committee to propose an increase of $100,000,000 in a bill appropriating $500,000,000 for the support of the Navy for the coming year. If it is going to cost that for the coming year, what is it going to cost the country when this naval program is completed?

I hope to have something to say about the construction program before the debate is concluded, but I am now confining myself to the question of personnel. In conclusion, I wish to say that here is the opportunity to save twenty-five or thirty million dollars. The country expects us to avail ourselves of that opportunity. The country does not support the Committee on Naval Affairs in these increases, and I hope that the Senate, responding to the sentiment of the country, will at least vote down this amendment and thus save $15,000,000.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Before the Senator takes his seat I wish to ask him what is the date of the law fixing the personnel of the Navy at 143,000?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Washington can tell better than I. It was about 1917, if I am not mistaken. It was either just before the war or just after we got into it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The date of that law was July 1, 1918. Mr. SHEPPARD. What was the number authorized before

Mr. KING. Fifty-five thousand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The peace basis prior to the war, my recollection is, was in the neighborhood of 60,000.

Mr. LODGE. And it is now increased to 132,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There were no appropriations made, as has just been pointed out by the Senator from Wisconsin, until the time when we were on the point of actually entering into the war with Germany. We continued upon a peace basis, which the United States had occupied so many times, long after it became evident that we were going to be involved in the war. with the result that the people of the country are burdened with several billions of dollars of taxes which otherwise might have been avoided.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand the peace basis was about

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Monday, May 23, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou art the Ancient of Days, the infinite I am, who made life and who will preserve and redeem it. Thy holy presence we humbly linger at the doorway of labor. We thank Thee that life is a gift that acquires greater value Impress us that mercy is more acceptable than sacrifice, and goodness more to be desired than greatness, and lead us on, "o'er moor and fen," until heaven breaks in sight. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

EMERGENCY TARIFF-CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on H. R. 2435, the emergency tariff bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan calls up the conference report on the bill H. R. 2435, the emergency tariff bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?
There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The report and statement are as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2435) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

> "TITLE II .- ANTIDUMPING. "DUMPING INVESTIGATION.

"Sec. 201. (a) That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury (hereinafter in this act called the 'Secretary'), after such investigation as he deems necessary, finds that an industry in the United States is being or is likely to be injured, or is prevented from being established, by reason of the importation into the United States of a class or kind of foreign merchandise, and that merchandise of such class or kind is being sold or is likely to be sold in the United States or elsewhere at less than its fair value, then he shall make such finding public to the extent he deems necessary, together with a description of the class or kind of merchandise to which it applies in such detail as may be necessary for the guidance of the appraising officers.

(b) Whenever, in the case of any imported merchandise of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has not so made public a finding, the appraiser or person acting as appraiser has reason to believe or suspect, from the invoice or other papers or from information presented to him, that the purchase price is less, or that the exporter's sales price is less or likely to be less, than the foreign market value (or, in the absence of such value, than the cost of production) he shall forthwith, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, notify the Secretary of such fact and withhold his appraisement report to the collector as to such merchandise until the further order of the Secretary, or until the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in subdivision (a) in regard to such merchandise.

"SPECIAL DUMPING DUTY.

"Sec. 202. (a) That in the case of all imported merchandise, whether dutiable or free of duty, of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in section 201, and as to which the appraiser or person acting as appraiser has made no appraisement report to the collector before such finding has been so made public, if the purchase price or the ex-porter's sales price is less than the foreign market value (or, in the absence of such value, than the cost of production) there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties imposed thereon by law, a special dumping duty in an amount equal to such difference.

"(b) If it is established to the satisfaction of the appraising officers that the amount of such difference between the purchase price and the foreign market value is wholly or partly due to the fact that the wholesale quantities, in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers for exportation to the United States in the ordinary course of trade, are greater than the wholesale quantities in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country of exportation in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption (or, if not so sold or offered for sale for home consumption, then for exportation to countries other than the United States), then due allowance shall be made therefor in determining the foreign market value for the purposes of this section.

"(c) If it is established to the satisfaction of the appraising officers that the amount of such difference between the exporter's sales price and the foreign market value is wholly or partly due to the fact that the wholesale quantities, in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the United States in the ordinary course of trade, are greater than the wholesale quantities in which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country of exportation in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption (or, if not so sold or offered for sale for home consumption, then for exportation to countries other than the United States), then due allowance shall be made therefor in determining the foreign market value for the purposes of this section.

" PURCHASE PRICE.

"SEC. 203. That for the purposes of this title, the purchase price of imported merchandise shall be the price at which such merchandise has been purchased or agreed to be purchased, prior to the time of exportation, by the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported, plus, when not included in such price, the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, less the amount, if any, included in such price, attributable to any additional costs, charges, and expenses, and United States import duties, incident to bringing the merchandise from the place of shipment in the country of exportation to the place of delivery in the United States; and plus the amount, if not included in such price, of any export tax imposed by the country of exportation on the exportation of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any import duties imposed by the country of exportation which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any taxes imposed in the country of exportation upon the manufacturer, producer, or seller, in respect to the manufacture, production, or sale of the merchandise, which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States.

" EXPORTER'S SALES PRICE.

"SEC. 204. That for the purpose of this title the exporter's sales price of imported merchandise shall be the price at which such merchandise is sold or agreed to be sold in the United States, before or after the time of importation, by or for the account of the exporter, plus, when not included in such price, the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, less (1) the amount, if any, included in such price, attributable to any additional costs, charges, and expenses, and United States import duties, incident to bringing the merchandise from the place of shipment in the country of exportation to the place of delivery in the United States, (2) the amount of the commissions, if any, for selling in the United States the particular merchandise under consideration, (3) an amount equal to the expenses, if any, generally incurred by or for the account of the exporter in the United States in selling identical or sub-stantially identical merchandise, and (4) the amount of any export tax imposed by the country of exportation on the exportation of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any import duties imposed by the country of exportation which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States; and plus the amount of any taxes imposed in the country of exportation upon the manufacturer, producer, or seller in respect to the manufacture, production, or sale of the merchandise, which have been rebated, or which have not been collected, by reason of the exportation of the merchandise to the United States. "FOREIGN MARKET VALUE.

"SEC. 205. That for the purposes of this title the foreign market value of imported merchandise shall be the price, at the time of exportation of such merchandise to the United States, at which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country from which exported, in the usual wholesale quantities and in the ordinary course of trade for home consumption (or, if not so sold or offered for sale for home consumption, then for exportation to countries other than the United States), plus, when not included in such price, the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition packed ready for shipment to the United States, except that in the case of merchandise purchased or agreed to be purchased by the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported, prior to the time of exportation, the foreign market value shall be ascertained as of the date of such purchase or agreement to purchase. In the ascertainment of foreign market value for the purposes of this title, no pretended sale or offer for sale, and no sale or offer for sale intended to establish a fictitious market, shall be taken into account.

"COST OF PRODUCTION.

"SEC. 206. That for the purposes of this title the cost of production of imported merchandise shall be the sum of-

"(1) The cost of materials of, and of fabrication, manipula-tion, or other process employed in manufacturing or producing, identical or substantially identical merchandise, at a time preceding the date of shipment of the particular merchandise under consideration which would ordinarily permit the manufacture or production of the particular merchandise under consideration in the usual course of business;

"(2) The usual general expenses (not less than 10 per cent of such cost) in the case of identical or substantially identical

merchandise:

"(3) The cost of all containers and coverings, and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the particular merchandise under consideration in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States; and "(4) An addition for profit (not less than 8 per cent of the sum of the amounts found under paragraphs (1) and (2)) equal to the profit which is ordinarily added, in the case of merchandise of the same general character as the particular merchandise under consideration, by manufacturers or producers in the country of manufacture or production who are engaged in the same general trade as the manufacturer or producer of the particular merchandise under consideration.

"EXPORTER.

"Sec. 207. That for the purposes of this title the exporter of imported merchandise shall be the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported into the United

"(1) If such person is the agent or principal of the exporter, manufacturer, or producer; or

"(4) If any person or persons, jointly or severally, directly or indirectly, through stock ownership or control or otherwise, own or control in the aggregate 20 per cent or more of the voting power or control in the business carried on by the person by whom or for whose account the merchandise is imported into the United States, and also 20 per cent or more of such power or control in the business of the exporter, manufacturer, or producer.

"OATHS AND BONDS ON ENTRY.

"SEC. 208. That in the case of all imported merchandise, whether dutiable or free of duty, of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in section 201, and delivery of which has not been made by the collector before such finding has been so made public, unless the person by whom or for whose account such merchandise is imported makes oath before the collector, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that he is not an exporter, or unless such person declares under oath at the time of entry, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, the exporter's sales price of such merchandise, it shall be unlawful for the collector to deliver the merchandise until such person has made oath before the collector, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, that the merchandise has not been sold or agreed to be sold by such person, and has given bond to the collector, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary, with sureties approved by the col-lector, in an amount equal to the estimated value of the merchandise, conditioned: (1) that he will report to the collector the exporter's sales price of the merchandise within 30 days after such merchandise has been sold or agreed to be sold in the United States, (2) that he will pay on demand from the collector the amount of special dumping duty, if any, imposed by this title upon such merchandise, and (3) that he will furnish to the collector such information as may be in his possession and as may be necessary for the ascertainment of such duty, and will keep such records as to the sale of such merchandise as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"DUTIES OF APPRAISERS.

"SEC, 209. That in the case of all imported merchandise, whether dutiable or free of duty, of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has made public a finding as provided in section 201, and as to which the appraiser or person acting as appraiser has made no appraisement report to the collector before such finding has been so made public, it shall be the duty of each appraiser or person acting as appraiser, by all reasonable ways and means to ascertain, estimate, and appraise (any invoice or affidavit thereto or statement of cost of production to the contrary notwithstanding) and report to the collector the foreign market value or the cost of production, as the case may be, the purchase price, and the exporter's sales price, and any other facts which the Secretary may deem necessary for the purposes of this title.

"APPEALS AND PROTESTS.

"SEC. 210. That for the purposes of this title the determination of the appraiser or person acting as appraiser as to the foreign market value or the cost of production, as the case may be, the purchase price, and the exporter's sales price, and the action of the collector in assessing special dumping duty, shall have the same force and effect and be subject to the same right of appeal and protest, under the same conditions and subject to the same limitations; and the general appraisers, the Board of General Appraisers, and the Court of Customs Appeals shall have the same jurisdiction, powers, and duties in connection with such appeals and protests as in the case of appeals and protests relating to customs duties under existing law.

"DRAWBACKS,

"SEC. 211. That the special dumping duty imposed by this title shall be treated in all respects as regular customs duties within the meaning of all laws relating to the drawback of customs duties.

"SHORT TITLE.

"SEC. 212. That this title may be cited as the 'Antidumping act, 1921." "TITLE III.—ASSESSMENT OF AD VALOREM DUTIES.

"SEC. 301. That whenever merchandise which is imported into the United States is subject to an ad valorem rate of duty or to a duty based upon or regulated in any manner by the value thereof, duty shall in no case be assessed on a value less than the export value of such merchandise.

"EXPORT VALUE.

"SEC. 302. That for the purpose of this title the export value of imported merchandise shall be the price, at the time of exportation of such merchandise to the United States, at which such or similar merchandise is sold or freely offered for sale to all purchasers in the principal markets of the country from which exported, in the usual wholesale quantities and in the ordinary course of trade, for exportation to the United States, plus, when not included in such price, the cost of all containers and coverings and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition, packed ready for shipment to the United States, less the amount, if any, included in such price, attributable to any additional costs, charges, and expenses, and United States import duties, incident to bringing the merchandise from the place of shipment in the country of exportation to the place of delivery in the United States, and plus, if not included in such price, the amount of any export tax imposed by the country of exportation on merchandise exported to the United States.

"REFERENCES TO 'VALUE' IN EXISTING LAW.

"Sec. 303. (a) That wherever in Title I of this act, or in the tariff act of 1913, as amended, or in any law of the United States in existence at the time of the enactment of this act relative to the appraisement of imported merchandise (except sections 2874, 2976, and 3016 of the Revised Statutes, and section 801 of the revenue act of 1916) reference is made to the value of imported merchandise (irrespective of the particular phraseology used and irrespective of whether or not such phraseology is limited or qualified by words referring to country or port of exportation or principal markets) such reference shall, in respect to all merchandise imported on or after the day this act takes effect, be construed to refer, except as provided in subdivision (b), to actual market value as defined by the law in existence at the time of the enactment of this act, or to export value as defined by section 302 of this act, whichever is higher.

"(b) If the rate of duty upon imported merchandise is in any manner dependent upon the value of any component material thereof, such value shall be an amount determined under the provisions of the tariff act of 1913, as in force prior to the enactment of this act.

" DEFINITIONS.

"Sec. 304. That when used in this title the term 'Tariff act of 1913' means the act entitled 'An act to reduce tariff duties and provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' approved October 3, 1913,

> "TITLE IV .- GENERAL PROVISIONS. " STATEMENTS IN INVOICE.

"Sec. 401. That all invoices of imported merchandise, and all statements in the form of an invoice, in addition to the statements required by law in existence at the time of the enactment of this act, shall contain such other statements as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe, and a statement as to the currency in which made out, specifying whether gold, silver,

"STATEMENTS AT TIME OF ENTRY.

"Sec. 402. That the owner, importer, consignee, or agent, making entry of imported merchandise, shall set forth upon the invoice, or statement in the form of an invoice, and in the entry, in addition to the statements required by the law in existence at the time of the enactment of this act, such statements, under oath if required, as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe. " CONVERSION OF CURRENCY.

"SEC. 403. (a) That section 25 of the act of August 27, 1894. entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes,' is amended to read as

SEC. 25. That the value of foreign coin as expressed in the money of account of the United States shall be that of the pure metal of such coin of standard value; and the values of the standard coins in circulation of the various nations of the world shall be estimated quarterly by the Director of the Mint and be proclaimed by the Secretary of the Treasury quarterly on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year.

"(b) For the purpose of the assessment and collection of duties upon merchandise imported into the United States on or after the day of the enactment of this act, wherever it is necessary to convert foreign currency into currency of the United States, such conversion, except as provided in subdivision (c), shall be made at the values proclaimed by the Secretary under the provisions of section 25 of such act of August 27, 1894, for the quarter in which the merchandise was exported.

"(c) If no such value has been proclaimed, or if the value so proclaimed varies by 5 per cent or more from a value measured by the buying rate in the New York market at noon on the day of exportation, conversion shall be made at a value measured by such buying rate. For the purposes of this subdivision such buying rate shall be the buying rate for cable transfers payable in the foreign currency so to be converted; and shall be determined by the Federal reserve bank of New certified daily to the Secretary, who shall make it public at such times and to such extent as he deems necessary. In ascertaining such buying rate such Federal reserve bank may in its discretion (1) take into consideration the last ascertainable transactions and quotations, whether direct or through the exchange of other currencies, and (2) if there is no market buying rate for such cable transfers, calculate such rate from actual transactions and quotations in demand or time bills of exchange.

"(d) Sections 2903 and 3565 of the Revised Statutes are repealed.

"(e) Section 25 of such act of August 27, 1894, as in force prior to the enactment of this act, and section 2903 of the Revised Statutes, shall remain in force for the assessment and collection of duties on merchandise imported into the United States prior to the day of the enactment of this act.

"INSPECTION OF EXPORTER'S BOOKS,

"Sec. 404. That if any person manufacturing, producing, selling, shipping, or consigning merchandise exported to the United States fails, at the request of the Secretary, or an appraiser, or person acting as appraiser, or a collector, or a general appraiser, or the Board of General Appraisers, as the case may be, to permit a duly accredited officer of the United States to inspect his books, papers, records, accounts, documents, or correspondence, pertaining to the market value or classification of such merchandise, then while such failure continues the Secretary, under regulations prescribed by him, (1) shall prohibit the importa-tion into the United States of merchandise manufactured, produced, sold, shipped or consigned by such person, and (2) may instruct the collectors to withhold delivery of merchandise manufactured, produced, sold, shipped or consigned by such person. If such failure continues for a period of one year from the date of such instructions the collector shall cause the merchandise, unless previously exported, to be sold at public auction as in the case of forfeited merchandise.

"INSPECTION OF IMPORTER'S BOOKS.

"SEC. 405. That if any person importing merchandise into the United States or dealing in imported merchandise fails, at the request of the Secretary, or an appraiser, or person acting as appraiser, or a collector, or a general appraiser, or the Board of General Appraisers, as the case may be, to permit a duly accredited officer of the United States to inspect his books, papers, records, accounts, documents, or correspondence, pertaining to the value or classification of such merchandise, then while such failure continues the Secretary, under regulations prescribed by him, (1) shall prohibit the importation of merchandise into the United States by or for the account of such person, and (2) shall instruct the collectors to withhold delivery of merchandise imported by or for the account of such person. If such failure continues for a period of one year from the date of such instructions the collector shall cause the merchandise, unless previously exported, to be sold at public auction as in the case of forfeited merchandise.

"SEC. 407. That the Secretary shall make rules and regulations necessary for the enforcement of this act.

"TITLE V .- DYES AND CHEMICALS.

"SEC. 501. (a) That on and after the day following the enactment of this act, for the period of three months, no sodium nitrite, no dyes or dyestuffs, including crudes and intermediates, no product or products derived directly or indirectly from coal tar (including crudes, intermediates, finished or partly finished products, and mixtures and compounds of such coaltar products), and no synthetic organic drugs or synthetic organic chemicals, shall be admitted to entry or delivered from customs custody in the United States or in any of its possessions unless the Secretary determines that such article or a satisfactory substitute therefor is not obtainable in the United States or in any of its possessions in sufficient quantities and on reasonable terms as to quality, price and delivery, and that such article in the quantity to be admitted is required for consumption by an actual consumer in the United States or in any of its possessions within six months after receipt of the merchandise.

"(b) Upon the day following the enactment of this act the War Trade Board Section of the Department of State shall cease to exist; all clerks and employees of such War Trade Board Section shall be transferred to and become clerks and employees of the Treasury Department and all books, docu-ments, and other records relating to such dye and chemical import control of such War Trade Board Section shall become books, documents and records of the Treasury Department. All individual licenses issued by such War Trade Board Section prior to the enactment of this act shall remain in effect during the period of their validity, and the importations under such licenses shall be permitted. All unexpended funds and appropriations for the use and maintenance of such War Trade Board Section shall become funds and appropriations available to be expended by the Secretary in the exercise of the power and authority conferred upon him by this section.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2435) to impose temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to said amendment:

TITLE II.

ANTIDUMPING.

The House bill (Title II) imposed a dumping duty on all imported merchandise sold at a price less than the foreign home value, or, in the absence of such value, at less than the value to countries other than the United States, or in the absence of both such values at less than the cost of production.

such values, at less than the cost of production.

The Senate bill adopts the basis of the House bill in determining the dumping duty, but provides that the antidumping title shall apply after an investigation by the Secretary of the Treasury and he has made public his finding that an industry in the United States is being or is likely to be injured, or is prevented from being established by reason of the importations of merchandise into the United States at less than its fair value.

The House recedes from its disagreement to this part of the amendment with the following amendments:

1. An amendment to section 201 of the Senate bill directing the appraiser to withhold his appraisement report to the collector, and to notify the Secretary as to the importation of merchandise of a class or kind as to which the Secretary has not made public a finding and as to which the appraiser has reason to believe or suspect from the invoice or other papers, or from information presented to him, that the purchase price is less, or that the exporters' sale price is less or likely to be less than the foreign market value, or, in the absence of such value, than the cost of production. This addition to the Senate provision enables the appraiser to whose attention the possibility of dumping may be brought to hold up an importation pending an investigation and finding by the Secretary in cases where the Secretary had not previously made a finding public.

2. An amendment to section 205 of the Senate bill, the purpose of which is to prevent the establishment of a fictitious market value by other than bona fide sales of merchandise intended for exportation to the United States. This amendment is substantially a rewording of the proviso in section 207 of the House bill.

3. Minor clerical changes in the interest of clearness.

TITLE III.

ASSESSMENT OF AD VALOREM DUTIES.

This title is a substitute for section 214 of the House bill. Section 214 of the House bill merely amended section 25 of the act entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved August 27, 1894, by adding the following proviso:

In the estimation and liquidation of duties upon any imported merchandise the collector of customs, or persons acting as such, shall not in any case estimate the depreciation in currency at more than 663 per cent.

Title III of the Senate bill substitutes for this proviso a provision requiring the assessment of ad valorem duties upon the basis of the foreign home market value or the export value, whichever is higher. At the present time ad valorem duties are assessed upon the basis of the foreign home market value. The effect of the Senate amendment will be to increase the duties collected in the case of all importation of merchandise in which the export value is higher than the foreign home market value,

The House recedes from its disagreement to this part of the amendment.

TITLE IV.

GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Section 403 of Senate bill-Conversion of currency.

Under the existing law and Executive orders in the case of imported merchandise the United States consuls in the various foreign countries have to certify the value of the currency in which the invoice is made out as of the date of certification. In many cases the consuls fail to make the certification and in such cases it becomes necessary for the importer to pay duty on the gold basis and to ascertain the correct value of the currency, which can only be readjusted in a final reliquidation and is dependent upon the obtaining of a consular certificate.

This frequently results in the assessment of excessive import duties and necessitates a great amount of unnecessary labor on the part of the importer and the Treasury officials in making the proper adjustments in order to refund the excess duties so collected. The present system requires the ascertainment of the value of foreign currency thousands of miles away from the port of entry. The Senate bill will permit the ascertainment of the value of foreign currency in the United States, at which point it is readily ascertainable with a greater degree of accuracy. It provides that in cases in which the foreign currency varies by 5 per cent or more from the value measured by the buying rate in the New York market at noon on the day of exportation, the conversion shall be made at a value measured by such buying rate. The Federal reserve bank of New York is authorized to determine the buying rate and the amendment provides that the buying rate shall be the buying rate for cable transfers payable in the foreign currency to be converted. section requires the Federal reserve bank of New York to certify the exchange rates to the Secretary of the Treasury daily and requires the Secretary to make such rates public for the use of the collectors and appraising officers in assessing duties.

amendment.

TITLE V. DYES AND CHEMICALS.

At the present time the importation of coal-tar dyes and certain chemicals is regulated by means of licenses issued by the War Trade Board section of the State Department, under the provisions of the trading with the enemy act, approved October 6, 1917, and the proclamation of the President of February 14, 1918. The Senate bill provides for the continuing of the present licensing system for a period of six months after the enactment of the amendment. The amendment is deemed to be necessary because the powers of the War Trade Board section of the State Department to grant licenses for the importation of dyes and chemicals are limited to the duration of the present war. The amendment is limited to the dyes and chemicals the importation of which is now limited by licensing, and provides for the granting of licenses upon substantially the same terms as under the requirements for the importation of dyes and chemicals from enemy countries.

The amendment provides for the transfer of the functions of the War Trade Board section, including its clerks and employees, books, documents, and records, to the Treasury Department. The amendment also provides that any unexpended funds and appropriations made for the use and maintenance of the War Trade Board section shall be available, to be expended by the Secretary of the Treasury in the exercise of the power and authority conferred upon him by the amendment.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the part of the amendment relating to dye control, with an amendment making the dye-control provision effective for a period of three months instead of six months, as proposed in the Senate bill.

J. W. FORDNEY,
W. R. GREEN,
NICHOLAS LONGWORTH,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas if he wants any time for debate?

Mr. GARNER. I have had no requests for time on this side. Mr. FORDNEY. Then I will make a brief statement and we will get a vote. Mr. Speaker, there were no changes in the bill affecting any items on which a duty is placed. There is one change in the bill, where the Senate struck out the House provision as to depreciated currency, and the House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment. One of the good reasons for agreeing to that is that we hope in a very short time to present to the House a tariff bill which will place ad valorem duties on American valuation and which will overcome this exchange matter.

The second provision carried in the bill, known as the antidumping provision, was amended in several particulars, and we think the language stricken from the House provision improves the bill. However, it was the best we could get in conference, and we think it is effective and, if anything, better than it was when it left the House.

Those are about the only changes, except one provision for extension of the powers of the War Trade Board for three months in their control over the importation of dyes by licenses, and so on. We do not all agree that that was necessary, yet as a matter of precaution we have left it in the bill. The War Trade Board powers do not expire until peace is declared, and we hope in three months' time to have a new tariff bill that will carry other provisions amply protecting that industry. For that reason we agreed to the provision in question.

Now, unless some gentleman wishes to ask some question or speak upon the matter, I am ready for a vote.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I presume the House understands the situation with reference to this bill. It has been discussed a number of times when the original bill as well as the Senate amendment was pending here. It will be recalled that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] called the attention of the House to the fact that the Senate amendment was bad and could not be considered under the rules of the House, much less to be agreed to by the House. If you will examine the report as well as the statement you will see that the Senate amendment has been agreed to without any substantial change. Subsection (c) authorized the Secretary to make rules and regulations, and the conferees undertook to write the rules and regulations themselves. That is the only difference there is between the Senate amendment and the conference report, with the exception of where the Senate continues a monopoly of the dyestuff industry in one firm in this country for six months, and the conferees decided to compromise by giving it to them for three months. I think they did that in order to get the signature of the gentleman from Iowa to the conference report because his signature was necessary to get a report. I mention this in order that the House may begin to understand, and I think you will continually be impressed by this one fact, that the House of Representatives no longer legislates, no longer maintains the important func-tions of a coordinate branch of the legislative body in our Government, but has yielded and probably will continue to yield everything to the Senate of the United States and to the Executive.

Why, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Longworth] should have had the temerity to report a resolution, as he did last week, in which he undertakes to give the House of Representatives, or at least a committee of the House of Representatives—probably I had better say the Republican membership of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives—the power of legislating, without considering the Senate or the Executive. I can see no merit in that resolution except that it would be the first time in history, so far as I recall, that the House of Representatives was given an advantage over the United States Senate and the executive branch of the Government in making laws. I congratulate the gentleman from Ohio if he succeeds in this effort, but I doubt very much whether he will be able to convince his side of the House of the merits of his resolution, and I feel quite sure that he will never convince the Senate that they should surrender their legislative rights, much less the President of the United States. I repeat, that as far as this report is concerned it purports to give the farmers an emergency tariff for the benefit of the farmer, but as a matter of fact it gives a compensatory duty—and you gentlemen are perfectly familiar with that-to the manufacturers of the United States that is more detrimental to the farmer than the pretended relief.

When we first introduced the emergency tariff bill last December it was for the purpose of giving the farmer some relief, and possibly it would have given him some relief at that time if it could have been put on the statute books, but before the interests that predominate in the Republican Party, both in the House and in the Senate, would permit that modicum of relief for the farmers and the stock raisers of the country to become law, they put upon it in the Senate that provision which compels the farmer in purchasing his needs to purchase them at an increase of from 50 to 150 per cent. You can not sell the product of the farmer abroad unless you can buy goods abroad, and the object of this conference committee report is not to help the farmers, is not to give them protection against foreign competition, but it is to so arrange the customhouse as to prevent the farmer from buying in open competition with the world. Under the provision of this bill any appraiser out of about 240 can stop any importation into the United States. What does he do after he stops it? He immediately has to find out what it costs to produce it in Mexico, in Germany, in England, or France or Italy, before the importation can come in. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] in his amendment proposed to have you ascertain three things before you can import anything into the United States. One of them is what the home market value is, the other whether they are selling to any other couptry as cheaply as they sell to us, and last and most impor-tant, that you should find the cost of production in the foreign market. I submit to any intelligent man in this House that if he was an appraiser at the port of New York and an importation should come there and he should be required to find the cost of production in Italy before he could admit the importation into this country, he would be in a very bad fix. You can not ascertain the cost in this country, much 'ss in Italy at the present time. This provision in this bill has for its purpose the exclusion of importations into the United States. I do not see how it is possible for anyone to vote for it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Garner] comes just as near on this matter as he usually does in matters pertaining to our tariff laws. He shoots with a scattering shot and never hits the bull's-eye, never was known to on a tariff measure. An examination of the provision in the bill in relation to antidumping will disclose that we did not accept the Senate provision. We have materially changed their provision and have made it a good measure. It is all right now. The gentleman says that the object is no good and will not accomplish anything. I remind him of the fact that every item in the bill relating to duties is the same as it was in the bill when it passed here last winter, before the 4th of March. when the gentleman from Texas voted for it. Why does he now say that it accomplishes nothing, when he voted for it then? It would have been a law before the 4th of March if we had had the same man in the White House then as we have

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.
Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman has just stated that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] never hit the bull's-eye on a tariff question.

Mr. FORDNEY. Never.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is not the Texas goat an exception to the

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, he overshot the bull's-eye on the hair of the angora goat matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Is not this the only opportunity that we who represent the farmers and the producers of the country have to get anything whatever for the farmers and the producers?

Mr. FORDNEY. Since 1912 I would say that that is correct. Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. And I am going to vote for the bill.
Mr. FORDNEY. I am glad to hear it. [Cries of "Vote!"] ery well, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have the yeas and nays on that, and for the purpose of obtaining them I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The Clerk called the roll; and there were—yeas 246, nays 98, not voting 86, as follows:

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

On motion of Mr. Fordney, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

REREFERENCE OF A BILL.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 2919, which was referred to the Committee on the Territories, be rereferred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 2919 be rereferred from the Committee on the Territories to the Committee on Mines and Mining. Have the chairmen of both of these committees agreed to the reference?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what is the bill about?

Mr. RHODES. The bill proposes to fix certain conditions under which assessment work may be done on mining claims and is the same class of legislation which the Committee on Mines and Mining has reported and has passed through this House time and again. The chairman of the Committee on Territories and the ranking member, Mr. Weaver, of North Carolina, agreed that the bill was erroneously referred and should have been referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining in the first instance.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6300.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6300, the second deficiency bill, with Mr. Campbell of Kansas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6300, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in apppropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read,

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT. OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to be nominated by the President and appointed by him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per annum and shall perform such duties in the office of the Secretary of the Treasury as may be prescribed by the Secretary or by law, and under the provisions of section 177, Revised Statutes, in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall perform the duties of the Secretary until a successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease, fiscal year 1922, $10,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. WINGO. I will make the point of order or I will withhold it if the gentleman from Iowa desires to explain the item.

The CHAIRMAN. The provision is clearly subject to a point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioner of the public debt, $6,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve it if the gentleman desires to speak, but I had not finished making it. The point of order is that it is not a deficiency but new legislation on a deficiency appropriation bill and unauthorized by law.

Mr. GOOD. There is no question but what it is not authorized by law; I will concede that. The provision for the commissioner of the public debt, $6,000, and commissioner of accounts and deposits at $6,000; division of deposits, chief of the division, $3,500-those positions-I hope I may have the attention of the gentleman from Texas-are positions that are now

Mr. BLANTON. Without authority of law.

Mr. GOOD. Well, they are paid out of this amount.

Mr. BLANTON. But without authority of law.

Mr. GOOD. Now, the commissioner of the public debt without this provision-and I hope I may have at least the attention of the Republican members of the Committee on Rules in explaining some of these items; I do not see any of them here, but I hope eventually some one of that committee aside from the chairman will stray in-

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman desires, I will make a point of order that we have not a quorum and get them here.

Mr. GOOD. No; I do not want to get them here that way. Now, the Government has loaned something like $300,000,000 to the railroads through the director general, and those loans, I think, were made while Mr. Sherley was head of the Finance Division. Under the transportation act loans were made under certificates issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission for almost $200,000,000 more. Then there were loans during the war to the New York, New Haven & Hartford, Boston & Maine, and a great many railroads throughout the United States, Government funds, and now we have loans to railroads of almost $500,000,000. This man, the commissioner of accounts and deposits, is the man in the Treasury Department who collects the interest on that enormous amount of loans. It is a great office, tremendous responsibility, and I am sure that the gentleman from Texas does not want to take from the Treasury Department the only official who has been there, a civil-service employee, grown up in the service, who is doing that kind of work. Now, take the next office-

Mr. BLANTON. Before getting away from this office, how-

I do not want to get away from it.

Mr. BLANTON. This Congress has been functioning now for quite a little while, and there have been legislating committees that have worked for quite a little while; the Rules Committee, while the members were not here when the gentleman wanted them awhile ago, still they function once in awhile, and there has been nothing in the way of bringing proper legislation in here to provide proper officers for the Government through proper channels.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Texas is too big to make points of order on a provision even though carried on an uppropriation bill where it will save money for the Government and where the provision ought to be carried even though there is no authority of law for it. I am sure if the gentleman found that there was a provision in the bill where the Government had so much need of an office like this, an office where it collected interest on $500,000,000, I am sure he will not, simply because there is no provision of law for it, prevent this official from going on in the discharge of his duties. He can not go on if we do not provide the salary, and I sincerely hope that the gentleman will not make points of order on these three positions. They are positions that are there now; they are positions that are needed, and there is not a member of the Committee on Appropriations but what marveled at the fact that these positions were not provided for next year.

Mr. BLANTON. We have gotten along during the last 100 years without a $10,000 officer known as the First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. GOOD. That item is past.

Mr. BLANTON. I will say that the gentleman had that in his bill.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and I think it was important; but it is

Mr. BLANTON. But we have gotten along for the last 100 years without such a $10,000 officer.

Mr. GOOD. But I think I have made it clear that this man ought to be permitted to stay and do this work.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Is not that $10,000 intended for the purpose of bringing all these soldier matters under one head?

Under the law now two of the Assistant Secre-Mr. GOOD. taries go out of office on the 1st of July. The Secretary of the Treasury felt that he would rather have one man that could assist him; that he could attract a great man, a man like Mr. McAdoo brought here, Mr. Leffingwell, who was a great Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; but you can not get that kind of a man, as a usual thing, for $5,000 a year, and you are lucky if you get him for $10,000 a year.

Mr. BLANTON. We have such men in the United States Senate and at the gentleman's desk over there at $7,500 a year.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I want to say, as to the $10,000 item, it is very important, because it is intended to bring the war-risk insurance and all those matters under one head.

Mr. GOOD. That is behind us now; and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order on this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, after the very eloquent presentation by the gentleman whose presence we are going to miss shortly, I will withdraw it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order; and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Commissioner of accounts and deposits, $6,000.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that. Mr. GOOD. I was in error in what I said regarding the preceding item. I thought we were considering the item "Commissioner of accounts and deposits." What I had said before had to do with the office of commissioner of accounts and deposits. The commissioner of public debt, to which the point of order was made, has to do with the transactions of all matters dealing with the public debt. This item here has to do with the collection of interest on foreign loans and collection of interest from the railroads and has been explained.

Mr. WINGO. Here is the trouble. The gentleman himself fell very naturally into error. The gentleman from Maryland has an erroneous idea, too, about it. The reason why I make the point of order is this: These matters ought to be worked out properly before the proper legislative committee. We have a bill pending before the Banking and Currency Committee that carries with it a provision for an undersecretary of the

Mr. GOOD. How long will those bills be pending?
Mr. WINGO. I think they will be up just as quick as your organization permits. There has not been any desire in the committee to filibuster, and you, of course, speak

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that, without my glasses, I caught the words "Commissioner of accounts and deposits" and thought that was the item under consideration and thought that was the item under consideration.

Mr. WINGO. Possibly what you say is true. But there is something else involved besides what the gentleman suggests and what the gentleman from Maryland suggests. There is involved an effort to completely reorganize the Treasury Department and undermine the Federal reserve system and destroy one of the fundamentals of the system.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; nothing of the kind.

Mr. WINGO. I think I know more than the gentleman does about that, in view of what was said the other day and from the evidence before the committee. If the gentleman has read the speech of the chairman of that committee, made at St. Louis day before yesterday, he would see what is proposed. Has the gentleman read that speech?

Mr. GOOD. No.

Mr. WINGO. Did the Secretary of the Treasury undertake to explain the situation to you?

Mr. GOOD. What situation?

Mr. WINGO. This very thing, involving all these changes, the necessity for it, and what the plan is.

Mr. GOOD. The Secretary of the Treasury explained the necessity for carrying these positions.

Mr. WINGO. He explained one of them. Here is the proposition: It may be, and I am inclined to think there ought to be, a rearrangement, and I am not opposing an Assistant Secretary; but I think the matter ought to come in by well-considered legislation from the committee.

Mr. GOOD. We have passed that. The gentleman made a point of order to that. We now have a new item.

Mr. WINGO. And I am insisting that this item is involved the same general plan.

Mr. GOOD. Not at all.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman knows all about it, all right.

He has already refreshed us with lack of information.

Mr. GOOD. Here are three civil-service employees. are now performing this service. The commissioner of public debt is receiving $6,000 a year now and received it last year, and I am only asking that during the next year, when he will have the same duties to perform that he had under Mr. McAdoo and Mr. Glass, and Mr. Houston, that the present Secretary shall have an adequate force. I am asking that there shall be a commissioner of public accounts and deposits, who shall look after the collection of the interest on foreign loans and the interest on railroad loans. I am asking also that there shall be the division of deposits to look after the interest on almost $300,000,000 of regular and special deposits of national banks. Now, those positions are all there now; they have been there, all of them, and the Secretary says he needs them all, and I think he does. The present Secretary, Mr. Mellon, has these positions under him, but after July 1 he will loose them all and will also loose two Assistant Secretaries. I think they are absolutely necessary for the Government to function in a healthy way, until, at least, we have forced from the Treasury Department many of its nonfiscal duties. And then I think these are bureaus that will have to function in the Treasury Department, no matter what changes you make in our Federal banking law

Mr. WINGO. The trouble with the gentleman is, Mr. Chairman, that he still fails to grasp the proposition that there is pending a general reorganization proposition that will do away with some of these things.

Mr. GOOD. Not any of these things.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman says that. Maybe I am misinformed. Maybe they do want to divorce the Treasury from the control of fiscal affairs. I know it is proposed to absolutely take away from the control of the Treasury the Federal reserve system. It is proposed to take the Secretary of the Treasury off the board and create an undersecretary, who may act in his stead, and have these bureau chiefs functioning around him independently.

Now, it may be necessary. I am not foreclosing myself on that. But I think we ought to take not more than one bite at the cherry, and it ought to go out here, because in 10 days time you will have a bill in here that will take care of the whole thing.

Mr. GOOD. Of course, the gentleman does not say that even by divorcing the Secretary's office from the nonfiscal duties you can divorce it from the public debt or the matter of accounts and deposits or the division of deposits?

Mr. WINGO. I am not trying to do anything of that sort, I am just calling attention to the fact that this administration wants to do it, and I suggest that if they do it they should do it in a regular and proper way.

Mr. GOOD. As to the other item, there was a good deal of discussion concerning the First Assistant Secretary, but as to

Mr. WINGO. I think the Committee on Banking and Currency ought to report on it.

Mr. GOOD. But as to these three items of civil-service employees, they are there now, and there is nobody to take their places or do their work. You are going to kick out into the cold some men who have grown up in the public service, men who are splendid officials. I do not know whether they are Democrats or Republicans, but they have been coming before the Committee on Appropriations long enough for us to know that they know their business and are doing their work well. It was the opinion not only of the Republican members but of all the Democratic members on the subcommittee that considered the matter that these three places ought to be put in

Mr. WINGO. Who ever heard of anybody being put out in the cold? I do not want them to be put out into the cold. just want their functions and their salaries to be fixed by law and provided for in the regular way.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing pending before the committee.

Mr. WINGO. I was reserving a point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The reservation has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I did not know it. I was observing the cus-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Wingo] says that I fell into an error in regard to this matter. Not from what I can understand have I lated error. There are two bills. The purport of them is to centralize all the soldier matters under one head, either under a commission or under the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and I understand the consensus of opinion is that to centralize all the soldier relief matters under the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is the better plan. I understand a very able man who was here under Mr. McAdoo has consented to take this position as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury and handle all these soldier matters. The soldiers want a centralized head. They have retained this able man who came under Mr. McAdoo and proved a great organizer and executive. He is to take charge of this soldier work, to which he will be appointed if he has not already been. All war-risk work, the vocational education and training, rehabilitation, and so forth, will be consolidated, which will benefit every branch of that service. Under present conditions it is necessary to go from one place to another and see them pass the buck from one officer to another until everybody gets tired and nothing is accomplished,

Mr. WINGO. This man is not the man that they have in mind. This is the man who is going to be on the Federal Reserve Board and be Deputy Secretary while the Secretary is away.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman did not specialize as to which point I was in error. I knew I was not in error on the one I was speaking about.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Deposits: Chief of division, $3,500; assistant chief of division, $2,500; clerks—one $2,250, one $2,000, one $1,800, one $1,600, one $1,400; messenger, $840; assistant messenger, $720; in all, $16,610.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. I hope the gentleman will reserve it.
Mr. WINGO. I will reserve it.
Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I want to make this statement: In this division the salaries are paid out of the indefinite appropriation for expense of loans.

Mr. WINGO. Why was it not carried in the bill? Mr. GOOD. It is in the indefinite appropriation carried in the revenue act authorizing the issuance of bonds, as the gentleman knows, and ceases to be effective after the 1st of July for this purpose. This whole organization has to do with $24,-000,000 deposited by the National Government in the regular Government depositaries, and $270,000,000 deposited in the national banks by the Government as special deposits, and every day this force is determining how much interest is due from each of these national banks.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. And yet the gentleman knows that there is absolutely no authority of law whatever for these positions. They have been functioning without authority of law,

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman wants to cut them out, it is

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will yield to the gentleman. Mr. WALSH. Was not the expense of this division authorized under the authority of law for the issuance of these

Mr. GOOD. Yes. The trouble is— Mr. WALSH. You do not have to itemize each piece of paper and each clerk.

Mr. GOOD. This is authorized out of the expense of loans, and the expense of loans is not available for next year.

Mr. WALSH. It is a deficiency under the expense of loans. There is authority of law for the employment of these particular classes of employees.

Mr. GOOD. Not out of this fund for the next year.

Mr. WALSH. Under existing law?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; but that fund ceases to exist at the end of the fiscal year. We were trying to carry over the force for another year and continue that part of the act in force.

Mr. SNELL, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD, Yes.

Mr. SNELL. Was any application made to the Committee on Appropriations by the previous Secretary of the Treasury to take care of these activities?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. This was carried on the legislative bill, but went out on a point of order. It was not restored by the Senate. Quite a number of other items went out of the bill on points of order. But here we are at the beginning of the new year, and yet we have no law creating this division and no authority to make the appropriation, and we believe it would be far better to stand here as Representatives and be responsible for asking for legislation that is necessary in order that the Government may function in a healthy way rather than that some of its very important functions should die simply because we have by our own act put upon ourselves the stamp of inefficiency to legislate.

Mr. SNELL. Has there been any effort to get legislation in this House to make it in order?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know. We are not a legislative committee.

Mr. SNELL. Why were not the people interested active in getting legislation?

Mr. WINGO. What would have happened if we had not had an extra session?

Mr. SNELL. Why is the gentleman from Iowa putting the responsibility up to the Committee on Rules?

Mr. GOOD. They are responsible for not bringing out a rule making it in order when they see that the functions of the Government must stop unless a rule is brought in making them in order. I do not know whether this would go to the Judiciary Committee or to the Ways and Means Committee or where it should go. I have not studied that, but I do know it is important to act at once.

Mr. SNELL. Whenever you show me that some reasonable effort has been made to get proper legislation and that you could not get it through, then I, as a member of the Committee on Rules, am perfectly willing to act in this case, and I am perfectly willing to take the responsibility; but I want to know that a reasonable effort has been made along regular channels before asking the Rules Committee to take action.

We are not acting as guardians for the Rules Mr. GOOD.

Committee

Mr. SNELL. We are not asking anybody to act as our guardians, either. [Laughter.]
Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of harmony I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order. Does the gentleman from Iowa state that the law authorizing the positions appropriated for in this item has expired by limitation?

Mr. GOOD. This is a 1922 item. It is for the fiscal year 1922. I shall be very glad to have the Chair rule that this item and all items in the bill for deficiencies for 1922 are in order. I will not concede anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the Chair ought not to be called upon by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to hold that on a deficiency bill making appropriations for deficiencies for the year ending June 30, 1921, and for prior years, to hold that an item was in order making an appropriation for the year 1922 that was not a deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. That is the proposition that is before the committee

The CHAIRMAN. There is a law authorizing these positions as they stand to-day, is there?

Mr. WINGO. No; I do not know of any.
The CHAIRMAN. If so, why did the items go out on a point of order when they were considered on the sundry civil appro-

Mr. GOOD. There is no law authorizing-

The CHAIRMAN. There is no law authorizing these appropriations? Is that the statement of the gentleman from Iowa?

I want the Chair to know the facts. no law authorizing the creating of the division of deposits in the Treasury Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Of course not.

Mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS. These places have been paid for out of an allowance made in the law creating and giving authority for the loan, as I understand it.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS. Now, the appropriation for these amounts and the payment of these salaries is out of the allowance provided for in the law creating the authority for the loan, and that authority, as I understand, expires at the end of the present fiscal year, and from that date there will be no legal authority for the continuance of this service.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it

Mr. WALSH. What is the point of order that is pending against this paragraph?

There is no point of order pending. Chair sustained the point of order that I made that it is not authorized by existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. That point of order was sustained as to the items in lines 21 and 22

Mr. WALSH. I am talking about the paragraph that has just been read. I want to know what point of order is pending. Mr. WINGO. That it is not authorized by existing law. This identical proposition has been passed on once before.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to know from the Chair what the point of order is that is pending?

Mr. BLANTON. I desire to make the point of order if it is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas Wingo] did not state his point of order, but the discussion indicated that the point of order was made because the item was not authorized by law.

Mr. WINGO. It is not a deficiency. I thought it was obvious, and I thought it was stated. I did not know that there was any contention about that; but in order to be clear I will state that it is not authorized by existing law and it is not a deficiency.

Mr. BLANTON. And it is a new position.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on the question whether it is a deficiency or not I should like to make this suggestion; There are a great many rulings on the subject, holding that a certain item in a deficiency bill is not in order because it is not a deficiency; but those rulings were made at a time when various committees had charge of appropriation bills, and the ruling was on the ground that the committee reporting the bill had no jurisdiction over the subject matter. It was always in order, and so held many times, that a deficiency bill carrying an item for the next year which would properly belong in the sundry civil bill was in order, while if it belonged in the Army appropriation bill it was not in order, because the Committee on Appropriations reporting the deficiency bill had no jurisdiction for the next fiscal year over Army matters, but only over deficiencies. But now there is but one committee reporting appropriation bills, and that committee has jurisdiction over all appropriations; so I do not think the point of order that the matter is not a deficiency is a good point at this time.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the committee has admitted that there is no law creating the division of deposits.

Mr. MANN. I am not discussing that question. I am discussing the question as to whether this is subject to a point of order because it is made available for the next fiscal year and is not a deficiency. I understand that the other point of order is good.

Mr. BLANTON. Then what is the use of discussing this? Mr. MANN. Because I do not think this point of order is good when the Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction of the whole subject matter of appropriations.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Right on the point the gentleman is making I wish to say that I regret that some of these points of order are being made, because I deem some of these positions very essential for the proper transaction of business next year. But right on the point the gentleman is making, this is a bill making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years. and for other purposes, and there is nothing in the title of this bill which would justify an appropriation for 1922, because it. expressly says it is for appropriations for 1921 and prior years.

Mr. MANN. Why, Mr. Chairman, if the title of the bill to which the gentleman refers did not include the words "and for other purposes" it would be a confining title, although in the House titles have never been held to control authorizations in the bill. But legislative items and items of various sorts not covered by the title of the bill so far as the fitle is concerned are covered by words "and for other pur-poses." No wise chairman hardly ever brings into the House a bill the title of which does not include "and for other purposes."

That includes quite a latitude.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair allow me to make a brief statement on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, both the chairman of the committee and the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] have admitted that there is no law whatever creating a division of deposits, and that this particular provision has been provided for in appropriation bills wholly without authority of law. Each having admitted, so far as that point of order is concerned, that it is well taken, what does it matter if it is not subject to another point of order; if it is subject to any point of order it goes out of the bill, and I submit that the argument of the gentleman from Illinois is unavailing upon his point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas insist.

Mr. WINGO. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Printing and Stationery: Clerks—1 $1,400, 1 $1,200, 1 $1,000, 1 $900; multigraph operators—1 $1,200, 1 $1,000; skilled laborer, $840; 4 laborers, at $720 each; 2 messenger boys, at $480 each; in all, $11,380.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is not a deficiency and that it is not authorized by existing law

Mr. GOOD. It is authorized by existing law.

Mr. WINGO. I make the point of order that it is not a defi-

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, it used to be the rule of the House, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated, that, where there were a number of committees having appropriation jurisdiction, the Committee on Appropriations, which had exclusive jurisdiction of the deficiencies, would not be authorized before the beginning of the fiscal year to make appropriations for the ensuing fiscal year, because that jurisdiction was exclusively vested in some other committee. For example, under the old practice the Committee on Military Affairs had authority to report out appropriation bills for the ensuing fiscal year, and after the commencement of the year that committee had no authority to report a deficiency bill for that fiscal year. After the 1st of July or on the 1st day of July the Committee on Appropriations could report a deficiency for that fiscal year. Now, here we have an item of which, in the first place, the Committee on Appropriations always had jurisdiction and, in the second place, it has now jurisdiction of all of them, and it has exclusive jurisdiction over all appropriations. As was said by the gentleman from Illinios, as far as not being a deficiency, this is a bill for other purposes, and one of the other purposes is to provide for a matter that has not been provided for in the regular bill.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. GOOD. Yes.
Mr. WINGO. This item was one that should have been included in the sundry civil bill or in the legislative bill?

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, the question of whether it is necessary or the question of what would have happened if we had not had an extra session is not material to the parliamentary point. It is not a deficiency, it is conceded. As to whether or not you shall follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois and hold that because you have abolished the appropriating power of all the other committees and transferred that appropriating power to one committee you shall go to the extent of holding that items like this are in order on a deficiency bill, that question is academic, as far as my interest is concerned; but I think, on reflection, that those responsible for legislation of this House would hate to see the Chair go that far. The gentleman suggests that the title is nothing and that the words "and for other purposes" would permit you to bring in anything, whether it was in order or not. I am a little bit confused as to the contention he made. I can not see that that has anything to do with the question whether or not this is a deficiency, because this is a deficiency bill for 1921, and the words "for other purposes" would not authorize them to bring in an item for the construction of two battleships and make an appropriation for 1922. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. This division was created way back in 1875. Section 169 provides:

Each head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law, and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated for by Congress from year to year.

Mr. BLANTON. Was that division of printing which the gentleman has read about a division in the Treasury Department?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman contend that under the language he read Congress on an appropriation bill like this would be authorized to create any number of clerks and multigraph operators skilled laborers?

Mr. GOOD. Within the appropriation. Of course, that includes clerks and employees, but not officials.

Mr. WINGO. This is a deficiency bill and the gentleman contends that the only restriction would be the appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. In the bill.

Mr. WINGO. Who fixes the appropriation?

Mr. GOOD. Congress

Mr. WINGO. And Congress, under that, can create 10,000 multigraph operators

Mr. GOOD. Only limited by the appropriation.
Mr. WINGO. Why did you include it in the legislative bill at the last time, and why did it go out?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know whether it was put in or not. I did not have charge of that bill.

Mr. WINGO. Why was it not put in?

Mr. GOOD. I do not recall. I did not have charge of that bill.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, this whole trouble has arisen because of the fact that the legislative bill for the fiscal year 1922 as it passed the latter part of February cut out all of these positions. It was then claimed very vigorously by the gentleman who presented that bill to the House that there were too many employees in the departments, and that the majority intended to cut out those employees and get back to something like a normal basis in so far as employees were concerned. The truth of the matter is if the Treasury Department and other departments are to be believed, that the committee cut too deep. They took great credit for cutting out these employees, and it was published widely over the country that Congress was economizing in cutting out these employees, but now we have a situation where the heads of the departments, after but three months' tenure of office, come before the committee and say that they can not function unless these employees are restored.

I was very sorry, indeed, that the point of order was made against the commissioner of accounts and deposits and the commissioner of public debt, two officials, as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] has stated, who have been holding those particular positions, paid for out of a lump sum, since December, 1919. They handle practically all the securities of the Government, including foreign loans, equipment loans to railroads, and the control and supervision of the various deposits in more than 700 national depositories over the country, which pay interest on daily balances; and the Treasury Department insists that unless some such positions are provided for there will be no one to take care of that immense business, amounting to many billions of dollars. So I regret that the point of order was made.

In so far as this particular point of order is concerned, it seems to me that undoubtedly Congress has the right to provide the necessary employees for a division or bureau that is created by law. That is a matter subject solely to the control of Congress, and so far as the point of order is based on the ground that these positions are not authorized by law, I think it is not well taken. But I should regret very much to see the Chair hold that an appropriation upon a deficiency bill, pure and simple, for the ensuing fiscal year, and which is clearly not a deficiency, is in order. I can not understand why the mere fact that the committees were all combined into one by a previous action of Congress should serve to give the one committee-the Committee on Appropriations—any greater jurisdiction than it formerly had with reference to deficiencies. The legislative appropriation bill which was passed in February and which had jurisdiction of these employees, was passed for the purpose of providing the employees for the fiscal year 1922, and it is so stated in its caption. The caption of this bill shows that it is to supply deficiencies for 1921 and previous years, and for other purposes. Deficiencies for other purposes. I respectfully submit that a deficit for 1922 can not possibly occur in advance of the year 1922. It seems to me that gentlemen are asking the Chair to go very far in ruling that upon this bill, which is purely a deficiency appropriation bill, Congress can enter anew into the general field of appropriations to be expended during the year 1922.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman doubt, under the rulings, if this were the sundry civil appropriation bill for the next fiscal year, that an item might be included within it, to be mmediately available, which would be a deficiency item?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have always understood that the inclusion of the words "to be immediately available," regular supply bill, made it subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. It has always been one of the wonders to me why a member of the Committee on Appropriations never apparently examined the rules of the House to determine what is in order and what is not. It was ruled only recently, as it has been ruled many times before, that the sundry civil appropriation bill, or any other appropriating bill which the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction of, could have included within it the term "to be immediately available," because the same committee had jurisdiction over deficiencies. That was ruled at the last session of Congress, and it has been ruled many times since I have been a Member of this House. The identical reason applies to this case, because if a deficiency is in order on a sundry civil appropriation bill, or other appropriating bill, then an appropriation for the next fiscal year would be in order on this bill. The only point of order that ever was made was one of jurisdiction. What is the point of order? The item is authorized by law. Why is it not in order?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Because it is not a deficiency. What is the difference whether it is a deficiency Mr. MANN.

in an appropriation bill before the House?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And because this particular bill has no jurisdiction of the subject matter, since it is not a

Mr. MANN. But the committee has jurisdiction. It can bring in an appropriation bill covering all appropriations in one bill, if it wants to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Undoubtedly it can. I do not question that.

Mr. MANN. And it can call it what it pleases.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I recall that during the last session of Congress the gentleman, who is always persuasive on account of his intimate knowledge of parliamentary law, secured a ruling from the Chair to the effect that the words "to be immediately available" did not necessarily invalidate an appropriation item nor make it subject to the point of order. But my recollection is that many times previous to that the Chair ruled out provisions of that kind because of the inclusion of those words.

Mr. MANN. I have made the point of order against the words "to be immediately available" 500 times or more in this House and have been sustained, but that was where some other committee than the Committee on Appropriations was trying to make a deficiency appropriation, as, for instance, the Committee on Naval Affairs or the Committee on Military Affairs. On the other hand, it has been ruled ever since I have been a Member of the House that the Committee on Appropriations could provide a deficiency item in one of its regular appropriating bills.

Mr. CARTER, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. If I have the floor.

Mr. CARTER. I wanted to ask the gentleman a question. not the only thing that makes the words "to be immediately available" obnoxious to the rule the fact that they are brought in by a committee not having jurisdiction of de-

Mr. MANN. That is the only reason.
Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield for a question?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.
Mr. WALSH. Under what rule of the House is a deficiency bill treated any differently from any other appropriation bill?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I do not know of any specific rule. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If the gentleman will let me answer him, I would like to read the ruling of the Chair when the gentleman from Massachusetts made the point of order on a deficiency bill in 1920, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Tilson] was in the chair. The Chair then said this, sustaining the position taken by the gentleman from Massachusetts:

Massachusetts:

It has been shown that this appropriation sought to be made in this paragraph is authorized by existing law. It is also shown that it was appropriated for in a previous act, now current law. The question now is whether the present paragraph is a deficiency item appropriate to be included in a deficiency bill.

A deficiency, as used in this House, as was so ably explained by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Dewalt, means a deficiency in an appropriation heretofore made. In the practice of the House deficiency bills have always carried the items for the expense of carrying on the different departments of the Government for the time intervening before the end of the current fiscal year. It has been the practice in the House that each appropriating committee, other than the Committee on Appropriations, shall bring out one appropriation bill each fiscal year. The Appropriation Committee brings out the sundry civil bill, one District appropriation bill, one fortifications bill, one legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, one pension appropriation bill, and such number of deficiency bills as may be necessary to take care of the deficiencies arising from lack of sufficient appropriations in all the other bills for carrying on the various activities of the Government to the end of the fiscal year.

That was the Chair's conception of a deficiency. There was extensive debate. The gentleman will remember that the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Dewalt, read from Webster: "Deficiency bill, a legislative measure for increasing some previous appropriation of money." It never has been construed to mean that it authorized placing upon this bill an appropriation for some entire new activity for the next fiscal year. But it means a deficiency in some appropriation heretofore made. If the position of the gentleman from Illinois were correct, we could abolish all other bills and on this deficiency bill provide for all departments of the Government during the next fiscal year

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. If this question were raised for the first time in the House, the Chair would be disposed to say that the rules of the House were made for the convenience of the House and to enable it to expedite its business and would probably overrule the point of order, but the question is one that has been before the House many times. The orderly procedure of making appropriations has been that certain bills are brought into the House in which appropriations are made for certain activities of the Government in a systematic way. Toward the close of the Congress it has always been the custom to bring in deficiency appropriation bills to provide for deficiencies. In the consideration of deficiency bills it has been invariably the ruling of the Chair to rule out of order amendments offered from the floor which were not strictly deficiency items, and also to rule that provisions of the bill which were not strictly deficiency items were out of order. a ruling occurred on the 2d of February, 1920, when the then Chairman held that an item that was not a deficiency item was not in order on a deficiency appropriation bill. As the Chair stated in the beginning, if it were an original proposition the Chair would be disposed to consider the matter in the light of the argument made by those who contend that the matter being within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations that committee could appropriate for an activity of the Government in any bill. But the last decision on the question, rendered in February, 1920, in a very well considered opinion after argument, held that an item was not in order on a deficiency appropriation bill that appropriated for the ensuing fiscal year. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Mails and Files: Distributing clerk, $1,400; reading and routing clerk, $1,400; assistant file clerk, $1,100; assistant mail messenger, $900; in all, $4,800.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. What is the point of order? Mr. BLANTON. That it is not a deficiency and it is not authorized on this bill by law.

Mr. GOOD. It increases the number of men, and there are not enough there to do the work.

Mr. WINGO. The Congress passed on that when we were making the regular appropriation.

Mr. BLANTON. If the Chair will hear me—
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear from the gentleman from Texas. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Iowa if this is for the fiscal year 1922?

Mr. GOOD. For the next fiscal year, 1922. The CHAIRMAN. An original appropriation and not a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. Well, it is a deficiency, because there is not enough money to pay the salary of those clerks, who are now paid from an appropriation of expense for Loans and Currency. There is where the whole trouble arises, that the money is no longer available, so there will be a deficiency after the 1st of the month.

The CHAIRMAN, It comes within the same class as the other item?

Mr. GOOD. I think so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk read as follows:

Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants: For the force to be transferred to this division on account of the transfer of duties from the Division of Public Moneys, at annual rates of compensation during the fiscal year 1922, as follows: Assistant chief of division, $2,500; clerks—2 at $2,000 each, 3 at $1,800 each, 3 at $1,600 each, 2 at $1,400 each, 2 at $1,200 each; 2 messengers, at $840 each; assistant messenger, $720; in all, $24,300.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is not a deficiency within the contemplation of the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses incident to the discharge of the duties imposed upon the Secretary of the Treasury by the transportation act, 1920, and the Federal control act, approved March 21, 1918, as amended, and for expenses arising in connection with loans and credits to foreign Governments under the Liberty loan acts and the Victory Liberty loan act and in connection with credits granted or conditions entered into under the act providing for the relief of populations in Europe and contiguous countries, including personal services in the District of Columbia, fiscal year 1922, $25,006.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. Will the gentleman from Iowa please explain the necessity for this provision? How much have you already provided for 1922 for this item?

Mr. GOOD. This is the only provision for 1922, except the lump sum of $3,750,000, which is insufficient.

Mr. WINGO. Why was this not covered before? Was there any explanation of the Secretary as to that?

Mr. GOOD. They have used, as I understand, some of the appropriation for expense of foreign loans. They now have nine persons on the pay roll, and their total appropriations for this year is $23,480; but—
Mr. WINGO. I will say, Mr. Chairman, in view of the nature of the item, I will withdraw the reservation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I renew the reservation of the point of order for the purpose of asking a question.

Mr. GOOD. This matter has to do with the force that is trying now to put the foreign loans in a permanent form. They are simply I O U's at the present time, and I understand that Great Britain is willing now to exchange those demand obligations for bonds, and this force is to take care of that.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman can assure us it is going to be the policy of the administration to so arrange matters that every dollar of these debts is going to be collected?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; we can not give the gentleman such assurance

Mr. BLANTON. But that is the policy of the Government?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know what the policy is.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, the gentleman is not willing to send good money after bad unless there is a chance of getting this money back, is he?

Mr. GOOD. No; but these loans ought to be put in a permanent form, and should have been put in that form, it seems to me,

Mr. BLANTON. And it is the policy of the department to put them in a permanent form so as to have debtors meet their obligations?

Mr. GOOD. My understanding of the request for the appropriation was that it was to put these loans into permanent

Mr. BLANTON. If that is the case, I withdraw the point of

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amend-

The gentleman from Tennessee offers an The CHAIRMAN. amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Davis of Tennessee offers the following amendment: Page 18, after line 4, insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized upon request of the Federal Farm Loan Board during the calendar year of 1921 to purchase with any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated farm loan bonds in an amount not to exceed the aggregate sum of $100,000,000, the proceeds of such purchases to be loaned to the farmers through the farm loan system and under the provisions of the farm loan act."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane. However, I will reserve it.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the very serious difficulties under which the farmers of the country are laboring are well known. In the drop of prices they have been the first and the hardest hit of any class. A real emergency exists so far as they are concerned. A large number of Members of Congress have from time to time insisted that they desired to afford the farmers relief. They have been offered a stone in the form of a popun tariff bill, but I am in favor of giving them bread. Their situation can not be relieved by chasing a will-o'-the-wisp or by mere talk. The adoption of the amendment which I have offered, or of some similar legislation, would be of real, substantial help to the farmers. A bill is pending before the Appropriations Committee of the Senate embodying substantially the same proposition as contained in this amendment; also a bill has been introduced by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] and is now pending before the Banking and Currency Committee of the House, providing for a farm loan revolving fund. However, no action whatever has been taken on either of these bills, and I am advised that neither of the committees has even held hearings on either Such delay does not indicate favorable action. of those bills. Besides, even if favorable action should be taken, it would be an indefinite period before such bill would ultimately become a law. Consequently if there is a genuine desire to go to the relief of the farmers, such action should be taken at once and not wait until the farmers are bankrupt or have sustained irretrievable loss. I hope that the gentleman from Iowa will withdraw his point of order and permit this amendment to be considered upon its merit.

The necessity for some relief of this kind is manifest. In the establishment of the Federal farm loan system no capital was provided upon which to operate. The cart is before the horse.

They must get the loans in hand with which to offer security to the bond buyers before they can sell the bonds, with which to raise money to make the loans to the farmers. The farm loan system needs capital or a revolving fund with which to operate. What other business enterprise is expected to function without capital? I think it is well understood that some legislation along this line is necessary. There is certainly no better time to do it than at this particular moment, when the farmers are in such dire need.

Recently the Farm Loan Board disposed of $40,000,000 of farm loan bonds. However, they were only enabled to do this after pursuading a very strong combination of bankers and trust companies to get behind the issue and press it, and even then, with such assistance, it took five weeks within which to dispose of $40,000,000 worth of these bonds. This amount was a mere bagatelle as compared to the amount actually needed. It was wholly inadequate to meet the requirements of the farmers of the country, who are now needing and seeking such loans. The requirements at this time are especially great, for the reason that for months the farmers have been compelled to sell their farm products at a price much below the cost of production, at the same time being compelled to pay practically war prices for most of the commodities which they have purchased. A large percentage of them had borrowed money with which to raise those crops, the loans are being called, the banks are loaned to their limit, many of the farmers are without funds to continue farming operations, and they are generally in a very serious situation

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will yield to the gentleman from

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows how many farm loans are already in process of being accumulated pending the time the money can be raised?

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I will reply to the gentleman that I was informed by members of the Farm Loan Board that because of the year's suspension in the operation of the farm loan system by reason of the case pending in the Supreme Court attacking the constitutionality of the act, there was a very large accumulation; that, in fact, there was a large accumulation when they suspended operations, and that there has since been a year's accumulation of those who desired to secure the loans, and they are absolutely swamped with applications, and this $40,000,000 would be wholly inadequate to meet the demands they now have-loans that are either approved or in process of approval. And they furthermore state, I wish to say to the gentleman, that it would be impossible for them to float another issue of bonds, even of the size of the last one, any time soon; these bankers said that while they would help them out at this time there would be no possibility of their doing it again soon.

Mr. MADDEN. I took it from what the gentleman said in his preliminary remarks that if this $100,000,000 should be appropriated in this bill he believes it ought to be loaned to the farmers in anticipation of their coming crop. The farm loan act provides for loaning of money on the land.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. I understand that; but my proposed amendment provides that the money shall be loaned in accordance with the provisions of the farm loan act, and these bonds would be ultimately paid or repurchased, of course, by the farm loan banks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] insist on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. I make the point of order. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The appropriation for "Expenses of loans," contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, is hereby made available for expenditures in the office of the commissioner of the public debt and for expenditures in the Post Office Department in connection with the distribution, sale, and keeping of accounts of war savings and thrift stamps, as provided in the deficiency appropriation act approved November 4, 1918. The appropriation for "Expenses of loans" contained in section 8 of the first Liberty bond act and in section 10 of the second Liberty bond act, as amended, are hereby made applicable to any operations arising in connection with any public debt issues made subsequently to June 30, 1921, pursuant to the authority contained in the first Liberty bond act or the second Liberty bond act, as amended and supplemented, the provisions of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act approved May 29, 1920, to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That with respect to operations on account of any such issue hereafter made such appropriations shall be available only until the close of the fiscal year next following the fiscal year in which such issue was made.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman I reserve a point of order

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. WINGO. I reserve a point of order in order to ask the gentleman from Iowa if this proposition is not what you might call one of those indirect appropriations, and it has reference to the 10 per cent proposition, does it not? Mr. GOOD. One-tenth of 1 per cent.

Mr. WINGO. I meant one-tenth of 1 per cent.

Mr. GOOD. Yes, Mr. WINGO. In other words, it seeks by this language here to make available for the purposes stated the fund which is represented by one-tenth of 1 per cent.

Mr. GOOD. That is partly true, and the gentleman will observe also that it has to do with the issues by the Post Office Department. Last year the Government sold over $100,000,000 worth of war-savings certificates. There is no authority anywhere to reissue these war-savings certificates and pay the expenses of reissuing them, and, as the gentleman knows, we have outstanding about $2,500,000,000 of short-time certificates of indebtedness issued by the Secretary of the Treasury. The latter part of the provision has to do with that. They are issuing those new certificates every two months, or three months, or six months, as the case may be to retire maturing existing obligations, and for next year there is no appropriation out of which the expenses of these issues can be paid.

Mr. WINGO. Why was not that carried in the regular bill?
Mr. GOOD. There is an appropriation—

Mr. WINGO. Did you not know when you passed the last bill that these billions had to be refunded?

Mr. GOOD. There is an appropriation of $3,750,000 carried in the legislative bill, but it is not adequate to do the work, and it was not contended that it should do it all, but they find it absolutely necessary, basing their experience on the past, for additional funds. Now, last year it was not contemplated that they should have to issue war-savings certificates out of that item, but there is no other appropriation.

Mr. WINGO. The Secretary of the Treasury did not approve the form of this paragraph, did he?

Mr. GOOD. I think so. It came to us in a regular estimate. Mr. WINGO. I think one of the most striking criticisms of methods I have ever read was one that the Secretary of the Treasury made on this same form of appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. It is practically the same form. I think there is not much change in it.

Mr. WINGO. Maybe some one in the Treasury Department; but I do not think that Secretary Mellon would aprove this indirect form of making an appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. This is simply carrying forward what we have been doing right along. One-tenth of 1 per cent has been available for this purpose, and that was carried in the revenue act of 1918.

Mr. WINGO. But the gentleman does not cover it that way. We could very clearly provide for the use of one-tenth of 1 per cent to cover the expenses of these matters, but the gentleman does not do that, but goes on to call attention to other appropriations contained in other acts. There is nothing on the face of it to show the limitation and the appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. That whole fund was made available for that purpose. You will have to stop issuing certificates of indebtedness and war-savings stamps unless this appropriation is made.

Mr. WINGO. Did the gentleman have that fear when we passed the current bill?

Mr. GOOD. How is that?

Mr. WINGO. I understand the gentleman claims this is a deficiency for the present year?

Mr. GOOD. Yes

WINGO. When you passed the regular appropriation bill did you have that fear then?

Mr. GOOD. The legislative bill, while made up in the Appropriations Committee, is made up by a subcommittee, and the subcommittee may have overlooked some of the items

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

vield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The current legislative bill carries quite a large sum for clerical services, but as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] has said, I think it is absolutely necessary for some force to be provided for the Treasury Department to take care of the issuance of these new certificates of indebtedness, and I would infinitely rather see the one-tenth of 1 per cent made available for that purpose than to see a force created by statute and specifically appropriated for in an appropriation bill, because the gentleman knows how difficult it is to get rid of a force when you have once installed it

Mr. WINGO. I am speaking of this indefinite, indirect form of appropriations. It would take a legislative expert to read those lines, from line 5 to line 26, to know what Congress is doing and know what kind of an appropriation is being made. But I will withdraw the point of order. I concede that the work ought to be taken care of, but I think it should be done in a better way.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, still reserving the point of order, I want to ask the chairman approximately how much money does this page of words make available to the Post Office Department and the Treasury Department under this onetenth of 1 per cent provision; that is, for clerical expenses?

Mr. GOOD. For clerical expenses, I do not have the exact amount.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it one-tenth of 1 per cent of the bond issue?

Mr. GOOD. That would not all be for clerical expenses. The one-tenth of 1 per cent would be for engraving and everything, and for clerical expenses.

Mr. BLANTON. They can spend whatever amount they want for clerical help out of that, can they not?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The entire amount available to both of the departments would be what, approximately?

Mr. GOOD. There is not such a large number of clerical employees paid out of this item.

Mr. BLANTON. The expense runs up into the millions of dollars.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no. There is $2,500.000,000 or $2,600.000,000 of certificates of indebtedness outstanding. One-tenth of 1 per cent would be a matter of $2,500,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Then it does run up into the millions, as I said a moment ago. Here is a whole page of words, and outside of the gentleman's committee, possibly alone, no other American citizen can read it and tell exactly how much money is going to be spent.

Mr. GOOD. I understand from the testimony that the total amount spent last year was something like $600,000, but I may be in error about that.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman himself is not in favor of this plan of camouflaging appropriations, is he?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think that is camouflaging. That is the way it was carried in the original act. But I think that until we get some additional revenue legislation which will permanently take care of this, the appropriation should be carried as before.

Mr. BLANTON. I have been following the gentleman for four years in his endeavor to make the appropriations plain, and I hate to see him, in the last bill that he will probably pass before he leaves us, permit camouflaged pages to continue. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does not the gentleman think it would make it a little plainer if the word "are," on line 15 were stricken out and the word "is" substituted? It reads now that "The appropriation * * * are hereby made applicable." Possibly that adds to the confusion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I think the gentleman's suggestion is a good one. It should be modified in that way.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "are," on line 15, and insert in lieu thereof the word "is."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Byrnes of South Carolina: On page 18, line 15, after the word "amended," strike out the word "are" and insert the word "is."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY.

The Comptroller of the Currency may designate a natio examiner to act as chief of the examining division in his office national bank

Mr. Chairman, there is a bill now pending that Mr. WINGO. would abolish the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and one of the reasons is that they already have an examining force and a chief examiner. The idea is that we should not create a new position in an office that you are going to abolish. not authorized by existing law and it is not a deficiency

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that this is not authorized by existing law and is not a deficiency. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of Federal reserve and national currency (to be reimbursed by the Federal reserve and national banks): For additional employees during the fiscal year 1922 at annual rates of compensation as follows: Clerk-counters—3 at $1,400 each, 3 at $1,200 each; 7 counters at $1,000 each; in all, $14,800.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman withhold that for a moment?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. I do not think the gentleman will make the point of order when he understands the facts. These people have to do with the national currency that is sent in here for one purpose and another. Large amounts of money are sent in by national banks, and the national banks are asking for new currency in exchange for old. Now, the national banks pay for that force. It is a reimbursable item. It does not cost the Government a cent.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman has had plenty of opportunity to provide for this emergency in a proper bill-the legis-When the gentleman had the legislative bill here lative bill. before the House he did not see fit, either in the House or in the Senate, to put this item in the bill.

Mr. WINGO. It is reimbursable, anyway.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest to the gentleman that he let it go without the amendment, which will be necessary if he makes the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman think it ought to go in the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I think it ought to be enacted.
Mr. BLANTON. In deference to the judgment of the gentleman from Illinois, I withdraw the point of order.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas withdraws his point of order; and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTERNAL REVENUE.

For the purchase, at not more than par and accrued interest, of second Liberty loan 4 per cent bonds to the face value of $1,000, and for the payment of an amount of interest equivalent to the interest on $1,000 face amount of such bonds from November 15, 1917, to the interest-payment date next preceding the delivery of such bonds, for the relief of the estate of Joseph Matthews, of Solvay, N. Y., $1,050, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order on the paragraph, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, it has been very widely published in the last few days that the funds for the enforcement of the national prohibition law have been ex-hausted and that the work of the enforcement of that law will practically cease until after July 1 because of the failure of Congress to provide sufficient appropriations for that purpose. I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk, in my time, may read a statement that appeared in the Washington Star yesterday upon this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Clerk may read, in his time, an item appearing in the Washington Star. Is there objection?

There was no objection. The Clerk read as follows:

BOOTLEGGERS MAY ESCAPE CONVICTION—KRAMER EXPECTS LAWLESSNESS DURING FURLOUGH OF 700 DRY AGENTS.

Thousands of bootleggers may escape punishment for violation of the liquor laws as a result of the furlough of 700 Federal prohibition agents until July 1, Commissioner Kramer declared last night. In any event, he added, many of the cases will have to be continued over the 40 days, which will add to the congestion of already crowded court deckets.

Most of the Government's important witnesses in the liquor cases now before the courts, Mr. Kramer explained, are the agents who worked up the evidence against the defendants. Most of these men, he said, would return to their homes, making it necessary either to subpena them and pay their way to the places of trial or continue the cases.

At present, Mr. Kramer said, it is too soon to gauge the effect on the illegal liquor traffic which may result from the loss of 700 agents for 40 days because of the lack of funds to pay their salaries. However, he asserted, the cut would hurt the prohibition enforcement unit in every way and set back, if not undo, the work done in organizing the force.

force. "Millions have been lost," he said, "in an attempt to save a few "Millions have been lost," he said, "in an attempt to save a few hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. Kramer said he could not prophesy whether there would be greater bootlegging activity over the country during the 40-day lay-off of most of the Government agents, but he indicated that he expected some increase of lawlessness.

As far as real whisky is concerned, Mr. Kramer said, the supply in the country could be controlled at the sources by restrictions on withdrawals from warehouses, and that any trouble to be expected would come from smuggled liquors and the use of alcohol diverted to illegal purposes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that is a very severe indictment against whoever is responsible for that state of affairs

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. BRYNS of Tennessee. Just a moment and I will yield to the gentleman. Whether a prohibitionist or not, I am sure everyone wishes to see the provision in the Constitution and the law of the land strictly enforced. That is an indictment, not against Congress but against the administration and the partment of the Treasury charged with the enforcement of this law. I dare say that the commissioner of prohibition who made the statement attributed to him, realizing as he did the situation with which he knew he was going to be confronted between now and July 1, submitted to the proper head of the Treasury Department a request for an estimate to Congress in order to take care of the situation between now and July 1.

I have no personal knowledge that he did so, but knowing him and knowing his fidelity in the past and believing that he is a competent, faithful officer, I am quite sure he did his duty in that respect. Then it is pertinent to inquire who it was that cut out the request? Why is it that the Treasury Department did not submit an estimate to Congress? Why is it that they did not appear before the Committee on Appropriations on this particular bill and ask for a sufficient amount of money to carry on this work of law enforcement between now and

No one appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and explained the situation set forth in this newspaper and other newspapers which we have read in the last few days.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GOOD. I can tell the gentleman. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I would be very glad to have a statement from the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. No estimate came to the Committee on Appropri-The gentleman knows full well that Mr. Kramer has had this year $6,900,000 for the enforcement of prohibition, and the law provides that he shall so allot it by months and quarters that there will be no deficiency at the end of the year, and that he could waive the deficiency if he thought necessary. Mr. Kramer did not waive it. He would be therefore liable to the penal provisions of the law providing that he may be removed and that he may be sent to jail. And so, having put himself in that position, he was hardly in a place where he could come to Congress and ask for additional funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that my time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I did not rise for the purpose of delivering a culogy upon Mr. Kramer or for the purpose of defending him. So far as I am aware, he needs none. But if the gentleman from Iowa is correct in his statement, why is it that the President of the United States, who has been President for nearly three months, has not removed him if, as the gentleman says, he ought to be removed?

Mr. GOOD. Why did not the former President remove him? He violated the law during the last administration.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman answers one question by asking another. The situation with reference to this deficiency has arisen only within the last few weeks. It is only in the last few days that it has been brought to the attention of the public and of the country that there are not sufficient funds with which to enforce this law between now and July 1.

Mr. LANGLEY. I think the gentleman need not worry about the early removal of Mr. Kramer. [Laughter.] I anticipate that he will soon be removed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am not seeking his removal or seeking his retention, because, of course, belonging to the opposite party, I do not expect to have any influence one way or the other in that respect. My remark was simply in answer to the statement made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good].

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.
Mr. BANKHEAD. Even if the prophecy of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Langley] is carried into effect, that will not relieve the situation of which the gentleman is complaining.

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, yes; it will. A competent man will be appointed who will enforce the law.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. It will not relieve the situation at all, because, as the statement sets forth, we are in a situation where more than 700 Federal agents are going to be laid off. It is going to disrupt the organization of this service, and the gentleman knows how difficult it is to build up a large organiza-The commissioner says that it is going to cost tion like that millions of dollars on account of the disrupting of his organization, not to speak of the fact that bootleggers are going to escape punishment.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Some of these 700 agents are probably Democrats, and their removal is intended by this.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. There may be something in that. Mr. LANGLEY. I think the gentleman is not correct about that. My understanding is that only about half of the force will be relieved or furloughed, and that for 40 days only.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I wish to say this in conclusion: That there is no question but if the Secretary of the Treasury had submitted an estimate to Congress asking for a sufficient appropriation in this deficiency bill he would have been given every dollar necessary to enforce the law, because, as I said, regardless of whether you favor prohibition, everyone is in favor of rigidly enforcing the law now on the statute book with reference to the sale and the use of intoxicating liquors. Congress heretofore has made liberal appropriations. In the first deficiency bill I think $1,600,000 was requested and $1,400,000 was granted. It was believed then that that would be sufficient to carry on the work to July 1. Whether or not the commissioner has failed to make the proper allotment or has overdrawn the appropriation from month to month is beside the question. I take it that if he did it he did so in the interest of enforcing the law. But what the people wish to know is, Why has the Treasury Department left the country at the mercy of the bootleggers for the next month?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman know whether Mr. Kramer has advised his superior in an official way of the further needs of his department?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I have no knowledge of what Mr. Kramer has done, because I have not talked with him, but I feel sure that on account of the situation he has so graphically described he has called the matter to the attention of the Treasdescribed he has called the matter to the attention of the Treasury Department, and if he has not, he has been guilty of gross dereliction of duty. But why was it necessary to call the attention of anyone in the Treasury Department to the facts in view of the publications which have been made for the last week or two that there is to be a deficiency of funds for the enforcement of the prohibition law? Are those charged with supervision of the enforcement of this law to escape criticism on the ground that they were ignorant of the situation?

I think it is pertinent to inquire whether or not the administration and the Treasury Department is going to fully enforce the law, or whether or not they are going to fail to enforce it through a failure to ask for sufficient funds.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman believe that Congress should act on newspaper reports instead of on official

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. No; but I do say that the Treasury Department should come here and furnish the facts so that we can act intelligently.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in response to the gentleman from Tennessee that if Mr. Kramer, the prohibition enforcement officer, had any communication to make in respect to the shortage of funds for the enforcement of the prohibition law, he should have made it to the Secretary of the Treasury and not to the newspapers. It is not fair to assume that because he did make the communication to the newspaper that therefore that is an official notice to the Secretary of the Treasury. Now, if the Secretary of the Treasury had no knowledge of the condition described in the newspaper article just read by the Clerk, he certainly is not to blame for not having made an estimate for a deficiency appropriation. If Mr. Kramer knew of the shortage he must have known of it in season and, failing to do anything more than to exploit himself in the newspapers, he is not only subject to censure, but he ought to be discharged.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order, but I want to ask the chairman why he should make fish of this bondholder and fowl of others?

Mr. GOOD. In this case the bond had been deposited with the Internal Revenue Bureau as security. It had four coupons carried it around with him for four or five weeks and then sold it for about 50 cents on the dollar, and when the department was required to return the bond it was not able to do so. I know of no other case exactly like it.

Mr. BLANTON. This item should more properly have come before the Committee on Claims. This provision seeks to reimburse the bondholder who has had his bond stolen from him with the full value, irrespective of the market price.

Mr. GOOD. There is an additional circumstance in this case that does not apply to others. The owner of the bond died a year ago, and this is the only thing that prevents the final settlement of his estate. The Treasury Department says that the bond was sold, and they have not replaced it, and they are prosecuting the messenger.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the messenger on the pay roll of the Government now?

Mr. GOOD. I think not; I think he is in jail.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to a practice which accounts for a great expenditure by this bureau, and which I think the House ought to know of, if it is not now acquainted with it. Under section 35 of the national prohibition act a special penalty of $500 is imposed upon the dealer and $1,000 on the manufacturer, with the addition of a double tax that was in effect at the time of the enactment of the act. The revenue act of 1918 provided a tax for distilling liquor. Under these provisions, as they are being construed to-day by the bureau and, I think, as they were construed during the previous administration up to the 4th of March, whenever a man is arrested charged with distilling liquor the agent makes a statement to the bureau, and on the strength of that statement the collector of internal revenue sends an agent to serve a warrant on the person arrested for the nonpayment of tax for distilling liquor. Oftentimes that involves the hiring of an automobile at the Government expense, traveling some distance into the country, serving the warrant for distraint for nonpayment of taxes on a man who never would stand any chance of paying a tax of $500 or $100 or $50. As I understand it, there has been assessed in South Carolina from February, 1920, to February, 1921, more than $1,000,000. The offers received in compromise were $4,500. The amount accepted was $150. [Laughter.] Therefore they have collected $150, and it has cost the Lord knows how much to cover the expense for service of warrants. They are served without expense for service of warrants. They are served without regard to the fact as to whether the man has any property or not, or whether the man ever will be able to pay; there is no investigation made, and Congress never intended it should operate in that way. Often men are served with warrants before any criminal action is begun. In other cases as soon as a man is arrested he is called upon to pay the tax without giving him the opportunity to prove his innocence in court.

The fact is that whenever a case is nolle prossed by the district attorney for lack of evidence the bureau says it has absolutely nothing to do with the decision of the United States courts in a criminal case, and they proceed to serve a warrant of distraint. I know of one case where two men were tried and found not guilty. After they had gone to the expense of employing lawyers to defend them, after they had been found not guilty, then along came an agent of this bureau who advised them that unless they paid a tax of $500 or $1,000 their property would be sold for nonpayment of the tax. A warrant of distraint was served upon them. They had to enlist the aid of attorneys. Upon inquiry I learned that a case of this kind is decided by the bureau upon the ex parte statement of the agents of the bureau. There is a provision that you can ask for a plea in abatement after the warrant of distraint is levied, and in such case the bureau will reconsider the case, but the defendant has no opportunity to present witnesses, and the matter will be decided by the Bureau of Internal Revenue. No hearing is held. It seems to me that if common sense is to be exercised in the enforcement of this law the warrant should not be served until the guilt of the defendant has been determined. this is not done, then some effort should be made to ascertain whether the men upon whom these warrants are served have the ability to pay, in order to save the money wasted in administration; and, in the second place, where a man is found not guilty by a jury in a United States court that ought to be sufficient evidence to this bureau not to serve him with a warrant of distraint to sell his property for nonpayment of the tax. we pursue the present method, we will bring this law into disrepute in every State of the Union. You can never explain to a citizen why, if a jury in a court of the United States has the Internal Revenue Bureau as security. It had four coupons found a man not guilty, the Treasury Department should call on it. The messenger in the department took the bond and upon him to pay $1,000 of taxes for distilling liquor.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. In addition to what the gen-tleman has said, the fact is often the case that a defendant is indicted upon a bill of indictment containing 15 or 20 or 24 counts. The district attorney always indicts him for everything that the law provides or suggests, and he goes into court and

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more in order to allow the gentleman from North Carolina to finish his question and get this man out of court.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. He goes into court and is convicted or pleads guilty to a count in that bill, to which the penalty to which you are referring does not apply, and then is found not guilty on all of the other counts.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I would say to the gentleman that I voted for this law and I want to see it enforced, but I want to see it enforced with some common sense and reason. Either the bureau should not serve a warrant of distraint upon a man until he is found guilty, or else, if they are going to do it regardless of whether he is found guilty or not, they should make some investigation to ascertain whether there is any justification at all for levying a warrant of distraint upon his property, and not confiscate his property without giving him an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. DEMPSEY. Did the gentleman ever hear of a legal procedure such as is suggested by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARD]? It is utterly impossible for a man to have been found not guilty in the way he suggests. No man who has ever had any practice in the Federal court ever imagined that such a thing could occur.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. May I answer the gentleman's question?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I have personal knowledge and can show by the records that it is the fact. The district attorney indicts upon a bill of indictment containing as many as a dozen counts. On one of the counts the defendant may plead guilty and have a verdict of not guilty on all of the balance, and the records of your Federal courts are full of such

Mr. DEMPSEY. I do not think you will find a single case of that kind.

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. I happen to know personally that the records of the Federal courts contain them.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 19, at the end of the line insert a new paragraph, as follows:
"For the enforcement of the national prohibition act during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, $200,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. VOLSTEAD rose.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota was clamoring for recognition, and if he wants to say something in behalf of his amendment, I think he should be permitted to say so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not intend to cut the gen-

Mr. GOOD. I ask that the order be vacated and we have an opportunity to discuss the matter. I want to know something about it. Of course, the other side of the House may be willing to vote $200,000 without an estimate, while perhaps the money is not needed.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman that there was a pretty unanimous vote on both sides of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, there was an estimate made of $2,000,000 for the first deficiency bill. That was intended to cover the expenses up to the 1st of next July. That was submitted to the Appropriations Committee, and they reported an appropriation of $1,000,000. They insisted that it was not necessary to appropriate the entire estimated deficiency, and I was told that they would take care of it in some other deficiency bill, if there should be a deficiency. I did not feel very confident that that was going to be done, and the House was asked for an increase of $400,000, which was granted. That left a deficiency of what was estimated of $200,000. They have gotten along with the amount allowed up to this time. I do not think there ought to be any criticism of Mr. Kramer. is not the one who appoints the employees or discharges them. It is the Commissioner of Internal Revenue who has charge of that matter under the law. Personally I have every confidence in the honesty of Mr. Kramer, and I do not think there ought to be any abuse of him.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman refers to an estimate of $200,000?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. An estimate of $2,000,000.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. My impression is that the estimate for the deficiency was $1,600,000.

Mr. GOOD. That is correct.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. And $1,400,000 was appropriated, making a difference of $200,000.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Possibly the gentleman may be right.
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Now, the gentleman is basing his amendment calling for $200,000 upon an estimate submitted several months ago, not on any estimate that has recently come

I am basing it upon the statement made to me by the prohibition commissioner that it will take $200,000 to continue the service down to the 1st of July.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Does the gentleman know why the commissioner, or some one superior to the commissioner, did not appear before the committee recently to present these facts asking for this appropriation? The gentleman is champion of this law-

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think I know; but I do not care to express any opinion on the subject. There have been complaints because of the expense of this service. I want the House to understand something about the situation. Of this $6,900,000 there is paid nearly a million dollars for keeping track of warehouses. That should not be a charge to prohibition. That was done for many years before we had prohibition. In addition to that there is $750,000 that is being spent for the purpose of taking care of narcotics. In addition to that we have had in the bureau for many years a large force of men who are engaged, and who for years before we had any prohibition were engaged, in taking care of denatured alcohol and the medical preparations that are being sold all over this country. There has been a comparatively small increase in that force. All of this is necessary for the collection of the more than $100,-000,000 in revenue collected annually out of liquor used for various purposes said to be legal. There are, perhaps, between four and five million dollars expended on the enforcement of prohibition, but much of that is necessary to secure this revenue, and I want you to remember that you have got almost as many policemen in this city as we have men in the United States to enforce the prohibition law. How can you expect to enforce prohibition without having somebody to police this country? There are about 1,100 men employed for that purpose, and you are discharging, by refusing to appropriate or neglecting to appropriate, 700 out of those 1,100.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will. Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I expect to vote for the gentleman's amendment, but I want to know if the gentleman knows who is responsible. He said a while ago he knew, but I want to know

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I did not say I knew.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to ask the gentleman, as chairman of this great committee, to tell us who is responsible. I desire to vote for the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I have a number of facts from which I gather my idea of who is responsible. Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I want to get it in the

Mr. VOLSTEAD. But I am not going to tell the House anything that-I can not youch for. I have my opinion, just as the rest of you have.

Mr. ARENTZ. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will.
Mr. ARENTZ. Before the enactment of the eighteenth amendment, if you wanted to buy a still-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes additional.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears

Mr. ARENTZ. If you wanted to buy a still, you went to a chemical supply house and signed an affidavit and went through about as much form as you would in taking a civil-service examination, and after purchasing that still and putting it in a chemical laboratory or an assay office a Federal commissioner came there occasionally to see if you owned that still and had not transferred it to somebody else, but a short time after the enactment of the eighteenth amendment the Treasury Department rendered a decision that all you would have to do is to fill out a form that you are not going to use this still for manufacturing intoxicating liquors, and at the present time in the Police Gazette and many other papers of like nature there is an advertisement of the sale of stills, stating that they will sell and deliver stills to anyone on the receipt of a postal card. Now, there is not anything that is more responsible for moonshining and bootlegging than this one thing. [Applause.]

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am aware of the efforts that were made to evade this law after it went into effect. There is no question about that. But I do not care to devote any time to that now. I want to say that every dollar you put out for the purpose of enforcing the law will come back in the shape of fines and taxes, and I want to say in connection with the tax proposition, of which complaint has been made, that it is an old law of which that complaint is made; it is not a new one. The new law only increased the taxes, but there is not a syllable in the prohibition act authorizing taxation without a hearing, as has been complained of. That is an old law that has been on the statute books for many, many years. Ought we now, in the interest of bootlegging or moonshining, lessen the strictness of that law? I do not think so. Under that law we have imposed many million dollars in taxes, and some of that, I grant you, will not be collected. That has always been the case, but there is no question but a great deal of that will be collected, enough to wipe out the expense of administering the law.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I will yield. Mr. BEGG. This is the third or fourth time that this enforcement office has asked for money during the past year, has

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Well, I do not know.
Mr. BEGG. It is three or four times. Who allots the money for enforcement? I understood the gentleman to exonerate Mr. Kramer for any breakdown, and I want to know if he has charge of it to see that we will spend so much money for this month or

Mr. VOLSTEAD. The statutes provide that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall have charge of it, and not the prohibition commissioner, who is appointed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Mr. BEGG He has nothing to say?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know what he has to say; I know what the law provides for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. BEGG. One minute more, to enable me to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.]

The Chair hears none.

Mr. BEGG. I presume most of us expect to vote for the appropriation, but I would like to ask the chairman of the Judiciary Committee if he does not believe that the commissioner should have taken steps to bring to the attention of this House the fact that he needs $200,000 more?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know, personally, whether he did take any steps or not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is this the regular way, for a Member of the House to be compelled to come here and assume the personal responsibility?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not understand that Mr. Kramer has a right to send any communication to this House directly. would have to communicate through his superior officer.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Did he so direct it to his superior officer? Mr. VOLSTEAD. I do not know.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, Mr. Kramer asked for $4,000,000 for the enforcement of prohibition for the fiscal year 1921. There was also asked $760,000 for narcotics, and then there were supplemental estimates, made before the legislative bill was reported, of $1,500,000, making all told the total estimates of Mr. Kramer for enforcement of prohibition and narcotics for this year of $6,250,000. Congress appropriated in that bill $5,500,000. Subsequently Mr. Kramer asked for a deficiency of $1,600,000 more. The Committee on Appropriations reported out $1,000,000 of deficiency for this purpose. The Senate increased that amount by $400,000, and when the bill came back to the House the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] moved to instruct the House conferees to accept the Senate amendment, and that motion prevailing, $1,400,000 deficiency was given this officer. He has been given $6,900,000, when he asked for $6,250,000 originally.

Now, let us see what is the provision of law that governs this high official. He stands on the same basis with every other Government official. The law governing the expenditure of this money is clear and distinct. It reads as follows:

money is clear and distinct. It reads as follows:

All of apprepriations made for contingent expenses or other general purposes, except appropriations made in fulfillment of contract obligations expressly authorized by law, or for objects acquired or authorized by law without reference to the amount annually appropriated therefor, shall, on or before the beginning of each fiscal year, be so apportioned by monthly or other allotments as to prevent the expenditure in one portion of the year which may necessitate deficiency or additional appropriation to complete the service for the fiscal year for which said appropriations are made; and all such appropriations shall be adhered to and shall not be waived or modified except upon the happening of some extraordinary emergency or unusual circumstance which could not be anticipated at the time of making such apportionment, but this provision shall not apply to the contingent appropriations of the Senate or the House of Representatives; and in case said apportionments are waived or modified as herein provided, the same shall be waived or modified in writing by the head of such executive department or other Government establishment having control of the expenditure, and the reasons therefor shall be fully set forth in each particular case and communicated to Congress in connection with estimates made for any additional appropriation required on account thereof.

Listen:

Any person violating any provision of this section shall be summarily removed from office and may also be punished by a fine of not less than $100 or by imprisonment for not less than one month.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there? Mr. GOOD. Not just yet; not until I have finished my statement

Here, Mr. Chairman, is the statute that applies to this officer. It was his duty to apportion this money by monthly or other allotments so that there should not be a deficiency in one part of the year. And if he found there was an emergency or an unusual circumstance, he could waive the allotment in writing, express the reasons therefor, and communicate them to Congress. That was his duty. He violated the plain provisions of the law. How can you expect this great eighteenth amendment to be enforced when you trust the enforcement to a man who is admittedly one of the chief violators of law [applause]. who violates the law to the extent that he will come to this Congress and ask us in a roundabout way, in a sneaking way, in an ungentlemanly way, and not have the bravery to confront the Committee on Appropriations and explain there his own violations of the law? Who makes this estimate? that there is a deficiency in the enforcement? There is no legal estimate for a deficiency. Who knows one exists? I voted for the eighteenth amendment. I voted for this law. I want to see it enforced. But I want to see all the laws of the United States enforced. I want to see the law enforced against as well as by the prohibition commissioner, or whatever you call him, and I want him to obey the law just as much as I want the moonshiner to obey the law. No man who is a law violator can be a good law-enforcing officer, and as a general rule much of the money appropriated to such an official is wasted. [Applause.]

Mr. HILL. A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland will

Mr. HILL. In view of the statement of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee concerning violation of law by the commissioner of prohibition, I make a point of order against this amendment as being new legislation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the point of order comes too late, there having been argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late. Mr. BLANTON. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized. Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the committee is hardly fair to Mr. Kramer, because the chairman of the committee knows, better than anybody else knows, that Mr. Kramer made a proper estimate to his chief.

Mr. GOOD. Now, the gentleman wants to be fair. I know absolutely nothing about it. I will say to the gentleman that I never heard of an estimate having been made.

Mr. BLANTON. He should wait until I finish my sentence,

I do not yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. I am not going to let the gentleman say that I know a certain thing when the gentleman knows nothing about it.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman of the committee will not deny that he knows that a proper estimate came to this committee on the last deficiency bill for an appropriation of $1,600,000 for prohibition enforcement?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and we acted on that.
Mr. BLANTON. He acted on it by cutting it down and finally cutting off $200,000 even after an increase by amend-He short-potted the commissioner. He did not give him what he needed; $200,000 of the estimate was not allowed. And that estimate did come through the proper chief, through the revenue department, to the gentleman's committee; and the chairman ought to be fair to Mr. Kramer. That is what I started to say when the gentleman first interrupted me. If the chairman and his committee had not short-potted Mr. Kramer out of $200,000 of that estimate, he would not have come in here and asked for the balance, and you would not find the papers of the land telling us, as they have done during the last week, that 700 prohibition agents were going to be laid off right away, and that the bootleggers would have charge of the country.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment. Let me get some facts before the committee.

He says Mr. Kramer was ungentlemanly. He says he has violated the law. He says he comes sneaking into Congress. Does he come sneaking into Congress when he comes behind the chairman of the great Judiciary Committee of this House?

Is that sneaking into Congress? It is the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary that brings this amendment here in behalf of the enforcement not only of the statutory law of the land but in behalf of the enforcement of the fundamental constitutional law of this country. [Applause.]
Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right on that point?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman can get all the time he ants. If the gentleman will get me a little more time, I will

Mr. GOOD. I will get the gentleman enough to answer this question, if he can.

Mr. BLANTON, All right.

Mr. GOOD. Can the gentleman cite to me a single statute which provides that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary or the chairman of any other committee shall make estimates to Congress for deficiencies? The only statute that I know of is that providing that all the estimates shall be transmitted through the Secretary of the Treasury to the Speaker of the House. That is the only law that I know of concerning

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer the gentleman. Mr. Kramer made it known to the Secretary of the Treasury that he needed $1,600,000. The Secretary of the Treasury brought that estimate to the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on the last deficiency bill, and my genial friend from Iowa, the distinguished chairman of the committee, shortpotted him $200,000 and cut it off. If he had not done that, that gentleman would not be forced to come in now and ask for a deficiency.

But that very law that you have cited against Mr. Kramer has been on the statute books for years-against every bureau chief and every department head since I have been in Congress, for four years—and they have violated with impunity that law, each and every one of them.

Mr. HILL. It has never been enforced, either.
Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes; it has.
Mr. HILL. I do not know of it.
Mr. GOOD. You do not know anything about it if you say that.

Mr. BLANTON. And nobody has been prosecuted.

Mr. GOOD. If they waive the allotment and come to Congress they do not have to do that. I can cite case after case where the allotment has been waived. But Mr. Kramer brushes the law aside and brushes Congress aside and holds himself out as a law unto himself.

Mr. BLANTON. And every bureau chief and every department head has done likewise.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Every department head and every bureau chief has done likewise, with impunity and with immunity, if you please; and the distinguished minority leader at that time, Mr. Clark of Missouri, stood in his place not very long ago and asked the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when he was going to begin to prosecute these bureau heads and department chiefs, and the gentleman from Iowa answered that he did not know, but that he would like to see them prosecuted. But they have not been prosecuted. Instead of going after Mr. Kramer alone, why not go after the others?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] has made a very vigorous and bitter attack upon Mr. Kramer, the prohibition commissioner. I barely know Mr. Kramer. I never met him more than once or twice in my life, and I am not here to act as his champion or advocate, but I think I have never before heard anyone claim that Mr. Kramer had not been a conscientious official and that he has not done all that he could possibly do to enforce the law on the subject of prohibition. I never heard anyone charge him with malfeasance or misfeasance in office, and I respectfully submit that if he has been guilty of malfeasance or misfeasance in office, although appointed by the previous administration, no steps have been taken to remove him. The present administration has been in power for nearly three months, and it is very certain that if he had deserved what the gentleman has had to say concerning him that his place would have been filled by some constituent of gentlemen on the other side.

The fact that, although an appointee of the preceding administration, nothing has been done to relieve him and place somebody else in charge is the very best answer to what the gentleman has said.

The gentleman from Iowa makes a very bitter criticism of Mr. Kramer because he made what he believed to be-and what I have no doubt is the truth—a plain statement of facts in the newspapers relative to his inability to enforce this law and perform his duty during the ensuing month of June. The gentleman from Iowa says he should have gotten a waiver from the Secretary of the Treasury. I have not heard the gentleman from Iowa say that he did not seek such a waiver and did not get it. How does the gentleman know that he did not get that waiver? Under the law he could not have spent the money without the permission of the Secretary of the Treasury

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is familiar with the estimate for $600,000, and the law that I read provides that this waiver and the reasons for it must be submitted with the estimate. gentleman knows that there was no such compliance with the

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Not under the previous estimate. Mr. GOOD. That is what I am talking about. There is no stimate now. The gentleman must admit, then, that my critiestimate now. cism of Mr. Kramer, so far as the violation of the antideficiency law is concerned, is very well taken.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman is a very shrewd and very able lawyer, and he is talking about ancient history. What we are concerned with now is the history of the future enforcement of this law between now and July 1. There has been no estimate made to this committee. The point I made a while ago was that the Treasury Department had not sent an estimate to the House, nor did the Secretary of the Treasury or anyone representing him appear before the Committee on Appropriations in support of an appropriation to supplement the funds in the hands of the prohibition commissioner between now and July 1.

Now, I think it is very unfair to Mr. Kramer to say that he has done anything improper in the presentation of this matter. The gentleman from Iowa knows better than anybody else on the floor of this House that if Mr. Kramer had appeared before the subcommittee on deficiencies and requested to be heard he would have been told that there was no estimate before the committee so far as he was concerned, and that it could not hear him, and it would not act upon any estimate unless such estimate come forward in the legal, regular way, through the Secretary of the Treasury, who is the man at the head of the department charged with the enforcement of this law.

Now, I dare say that Mr. Kramer as a conscientious official has done all that he could to obtain the money necessary to enforce this law. My question a while ago was, "Who is it at the department who has cut out his request for additional money to carry on the enforcement of the law between now and July 1?" I would like to know who it is in the Treasury Department, who it is in the administration-

Mr. GOOD. Vote against this amendment and you will find

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Who it is who has refused to submit an estimate, so that this law may be rigidly and properly enforced.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division,

The CHAIRMAN. A division is called for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 38.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The third proviso of the paragraph making appropriations for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, as contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except the following: Three at not exceeding $7,500 each, 9 at not exceeding $5,000 each, 28 at not exceeding $4,500 each, 36 at not exceeding $4,000 each, 42 at not exceeding $3,500 each, 49 at not exceeding $3,000 each, 68 at not exceeding $2,500 each, and 215 at not exceeding $2,000 each, 25 at not exceeding $2,000 each, 26 at not exceeding $2,000 each, 27 at not exceeding $2,000 each, 28 at not exceeding $2,000 each, 20 at not exceedin

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph just read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes a point of order to the paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. I will ask the gentleman to reserve it. Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. At the request of the chairman of the committee I reserve the point of order to the paragraph.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, this matter was gone into pretty carefully by the committee on the legislative, executive, and judicial bill. It made quite a study of the requirements in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. They cut the appropriation from $8,500,000, the amount for the present year, to $6,000,000 for next year. That force will be very materially reduced. The present force has been reduced to about 5,700, and the legislative, executive, and judicial act will cause a reduction of 1,200 more employees. Now, after the legislative bill passed Col. Wainer was assigned to reorganize this force, and the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Wood] has gone into the matter very carefully with Col. Wainer. Mr. Wood is satisfied that that bureau can not function next year under the present limitation with regard to While it is true that this bill provides for increasing the number up to 450 who will have salaries of $1,800 and over, it only leaves about 235 who will receive salaries of over $2,000, and that small force will superintend the whole force in the bureau and in the eight substations in the field that will have the disbursement of $125,000,000 of compensation and several million dollars in the way of insurance. It is calling for executive ability of a high order, and the proper executive force must be provided for.

Now, this matter was not taken up without some investigation, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Woop], who conducted the hearing before, was brought in, and he thought that we ought to agree to this amount.

I am sure neither the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham] nor anyone else wants to bring about the condition that obtained during the war, when this bureau could not function at all, when it had three times the number of clerks it will have next year, but was unable to reply to the inquiries made by the fathers and mothers and the sisters and brothers of the boys who were in the service. Now, there are over 1,500,000 names on the rolls down at the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. This force must deal with those problems, and I for one would not want to take it upon my shoulders at this time to refuse to report out an appropriation for a force that was adequate to administer this great law. I am frank to say that I believe a great deal of money will be wasted as a result of incorrect decisions, decisions that are not well founded, decisions made by $1,800 clerks, if you cut down this force as would be contemplated by the elimination of this item. The matter was gone over with the subcommittee that made up the legislative bill. It was their judgment and it is my judgment that they did a great service when they cut the appropriation by $2,500,000, but they say that after going over the study made by Col. Wainer and others they are satisfied that the limitation on the personnel was too severe and that this provision ought to be carried in this bill. I will say to the gentleman that it is our opinion that they can get along with $6,000,000 even with this limitation, and I hope he will not make the point of order.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, under ordinary circumstances I would not desire to press this point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. My point of order is that this is legislation; that it legislates as to the number and kinds of clerks who shall be employed in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and performs a function which is ordinarily performed in this House by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I may say incidentally that I am making this point of order at the request of the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the committee being busy at the present time on their bill for the reorganization of the various soldiers' bureaus.

The subject matter contained in this paragraph is clearly within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. It is a matter about which that committee has a right to legislate, and I may say to the Chair that it is a matter that the committee is now considering in connection with the Sweet bill and the report of the so-called Dawes Commission. In a few days that committee will be in the House with a bill which will cover the same subject matter as that contained in this paragraph.

I have no doubt as to its being legislation, and that is the basis of my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. No. This provision repeals a provision in the legislative bill, and I suppose following the decision of the Chair we can not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that this provision is not only legislation but that it repeals existing law, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Hospital facilities: The Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, is authorized to expend from the appropriation of $18,600,000 contained in the act entitled "An act providing additional hospital facilities for patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Division of Rehabilitation, and for other, purposes," approved March 4, 1921, such sum or sums as he may deem necessary for the purpose of providing the facilities contemplated by such act by purchase, gift, construction, remodeling, or extension of existing plants or those under construction, and equipment, on sites now owned or to be acquired by the Government and selected by him, and from time to time to make allotments therefrom to the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, which shall be transferred to their credit and disbursed by them for the purposes set forth in such act and in this paragraph: Provided, That the surplus property not required by the War Department mentioned in said act, and any suitable surplus property of the Navy Department not required for its use, shall be transferred for use in constructing, equipping, and supplying any of such hospitals.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. LANGLEY. Will the gentleman withhold that? Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. LANGLEY. I desire to have an amendment read for the information of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which he desires to have read for the information of the House

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. My reservation of the point of order still stands. I have no objection to the reading of the amendment, but I want to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky wishes his amendment read for information.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I simply reserved my point of order for the purpose of allowing the gentleman to say what he wanted to say, and not for any other purpose.

Mr. LANGLEY. There is not very much I want to say. If the gentleman is going to insist on his point of order he will simply deprive

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment can be read for information only Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman reserve his point of Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Has the gentleman from Illinois the floor? I want to propound an inquiry to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois rose and made a point of order. The gentleman from Kentucky rose and asked to be recognized, and the gentleman from Illinois then merely reserved the point of order to enable the gentleman from Kentucky to offer an amendment. The gentleman from Kentucky offered an amendment to be read for the information of the House. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of the matter beginning on line 19, page 20, down to and including the word "paragraph," line 10, page 21, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That the following provision contained in the last paragraph of the act entitled 'An act providing additional hospital facilities for patients of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance and of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, Division of Rehabilitation, and for other purposes,' approved March 4, 1921, to wit, 'of which sum not to exceed $6,100,000 shall be used for remodeling or extending existing plants,' is hereby repealed. The total amount appropriated by the said act shall be available for the purposes specified in the said act and allotments may be made from said amount at the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury, to the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soliders to be transferred to its credit and disbursed by it under the approval and direction of the Secretary of the Treasury for the purposes of the said act."

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the Committee on Appropriations in reporting the proviso to which I offer a substitute, as well as the purpose of my substitute, is to modify the law to a certain extent, and therefore it is subject to a point of order if the gentleman insists on it. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds held exhaustive hearings covering two years and reported a bill which became a law on the 4th of last March. In that bill twelve and one-half million dollars was provided for the construction of new hospitals, $5,000, 000 for improvement and extension of existing plants, and $600,000 for the improvement of Fort Walla Walla, in Washington State, and Fort McKenzie, in Wyoming, and $250,000 for Fort Logan H. Roots.

Gentlemen will recall that the President appointed a com-ission known as the Dawes Commission. They made an mission known as the Dawes Commission. They made an investigation and reported to the President. He appointed a commission of hospital experts, and they, after investigation, have reached the conclusion that this $6,100,000 available for improvement and extension will not be sufficient to improve and extend all of the existing plants. Their purpose is, of course, to expedite the hospitalization, and also to economize, if possible, and therefore the Secretary of the Treasury asked that he be permitted to use any part of that twelve and one-half million dollars for the same purpose; that is, the improvement and extension of existing plants.

That is the purpose of the provision in the appropriation bill, and my reason for offering the amendment is that we tried to get the three Army posts through the Secretary of War but did not succeed, and knowing from conclusive testimony before our committee that they were well equipped for hospital purposes and could be used with comparatively little expense, we included in the provision of the act the three Army posts, and made the provision in the pending bill which will leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury to ignore, if he desires to do so, what we did three months ago by special act of Congress.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I do not want to oppose the gentleman's amendment if it does not conflict with the work going on now in the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, of which I am a member at the present time, with the reorganization of all the services. That is the committee which has jurisdiction. They are going to take over all these hospitals and operate them, together with the Federal Board for Vocational Education and the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. There are provisions in the bill now being considered by that committee by which surplus property from the Army and the Navy are to be taken over. Now, if you pass this, you are making a transfer of property, and who is it to be transferred to?

Mr. LANGLEY. That proviso that the gentleman speaks of our committee is heartily in favor of. My amendment does not cover that, but it will make available 1,800 additional beds, and what we need is more beds for the boys.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. All that matter will be taken over by the veteran's bureau along with the reorganization.

Mr. LANGLEY. The gentleman overlooks this fact, that there is no conflict with my amendment and what the gentleman says another committee is proposing to do. We had before our com-mittee Dr. White, who is chairman of the hospital consulting commission, and we had Gen. Wood, chairman of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and others.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky

has expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more. The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANGLEY. I may say that the chairman of the Appropriations Committee has assured me that he is willing to accept the amendment. It is purely in the direction of hasten-ing the hospitalization of disabled men, and the situation is mr. ANDREWS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDREWS. Yes.
Mr. ANDREWS. I would like to ask a question in view of what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham]. This proposition relates to the construction of hospitals. The proposition before the Interstate Commerce Committee is as to the adjustment of existing facilities. Now, does the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce propose to take into its jurisdiction the construction of hospitals?

Mr. LANGLEY. Certainly not.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. No.

Mr. ANDREWS. Then there is no conflict whatever. bill relates to the preparation, the construction, the remodeling, and the enlargement of hospitals, and we propose simply to remove the limitation which provides that $6,100,000 only shall be used for remodeling and extending, and say that the Secretary may exercise his discretion as to the $12,500,000 in the enlargement and remodeling of the plants.

Mr. LANGLEY. We do not attempt to repeal the existing provision making $12,500,000 available for new construction at all, but we merely give the Secretary of the Treasury unlimited discretionary power, and we trust him. We are merely seeking to give the executive officer the widest discretion.

Mr. ANDREWS. Not at all. Mr. LANGLEY. We leave it to their discretion, and I might add for the information of the committee that it is the purpose of those in immediate charge of the development of this general hospitalization plan in the very near future to bring in an additional proposition involving perhaps twelve or fourteen million dollars for additional new construction.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes. Mr. PARRISH. Can Can the gentleman, who is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, tell us whether it is contemplated to go ahead with the construction of some of these hospitals even unto the $12,500,000 appropriation, or is it the purpose to hold that up?

Mr. LANGLEY. I asked Dr. White, the chairman of the hospital consulting committee, that question the other day, and he said it is their purpose to go ahead with the general program for the treatment of the disabled ex-service men, and they have in view seven or eight new hospitals, some of them in the Westtubercular hospitals-where most of the tubercular patients are. As I just stated, we intend to bring in an additional proposition providing more money for the construction of more new hospitals

Mr. PARRISH. I want to add in that connection that so far as the present facilities are concerned it does not seem possible that they will be able to take care of the tubercular cases that are now in the Southwest.

Mr. LANGLEY. The Secretary of the Treasury and his subordinates have entire jurisdiction of that whole question, and we have hundreds and thousands of letters and telegrams stating the situation with regard to the lack of proper hospital facilities for these suffering heroes of the Nation, and I am sure the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham] will not insist upon his point of order, the effect of which would be to delay the program we are seeking to carry out to give additional facilities for the proper treatment of these suffering boys, who deserve everything that the country can do for them. [Applause.]

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand that the matter of the location of these five or six new hospitals has not as yet been definitely decided, and that a commission has been appointed by the Public Health Service, under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purpose of locating the sites of these various new hospitals.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes; that is, a hospital consultant commission has been selected.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Can the gentleman inform the committee how soon it is likely that committee will make its report, in view of the urgent situation with which we are confronted.

Mr. LANGLEY. I should think in the very near future. I think I am warranted in saying that perhaps one or two locations have already been decided upon, but I am not at Hiberty to say where,
Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANGLEY, Yes.
Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I did not catch the terms of the gentleman's amendment sufficiently to be able to determine whether it simply proposes construction of hospitals, or goes further and provides anything with reference to the consolidation of the various services.

Mr. LANGLEY. The main proposition is to remove the limitation in respect to the expenditure of $6,100,000 for the improvement and extension of existing plants all over the country, and make the $12,500,000 or any part of it for new construction also available for the purpose of extension and improvement of existing plants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has again expired.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman, of course, recognizes the great importance of consolidating the various services that have to do with the care of the soldiers?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Along the line of the recommendation made by the Dawes committee?

Mr. LANGLEY. I am heartily in favor of that, and have been for two or three years, long before the suggestion was made, since the 4th of March, as the records will show.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That recommendation was sent in about the 19th of April. Has the gentleman any information as to when we may expect to receive some report from the committee that is considering the so-called Sweet bill, which, as I understand it, involves the consolidation of the services?

Mr. LANGLEY. I am not a member of that committee, but I am keeping in close touch with its work, and I know that they will report at an early date.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think I can answer that question. The Sweet bill will be finished this afternoon, in all probability, by the committee. We are having our final session on it, and my information from the chairman is that probably about the 1st or 2d of June it will be in the House.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am very glad to hear that, because personally I think there is no legislation of more importance than that. It will redeem the promise we have been continually making to the sick and disabled soldiers of the country, and that is a promise that we ought not to delay further in performing.

Mr. CHINDBLOM rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized. Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, what is the situation? Is there a point of order pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserved the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order ought

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think I can close this up by stating that I do not intend to insist upon my point

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to have his amendment offered now for consideration?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman offers it now for that purpose?

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. The matter before the committee, then, is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk again reported the Langley amendment.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I accept the amendment. The amendment, we think, is practically the same as that carried in the bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a few words about this amendment. It is in exactly the form in which the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds agreed to report the bill pending before it. Ordinarily, I presume, the same objection might be urged here as would be urged generally to legislation upon an appropriation bill. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, however, was so anxious to have this work started, to have this legislation passed, that the committee, I am sure, are unanimous in urging the adoption of the amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky. I shall not consume any more time in discussing it except to say that the representatives of the Treasury Department and of the Dawes Commission and the committee of experts now working upon the hospitalization program stated before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds that this provision will bring about results; that available buildings will be immedately enlarged and rehabilitated and remodeled for hospital purposes so as to be ready within 60 or 90 days for occupancy by about 4,000 disabled soldiers.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If the gentleman will yield, I did not catch the read ng of the amendment very clearly. Does that provide for the building of new hospitals or the remodeling of old ones for these tubercular-

Mr. CHINDBLOM. It makes available the sum of $18,600,000 for remodeling and enlarging existing plants.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Not for rebuilding.

Mr. WALSH. How are you going immediately to enlarge any hospitals?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Well, I stated within 90 days. I think some of these plants will be enlarged within 90 days. Remodeling can be done in some instances in 30 or 60 days so as to make existing plants available for hospital use.

Mr. WALSH. But you can not have them ready for oceupancy within 90 days.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I believe some will be ready for occupancy within 30 days; others will take 60 or 90 days and more.

Mr. LANGLEY. It will take two or three years to build a new hospital.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Exactly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. As I heard the amendment read I did not understand exactly what it carried. Do I understand that if this amendment is adopted the Secretary of the Treasury will have the discretion to use the entire $18,600,000 for either the building of new-hospitals or extending and improving existing facilities, or will he be required, if this amendment be adopted, to build the five new hospitals whether those are necessary or not?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. He will not be required to build the five new hospitals. It will be entirely within his discretion to build new hospitals or remodel existing plants or do both.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I am very much in favor of it. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What is the difference between this amendment and the language in the bill? Does it not provide for the same thing?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The language in the bill changes the entire act of March 4, 1921, and it would eliminate the three Army posts which we directed the President to take over for hospital purposes; it will entirely eliminate that from the bill.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What effect will that have? Have they already been taken over?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. No; they have not been taken over yet.

as I understand it.

Mr. LANGLEY. If the gentleman will permit, the provision in our act of March 4 last took over these three Army posts mentioned awhile ago by me. The reason we did that was because we had some Army posts and tried two or three times to get Secretary Baker to let us have them for hospital pur-They are abandoned Army posts. Afterwards we received a letter from him saying he could only let us have them temporarily, but not for the use of tubercular patients at all, which in the West was the class we most desired to place in them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. GOOD. I ask that all debate upon this paragraph-

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I ask that I may have a minute to answer a question, if I can do so and shed any light upon this

Mr. GOOD. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in six minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in six minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in six minutes.

Mr. ANDREWS. I want five minutes of that.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves that all debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto close in six minutes.

The question was taken; and the Chair announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. Andrews) there were-ayes 50, noes 11.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask as to the scope of this word "remodeling." I know that in some soldiers' homes-and I have particularly in mind the soldiers' home that has the greatest number of members of any in the United States—the hospital buildings there are 35 years old. They are wooden buildings and they are worth nothing, are good for nothing now except as fuel for a bonfire, and I would like to inquire whether under the language of this amendment it will be possible to put up a new structure—a modern, sanitary, fireproof hospital—in place of the old one?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; it would. The Secretary of the Treasury is not limited to remodeling. He may construct new buildings as well.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes.
Mr. WILLIAMSON. I would like to know whether or not the amendment as offered-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. LANHAM]

has the floor.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, this amendment as offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Langley] is now pending as a bill on the calendar of the House. It is H. R. 6263, Union Calendar No. 36, and was reported a few days ago favorably by the Committee on Public Building and Grounds. It is offered here in lieu of the provisions in the deficiency appropriation bill because its verbiage has had the careful and earnest consideration of the proper legislative committee that has in charge the matter to which it refers. Nor do I think it will in any way poach on the preserves of the committee for whom the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Graham] has been exercising a proper solicitude.

The amendment here proposed has been framed in this language after a very free and full consultation by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who has been devoting attention to this project, and with the consulting board of physicians, who, under the direction of the Secretary, have been working very arduously in an effort to provide a solution for the hospital problem. The practical thing which this amendment does is to remove the limitation placed upon the Secretary of the Treasury in public law 384, recently passed, by the terms of which, you will recall, he was restricted to the expenditure of $6,100,000 out of the $18,600,000 appropriated for the remodeling and extension of existing hospital facilities. This amendment will permit him to expend the entire amount of the appropriation in his discretion for the various purposes enumerated in the original act.

Whether or not this amendment is absolutely the best thing that can be done along this line I am not prepared to say, but it certainly has two or three meritorious features. One is that it makes for speed in caring for our sick and disabled soldiers. All over this country we have boys desiring hospital treatment, and in urgent need of it. Under these circumstances, it is not very becoming for us to stand here and quibble and argue as to whether it ought to be done in one particular way or in some other special way, when these men who served their country and the world so faithfully in time of peril are asking hospital facilities for the relief of the injuries they sustained in the line of duty. Surely the time has come when we ought to show a burst of speed and get some practical results. The Secretary of the Treasury and those whom he has called into consultation tell us that the adoption of this amendment will make it possible to get the greatest number of soldiers into hospitals in the shortest length of time. Certainly that is a consummation devoutly to be wished. I don't think any reasonable man wants to oppose a proposition that offers that hopeful prospect.

We are assured that, though this amendment will remove the limitation upon the Secretary of the Treasury in the matter of expenditures for the extension of existing facilities, it will not necessarily preclude the use of a part of these funds for the building of new hospitals. This has been stated by the board of consulting physicians. In fact, it seems to be contemplated that some of this money will be devoted to entirely new con-

But new construction necessarily takes considerable time, and it is for this reason and in order to get the earliest possible results that it is proposed to give the Secretary greater latitude in the matter of enlarging the hospitals which are already available. It is not the purpose of this amendment to place a ban upon the proper building of new hospitals in sections where an urgent need for them exists.

Another fine thing this amendment does, and so does the original law which it amends, is to fix in one place the responsibility for the practical operation of this program. It puts all the authority under one tent, so to speak It directs that the Secretary of the Treasury shall go ahead, in his discretion, and expend this money along the most practical lines that will yield the earliest and best results in the hospitalization of sick and disabled soldiers. It eliminates red tape and a division of authority. There will be no call for differences of opinion or unnecessary delay If early hospitalization is not satisfactorily effected in accordance with the program promised, we can very properly say: "Here, Mr. Secretary, there were no strings on you; there were no limitations on this expenditure. Why have not the results been accomplished?" I sincerely trust it may never become necessary to ask that question. I am supporting this amendment in the hope that its adoption will forestall both bickering and procrastination and lead to something speedily that is both practical and tangible in properly caring for these unfortunate men.

It seems to me that this thing of undivided responsibility is likely a step in the right direction. If early hospitalization is not afforded these boys, those who are responsible can not come in here in three, six, or nine months and contend that some other branch or organization of the Government is causing the delay. The responsibility is fixed and definite.

In this connection, I want to say another thing. It is human nature, perhaps, that each of us should desire a new hospital in the district which he has the honor to represent. I think there is an admirable site in my district, and you probably think the same thing with reference to yours. But at this time we should all merge our individual preferences in the general welfare. Let us seek to do something for these sick and crippled soldiers rather than for ourselves. This is certainly no time for mere selfish exploitation. It is no time for a man to quit the game because he may not be able to have it played in his particular way. I believe this amendment is so drawn that we shall have speedily much more extensive hospital accommodations for these boys. That is the thing of prime importance. We eliminate here the proverbial passing of the buck and take off the brakes of red tape in order that those charged with the responsibility may be able to operate.

Mr. BANKHEAD. In that connection, I was very much astounded to hear the gentleman from Kentucky say that if they decided to build any new hospitals it would take two or three years to construct them. Is that shown by the evidence before your committee?

Mr. LANHAM. Well, I have been a member of the committee only a short time, but my recollection is that the testimony of Dr. White recently was to the effect that it would probably be about two years from the beginning of the erection of a new hospital until it could be finished and equipped and put in operation. Of course, it is contemplated that these hospitals shall be permanent, fireproof buildings, and the gentleman is probably familiar with the fact that such Federal construction is usually rather slow.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas

has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAMSON. I just want to call the attention of the House to the fact that we have in South Dakota a fort known as Fort Meade that is composed of a number of stone and brick structures, heated by steam and hot water, and has one of the best water systems in the whole country, where we can put in 1,200 beds to-day without any remodeling or without any expense except for the furnishing of the beds and the necessary furniture. And I want to ask the chairman of the Appropriation Committee now whether this amendment is of a character which will permit the Public Health Service to take over those buildings and utilize them with the money appropriated here?

Mr. GOOD. No. This bill does not authorize the taking over of anything except surplus property not required by the War Department. If they should determine that the property the gentleman mentions was surplus property, or if they determine to expend a certain amount at Fort Walla Walla and Fort McKenzie, they could expend within the lim ts of the appropriation contained in the original act. But they would not have any authority to expend any of this money for an Army or Navy hospital until after taken over by the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

New York (N. Y.) Quarantine Station: For improvements, including the water-supply system, power plant, and additional barracks, $500,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland offers an anrendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hill: Page 21, line 19, after the figures "1922" insert "Baltimore, Md., Quarantine Station: For improvements, including the building of wharves, to continue available during the fiscal year 1922, $75,000."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HILL. I will ask the gentleman to reserve his point of

The CHAIRMAN. The attention of the Chair was diverted at the conclusion of the reading of the paragraph. point of order made on the paragraph?

Mr. HICKS. No, Mr. Chairman, it was not.
Mr. BLANTON. I make a point of order against the gentleman's amendment; that it is new legislation, not authorized on a deficiency bill.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman reserve it?
Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman desires to speak on it, I will reserve it and make it a little later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, no point of order was made against the appropriation of $500,000 for the quarantine station in New York, and I hope the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] will withdraw his point of order against the present amendment, if for no other reason than to see the dove of peace hovering in this Chamber, with one limb upon the shoulder of my distinguished colleague from Maryland [Mr. Linthicum] and the other limb on my shoulder, and bearing in its beak the planks to repair the rotting wharves of the quarantine station at Baltimore. [Applause.]

We ask for only $75,000 to repair the wharf and other facilities at the quarantine station at Baltimore. The Secretary of the Treasury recommended $285,620 for the proper equipment of the quarantine station at Baltimore, but that was not provided in this bill. We have therefore asked for only $75,000 in order that the quarantine station may continue in operation.

Baltimore city has just authorized and is expending $50,000, 000 for the improvement of the port, and the great steamship lines are about to take away their ships because we can not receive the immigrants.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HILL. Yes; I yield to the gentleman. Mr. HICKS. Has the State of Maryland ceded the quarantine station at Baltimore to the Federal Government?

Mr. HILL. Yet; it has done so.
Mr. BLANTON. What is the present condition of the dove of peace?

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I will now yield to my colleague [Mr. LINTHICUM] the remainder of my five minutes to show the other side. I hope the gentleman from Texas will not deny to Baltimore the privilege of having $75,000 for immediate improvements.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman had succeeded in persuading the committee, and they had put that in the bill, probably no point of order would have been made against it.

Mr. HILL. I have not heard any objection from the committee, I will say to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? There was no objection.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Chairman, as the committee will remember, there was much discussion as to the transfer of the quarantine station at the various cities. It was only in the last Congress that we received an appropriation to pay for the transfer of the station at Baltimore, amounting to $176,000, and only a few days ago the money was paid to the city of Balti-The city had leased the quarantine station to the Government for the past few years at a dollar a year, and it rapidly decayed through use, occupation, and lack of care. The Government could not spend any money on it because it only had a lease, although it had through the Public Health Service entered into a contract to purchase it. The city of Baltimore could not spend any money on it because it had contracted to sell it to the Government, and so the station lay there in that condition, the wharves became dilapidated, the sewerage system out of order, buildings needing repair, and so forth.

I want to read this telegram from Dr. Richardson, who is the medical officer in charge of that station:

BALTIMORE, MD., May 20, 1921.

Hon. J. Charles Linthicum,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Answering your telegram, wharf completely rotted away; unsafe to put inspection boat alongside; no fire protection; practically no water supply. Old water tank about gone; retains only 8 inches water; pipe in bad condition; lighting facilities nil; building bad repair; no proper houses for medical officer or hospital attendants. Thirty-seven steamship lines every port from all over world; impossible to properly handle crews of vessels from infected ports with present poor conditions for building and lack of equipment. Typhus fever or bubonic plague may enter by way of these lines any time. Unprepared to handle such cases for properly handling immigrants or passengers, though several steamship companies are anxious to establish passenger lines to Baltimore. Appropriation absolutely necessary to properly conduct this quarantine station in a manner to do credit to the Government of the United States or to city of Baltimore if as a port she is to maintain a position among commercial cities of the United States.

RICHARDSON,

Medical Officer in Charge

United States Quarantine Station, Baltimore, Md.

That is from the doctor there, and it is confirmed by the information which I received from our Merchants and Manufacturers' Association and others who have inspected the place.

A man insures his property for years and years, and he and his people may have insured it for 100 years and never had a fire, but they keep on insuring it. The quarantine stations stand at these ports along the Atlantic seaboard and at all the coast cities as a protection, not alone to Baltimore city, not alone to New York or Boston or Philadelphia but as a safeguard to the health of this whole country. It may only do routine business, but now and then an epidemic breaks out and then it stands to insure the public safety. You gentlemen know how much we have been disturbed recently in reference to typhus fever or bubonic plague—a menace to the whole land.

Mr. LAYTON. In other words, it is not very reasonable to appropriate $500,000 for New York and allow disease possibly to creep in through Baltimore.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman has stated it exactly. New York has not received as much as it ought to have, and we are asking less than one-third of what they say Baltimore absolutely needs.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman and his colleagues who have been supporting this so strenuously have known of these conditions a long time?

Mr. LINTHICUM. We have.

Mr. BLANTON. And you presented this matter to the committee?

Mr. LINTHICUM. No Member of Congress went before the committee on any of these propositions. The Public Health Service went before them.

Mr. BLANTON. And they could not convert the committee? The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Mr. LINTHICUM. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HILL. Will the gentleman from Texas withdraw his objection if there is no objection from the committee?

Mr. BLANTON. I do not care to be placed in that attitude.

Mr. GOOD. I ask for the regular order.

LINTHICUM. The Public Health Service asked for $278,000 for this work. All we are asking here is $75,000-just enough to put that old wharf in shape, to put in a water system, to put in a sewerage system, and to extend the electric lights, Now, gentlemen, here is the situation: We inspected 37,000 people during the last year. It is true our immigration business has fallen off, but we have the model immigration station of the country, and immigration will soon come back to us. This quarantine station has nothing but some old acetylene-gas lamps in it at the present time. Very little water supply, no sewerage worth while. It must have care. All we ask is just enough money to keep the old place going, not to add anything but just to maintain it as you would a structure upon your farm or on your city lot.

A chain is only as strong as its weakest link. No matter how much you improve other quarantine stations, if you allow that at Baltimore to decay and become inefficient, and disease enters through that station and bereaves the country, it will avail little indeed to say we have greatly improved the stations at New York and Boston.

What will it profit us not to make this appropriation? must be made later, and the further the station decays the more it will cost. Economy and experience should teach us the timeworn adage that "A stitch in time saves nine." Baltimore has a population of 733,000 souls. It is the gateway to the South, the nearest approach to the West and great Southwest. Its harbor of 35-foot depth accommodates ships from the seven seas. Shall we withhold safety from it and through it to the land? I can not believe this committee will. I hope you will adopt this amendment and give us the $75,000 which is so sorely needed. [Applause.]
Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order the gentleman

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that it is new legislation and not a deficiency, on a deficiency appropriation bill, and that it is unauthorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Texas say about the paragraph to which it is offered? Is the amendment germane to the paragraph to which it is offered?

Mr. HICKS. I respectfully submit that it is too late to make

Mr. HICKS. I respectfully submit that it is too late to make any point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not make any point of order except against this amendment, which is not a deficiency, which is legislation on a deficiency appropriation bill and unauthorized

Mr. LINTHICUM. The gentleman made no point of order against the appropriation of $500,000 for the quarantine station for the city of New York, and this is an amendment to that item, appropriating $75,000 for the quarantine station at Baltimore; and that being in order by virtue of no point of order having been made against it, this amendment is likewise in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I call the attention of the Chair to the ruling, which has been made many times in the House during the last 40 years, that even where the committee itself could have put a provision upon the bill so that it might be in order on an appropriation bill, yet not having placed that provision in the bill, and having brought a certain bill into the House and reported it, the House has a right to stand on that bill, and that even the chairman of the committee himself has no au-thority to offer from the floor an amendment which he might otherwise have offered in the committee and placed in the

The CHAIRMAN. That is not the point at issue here.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say this is not deficiency. What is it if it is not a deficiency? deficiency. What is it if it is not a deficiency? Mr. BLANTON. There is no law that I know anything about

Mr. BLANTON. There is no law that I know anything about authorizing this quarantine station at Baltimore.

Mr. MANN. The Government owns the station.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, but there is no law authorizing it. It has been ceded to the Government by the city of Baltimore.

Mr. MANN. It was ceded to the Government under provisions of law. The Government owns the station. It owns the Now an appropriation is in order at any time to repair a building or a structure which the Government owns, owns this dock. Plainly this is a deficiency.

Mr. BLANTON, This is new legislation.

Mr. MANN. It is not legislation at all. It is an appropria-

Mr. BLANTON. It is for new construction.

Mr. MANN. No; it is not for new construction. It is to repair a dock which the Government now owns.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope that when I face St. Peter, if I have any trouble about getting in, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Mann] will be there in my behalf to convince St. Peter, because he will have unanswerable arguments on either side of the question. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Well, I think there would not be any trouble in convincing St. Peter that the gentleman ought to enter heaven-not now, but in the future. [Laughter.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I submit that this is a deficiency bill for the year 1921, and this amendment provides for new construction to be made during the next fiscal year, and I do not see how, under the ruling which the Chair made during the early part of the day, this amendment can be held to be in

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Texas had made a point of order to the paragraph of the bill to which this is offered as an amendment, the question that he suggests might arise; but the point of order was not made to the item to which this is offered as an amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I call the Chair's attention to the ruling of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Tilson] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Garrett] when this side of the House was in the majority. Both held, following a long line of decisions, that where a provision might come in a bill from a committee that would be subject to a point of order yet an amendment offered from the floor by a Member would not be in There is a long line of decisions holding that way.

The CHAIRMAN. - The item to which this is offered as an amendment reads as follows:

New York quarantine station: For improvement, including water supply, power plant, additional barracks, $500,000, to continue available during the fiscal year 1922.

To that item no point of order was made.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the Chair hold that an amendment to appropriate $500,000 for a quarantine station at Galveston would be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not before the Chair. To that item the gentleman from Maryland offers this amendment:

Baltimore quarantine station ' For improvement, including rebuilding of wharves, to continue available during the fiscal year 1922, $75,000.

To that amendment the gentleman from Texas makes a point of order that it is legislation on a deficiency appropriation bill. The amendment is a germane amendment to an item in the bill; the Chair thinks it is in order. Being an appropriation for repairs on Government property, it would be in order as an independent item, and the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. GOOD, Mr. Chairman, I am not very sympathetic toward the amendment for the quarantine station at Baltimore. Baltimore is a city which for 150 years has maintained a quarantine station that was worth only $176,000 when they sold it to us last year. Now they do not come with very clean hands when they ask us for $287,000 to improve it the first year. These quarantine stations are in a certain sense necessary for the proper growth and development of the city. One trouble is that we have no law now that authorizes the collection of fees for fumigation of vessels and things of that kind. We tried to put that kind of a law on the statute book and failed, except to New York. In March we collected as fees over in New York at the quarantine station $120,000, which was more than the cost of operation. Now, I think there is need for some repairs at Baltimore. We have carried a large sum to New York, but New York will pay into the Federal Treasury every year from $800,000 to $1,000,000 in fees. These other stations pay nothing unless we can get some legislation. Take the two stations, and they are not comparable. At New York last year there were 497,687 persons, aliens, examined. In Baltimore through the month of April for one year there were only 217 examined. Now, I do think they need some additional repairs there to the wharves, but the item for wharves is only $10,000, and for the 217 aliens examined for the year they are asking for bathing barracks to cost $50,000, and they ask for additional dormitory barracks $157,000. Now, I have said to these gentle-men I think these wharves ought to be kept in a fair state of repair. I have no objection to an appropriation for some reasonable amount to repair the wharves, but as long as we are not going to build the bathing barracks or the additional barracks, we do not need the lighting system. If the gentleman wants to modify his amendment for $20,000 or $25,000 to make repairs, I shall not object.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask to modify my amendment, making the amount $25,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks to modify his amendment, making it $25,000 instead of $75,000. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the Chair hear me a moment in the interest of uniformity of decisions?

The CHAIRMAN, The Chair will not. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Hill) there were 31 ayes and 23 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to,

The Clerk read as follows:

Birmingham, Ala., post office and courthouse (new): For furniture,

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order in order to ask the gentleman a question. What authority in law is there for this new construction at Birmingham?

Mr. GOOD. These three buildings have been nearly completed and will be turned over by the contractor soon.

Mr. BLANTON. These are not new items?

Mr. GOOD. These are all for furniture, and the buildings will be completed during this year. The buildings cost from $400,000 to over $1,000,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the reservation of the point of

The Clerk read as follows:

Honolulu, Hawaii, post office, courthouse, and customhouse: For furniture, $65,000.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 22, line 21, insert the following paragraph: "Bullding, Montana: Federal building, for furnishings for court oom and chambers for judge, clerk, marshal, attorney, and jury.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, that item came to the committee after we had concluded the hearings. It is a regular deficiency, and investigation which I made leads me to believe that the money ought to be appropriated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Montana.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

COAST GUARD.

Not to exceed $20,000 of the amount appropriated for the fiscal year 1921 under the subhead "rations" is transferred and made available for expenditure during that fiscal year under the subhead "Contingent expenses."

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph that it is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state his point of Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. GOOD. This is only a transfer between items of appropriations already made.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I know it is a transfer. It is a transfer from the subhend of rations of $20,000 that is made available for contingent expenses.

Mr. GOOD. Yes. They have more money in the rations fund than they need, and want to use a portion of that.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. They have the right to create a deficiency in the account of rations, have they not?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am satisfied they have, and I am satisfied they have come to the committee to secure $20,000 and they may later create a deficiency in the account of rations.

Mr. GOOD. Their strength is not fixed by law. It is only covered by appropriations, and I do not believe that rule would

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I am not certain about that, but I am inclined to think that they can create a deficiency in rations and come back here for a deficiency appro-

Mr. GOOD. No; but I will say to the gentleman that all of the appropriations in the Coast Guard are carried in the Treasury Department under one head.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I feel certain that they can create a deficiency for rations. They can do it in the Army and the Navy, and I am certain that they can do it in this service. When we transfer $20,000 from the rations fund to the contingent expenses on their statement that they have more than they need in rations, I fear that they will find out differently before the 30th of June, and will create a deficiency in rations and come back here for an appropriation.

Mr. GOOD. Commodore Reynolds asked that we do this. Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I know that he does, and it appeals to us as a transfer only; but when we give it to them, will create a deficiency in rations and then come back for

Mr. GOOD. Commodore Reynolds says that, due to the decrease in the cost in rations and to the forced decrease in complements, over $200,000 heretofore appropriated for rations will not be required, and hence it is desired to transfer from this subhead the sum of $20,000 to cover an additional amount required for additional expenses. So that he will have over $200,000 from which to take this $20,000.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. As the gentleman knows, I am opposed to it because it clearly encourages department heads whenever they come down here for an appropriation to entertain a belief that it will appeal to the discretion of Conentertain a belief that it will appeal to the discretion of Congress if they can find some other fund in the department that has a balance, and instead of converting that balance into the Treasury, as it ought to be, they will come here and ask that it be used for a different purpose in the department. That is what the distinguished commodore is doing now, and I do not blame him, because whenever he makes that appeal it will always be entertained here. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order that it is legislation on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentler order that it is legislation on this bill?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Yes. The CHAIRMAN. The item provides for $20,000 for rations. Could not this bill carry $20,000 for rations as a deficiency item?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. If there was a deficiency in the account for rations.

The CHAIRMAN. This is for the fiscal year 1921, a deficiency appropriation.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. This provides for a transfer from the rations account to the account for contingent ex-

The CHAIRMAN. The committee having authority to appropriate $20,000 out of the Treasury of the United States for a deficiency in rations in this bill, would it not have authority to take that $20,000 out of a fund that is available and carry it for that purpose?

Mr. WINGO. They would have authority to transfer it to another fund from which they would have the right to originally bring in an item, but you could not first make an appropriation that was in order and then bring in another item and transfer it to another purpose that is not in order.

Mr. GOOD. But this is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. This item would be in order as a deficiency appropriation, as the Chair understands it. Is it in order to take it from the rations fund and put it in the contingent fund? The Chair would like to have some of these experts on the rules of the House give him the benefit of their opinion upon the question of transferring funds of this kind out of the Treasury.

Mr. WINGO. I will be frank to say to the Chair that I think it is in order.

Mr. GOOD. I think it can be done.

Mr. GOOD. I think it can be done.

Mr. WINGO. And if two experts agree with the Chair, I think it is all right. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the item of $20,000 could be carried in this bill as a deficiency for the purposes for which the $20,000 is carried in this item. The difference is that it is carried from one purpose to another in this deficiency. bill, and the Chair is inclined to think that the Committee on Appropriations, having control over these funds, has authority, in this deficiency bill to carry the amount from one item to another as is proposed in this item. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES, TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

For purchase of file holders and file cases for use of the Const Guard and the accounting bureaus of the department, $2,500.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the paragraph in order to ask a question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WINGO. As I understand it, it is not intended to purchase these file cases outright. It is intended to purchase them from the Supply Committee.

Mr. GOOD. They are bound to purchase from the Supply

Mr. GOOD. They are bound to purchase from the supply Committee if they are available.

Mr. WINGO. If the Supply Committee has these file cases available, they are bound to buy from the committee.

Mr. GOOD. That is correct.

Mr. BLANTON. And does the gentleman know whether they are available or not?

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe that they are this kind of file

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask the gentleman, where one department has a lot of file cases that are in disuse, does that automatically place it under the Supply Committee or do they have to buy new file cases?

Mr. GOOD. Well, all that are purchased are purchased through the General Supply Committee. There is a law turning over to the Supply Committee all surplus typewriter supplies and equipment, and now, when a department files an application for a typewriter, for example, and office supplies, if the General Supply Committee has any on hand available suitable for their purpose, they must take a secondhand equipment and pay for it out of their appropriation at the price fixed, and the money is covered into the Treasury.

Mr. BLANTON. And secondhand file cases are going to be used where available?
Mr. GOOD. Yes,
Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of an automobile for the official use of the Attorney General, in exchange for old car now in use, $6,857.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. What kind of an automobile are we going to furnish our new Attorney General if he is to trade the present automobile in and then we have to pay $6,857 extra?

Mr. GOOD. The car that he is turning in is a Hudson car that is out of repair, caught fire down on the Speedway when the former Attorney General was occupying the position, and it is practically out of commission now and is worthless.

Mr. BLANTON. But the gentleman has not answered what kind of a new car he is to buy.

Mr. GOOD. I was going to state to the gentleman that the Attorney General desires a Packard limousine for his use as Attorney General. We have never questioned, I think, the kind of vehicle a member of the Cabinet should have.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman realizes that a Hudson car such as Attorney General Palmer had now costs only about $3,500-

Mr. GOOD. I really do not know about the price now, except in a general way. I understand they have practically doubled over the prewar price. Now, the price of this car was $8.000, and after the allowance for the old car and the Government discount, the amount required was $6,857.

Mr. BLANTON. The main thing I wanted to put in the RECORD is the fact that under our present economic régime, while our old Attorney General was willing to use a $3,500 Hudson

He had a Packard also.

Mr. BLANTON. That belonged to him personally. The new one wants to trade off the old Attorney General's Hudson car for a Packard limousine and we pay $6,857 extra.

Mr. GOOD. Well, the former Attorney General was very

Mr. BLANTON. I understand I can not object, because I am forced to withdraw the point of order, it not being sustainable, but I was inquiring into that system of economy.

Mr. GOOD. The former Attorney General also had a Packard

Mr. BLANTON. And paid for with his own money?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I suppose so.
Mr. BLANTON. But this is to be paid for out of the Government's exchequer.

Mr. GOOD. Oh, yes.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the reservation of the point of order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman this question: I have an impression that there was a cost limit fixed in the past. Has not that been the custom?

Mr. GOOD. No. I think no cost limit has ever been fixed inless it was fixed by the amount of the appropriation, and my recollection is that the amount asked for by a Cabinet official was the amount granted, with the exception that in the past my recollection is that sometimes the members of the Cabinet desired automobiles and horses and carriages both. I think that happened once or twice.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will say I recall distinctly three or four years ago there was an estimate, I think it was by the then Secretary of State Lansing, in which he asked for $4,500 for a car and they allowed $3,500; that is my recollection; on the ground that was the amount fixed at that time for the purchase of automobiles for Cabinet members.

Mr. GOOD. That was before the war, when the prices were about half of what they are now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not wish to seem to be objecting to this item in any way, but I was attracted by the statement that the gentleman made that there was no question ever made about the kind of car. It is my recollection that the Committee on Appropriations itself had a rule which it adhered to, and my recollection is that in the case of one former Secretary of State it was $3,500.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman may be right about that, but that was before the war, and the only time it has been up here recently—that is, within the last two or three years—has been when some of the members of the Cabinet asked for automobiles and carriages both and maintenance. Then the committee, and I think properly, said to the Secretaries that the attitude of Congress has been to give the proper car, the kind they ought to have, or horses and carriages, but not both. The gentleman may be right about that. My recollection was it was $4,000, but that was before the war, when prices were not half what they

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suppose there is no suitable car now owned by the War Department which could be transferred?

Mr. GOOD. I understand not; besides we have never done that with members of the Cabinet, although we have done it with others.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS OBJECTS, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

Detection and prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $150,000, including not to exceed $25,000 in addition to the amount heretofere authorized for necessary employees at the seat of government.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Is this amount an actual or expected deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. This will be an actual deficiency. conjectural, somewhat, yet, according to the chief clerk, who is the old chief clerk in the department, they have brought about a very great reduction in the force during the last three months. Otherwise there would have been a much larger deficiency than is now apparent; but even with this reduction of force they will need all we have carried here. The estimated reduction of the force during the last three months of the year amounts to about $150,000.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Was that caused largely by the Supreme Court's action on the Lever law?

Mr. GOOD. I think it was caused by the action of the present Attorney General in attempting to cut down the force. thought it was too large. I do not know that the Lever Act had anything to do with it. This force, as the gentleman will see, has grown very large. It cost in 1915, $485,000, and for this year, without this deficiency, they have $2,250,000, and this appropriation is for $150.000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

POSTAL SERVICE

OUT OF THE POSTAL REVENUES—OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POST-MASTER GENERAL.

For vehicle allowance, the hiring of drivers, the rental of vehicles, and the purchase and exchange and maintenance, including stable and garage facilities, of wagons or automobiles for, and the operation of, screen-wagon and city delivery and collection services, $1,500,000.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of pointing out the enormous increase in this item of vehicle service for the last few years.

I had charge of the preparation of the Post Office appropriation for the fiscal year 1921, and the First Assistant Postmaster General appeared, and we called attention to the fact that there had been a deficiency in this item for the two prior years, and asked him if he was asking sufficient to carry him through this year. He explained they had received 3,800 automobiles from the War Department and expected to receive 1,095 more, and that would enable this vehicle service to be conducted economically and within the appropriation of $10,250,000.

Here is an extract from the hearing:

You had a deficiency for 1918 of $1,500,000, and $2,500,000 in 1919? Mr. Koons. Yes, sir; because our estimates were based on a peace sis and not war conditions. But this year we will not have any

We granted $10,250,000 on the understanding there would be no deficiency. Yet in spite of this, Mr. Koons appeared before the Appropriations Committee and obtained a deficiency appropriation of $4,000,000 for this particular item, and on top of that he now goes before the Appropriation Committee and asks for and gets $1,500,000 more, making $5,500,000 deficiency for the fiscal year 1921, after we had given him all he asked. item has increased from about $1,000,000 nine years ago to nearly $16,000,000 for the present year. This item has grown more rapidly than any other in the Post Office expenses, and is due to parcel post and the fact that they have substituted in the large cities Government owned and operated automobiles instead of having the contract service.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this subject on the postal deficit.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks on the subject indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Mr. STEENERSON. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

POSTAL DEFICIT.

Under the accounting system established for the Post Office Department postal receipts are collected by it, and all expenditures are paid, pursuant to appropriations by Congress, out of postal revenues, and whenever these are insuffic ent to pay the bills incurred the Postmaster General is authorized to certify a deficit to the Treasury and to make a draft for the amount The Auditor for the Post Office Department is an officer of the Treasury, and to him all receipts must be reported and all expenditures are audited by him. His annual report is required to be published as a part of the annual report of the Postmaster General. The difference between the audited receipts and audited expenditures constitute the surplus or deficit, as the case may be.

In his first annual report, fiscal year 1913, the former Postmaster General pointed out that theretofore the postal deficit or surplus had been ascertained by comparing the audited receipts with the audited expenditures for the year, but he also explained that this method was faulty inasmuch as all receipts were cash, but expenditures were not and could not be paid until some time elapsed after they were incurred, and consequently a delay in auditing receipts at the end of the fiscal year might unduly increase the apparent surplus. Thus he explained the receipts for that year exceeded the expenditures by $4,540,000, but there were outstanding debts on account of service which he estimated, so that he made the actual surplus only $3,841,000. By this method he claimed that the surplus of $219,000 reported for 1911 by his predecessor, Mr. Hitchcock, should in fact be wiped out, and that therefore his surplus for 1913 was the first in 30 years, when Mr. Gresham, a Democrat, was in office. In his next annual report, 1914, he followed this new method and subtracted from the expenditures for the year what had been paid for service on account of prior years and then added estimated outstanding obligations, making a total under the heading "Estimated expenses for the fiscal year 1914 paid and payable." In this way he reduced the reported surplus from $4,376,463 to $3,569,687.

For reasons which are now obvious he did not follow his new improved plan in his last report, 1920. Had he done so he would have been compelled to tell the public what the unpaid and outstanding bills of his administration amounted to. included increased rates allowed for railway mail pay by the Interstate Commerce Commission of $65,575,832 to the United States Railroad Administration and a number of smaller items of railway mail pay, in all amounting to $77,960,290.52, and other items of deficiency aggregating a total of $81,085,467.75. These items are appropriated for in the recent deficiency bill and represent unpaid bills incurred during the administration of Mr. Burleson which must be paid out of the Treasury and added to the already existing deficit as shown below.

EXHIBIT A.

Below is a list of deficiency appropriations as contained in House bill 15962, which represents the amounts required to pay the debts of the Post Office Department for the eight years 1913 to 1920, inclusive. These bills are unpaid, and will not be paid until these deficiency appropriations are available:

From the Treasury statement printed below it appears that for the eight years 1913 to 1920, both inclusive, the Treasury lost by reason of its connection with the Post Office Department $12,867,154.19. That is the amount the Postmaster General drew out on account of deficiencies in postal revenues to pay the bills. In addition we now find there are unpaid bills for these years amounting to $81,085,567.75, carried in the deficiency bill, or a total of $92,952.791.44;

NOTE: + indicates gain; - Indicates loss.

Mr. Burleson from time to time published statements showing how he had enriched the Treasury by depositing surplus postal funds, but the official statement shows that for the eight years of his administration the Treasury actually lost $12,-667,154.19 by reason of its connection with the Post Office Department for those years. In addition to this amount, the above items of $81,085,467.75 should be added, making a total of $93,742,622.50.

But even this colossal sum does not represent the Burleson deficit. The Treasury statement includes another item for "Deficit under Federal control of telegraph and telephones" of $12,018,557,68, or a grand total of $105,961,180.18, a postal deficit that far exceeds anything for a similar period since the foundation of the Government.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the Record on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I make the same request. The gentleman from Texas also asks The CHAIRMAN. unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the Record. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to an item that was objected to the other day. The gentle-man who made the point of order on it has investigated it and has found that it is all right. It is on page 7, lines 7 to 10.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to page 7, to the item covered by lines 7 to 10.

Is there objection?

There was no objection. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I made a point of order to this item the other day, and this morning I saw Judge McCoy, of the District Supreme Court, and he stated that he had investigated the matter and that these positions were absolutely necessary for the proper conduct of the court business. his statement, and that of one other judge who agreed with him on the matter, I agreed to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. Mr. GOOD. I ask also to return to an item on page 20, commencing with line 1.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman from Iowa have to offer the provision anew?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; I offer the following provision.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 7, insert "For additional employees from June 1, 1921, to June 30, 1922, inclusive, at annual rates of compensation as follows: Jury clerk, $1,600; 4 enrolling clerks, at $1,600 each; stenographer and typist, $1,400; in all, $10,183.34."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to prior fiscal year return also to page 20 in order that I may offer an amendment lution thereon.

on lines 1 to 13, inclusive. That went out on a point of order, think, under a misapprehension.

.The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to return to page 20 for the purpose of offering an amendment to lines 1 to 13, inclusive. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOOD. I offer the amendment from lines 1 to 13, on page 20.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 20, beginning at the top, insert:

"The third proviso of the paragraph making appropriations for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, as contained in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922, is hereby amended to read as follows: "Provided further, That no person shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum except the following: Three at not exceeding $7,500 each, 9 at not exceeding $5,000 each, 28 at not exceeding $4,500 each, 49 at not exceeding $3,000 each, 68 at not exceeding $2,500 each, and 215 at not exceeding $2,000 each."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amend-

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. GOOD. I think the point of order was made on the assumption that some other committee had jurisdiction over this matter

Mr. WINGO. My understanding was that the point of order was made on the ground that it was an increase of salary. Is not that true?

Mr. GOOD. It is not an increase of salary. It lifts the limitation somewhat, but the whole matter was carried on the The Committee on Appropriations is alone responsible for the limitation and frankly acknowledges that the limitations would cripple this service, and the point of order was made on the assumption, I think, that some committee other than the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction of this matter.

Mr. WINGO. The effect of this amendment will be to increase the salaries of some of the employees, will it not?

Mr. GOOD. Not over what they are now receiving, but over what they otherwise would receive. It permits in the department a larger number of persons who would receive salaries

Mr. WINGO. In other words, this puts back the salaries where they were?

Mr. GOOD. No; not all of them. I will say to the gentleman that those who are administering the reorganization of the bureau are satisfied that that bureau can not properly function unless this is done, and we will take upon ourselves a serious responsibility if we have boys writing in here on questions of allowances, and so forth, if we are not able to give that organization the force that will permit it to function in a regular and healthy way. Mr. WINGO. As I understand, the current law cut down and put restrictions on that bureau which it is now found will cripple the service. The effect of some of these restrictions is to hold down salaries. If it were any other service than this I should feel like insisting on the point of order. My observation in the last four or five weeks is that that bureau is getting worse and worse. I know of a case where absolutely for a year a man has been lying helpless, and the Red Cross has appealed on this man's behalf. This morning I got an appeal from the Red Cross in another city, from a friend whom I happen to know, stating that they can not get this bureau to answer letters. If this will do them any good and wake them up and help them to hasten their adjudication of cases, I will not make the point of order, because something ought to be done to make them attend to business more expeditiously.

Mr. GOOD. That is the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GOOD. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Campbell of Kansas, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6300) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, had come to no reso-

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. Drewry, for three days, on account of sickness in his family.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Cravens, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 535) to prevent the unauthorized landing of submarine cables in the United

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 2435. An act imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, and to provide revenue; to regulate commerce with foreign countries; to prevent dumping of foreign merchandise on the markets of the United States; to regulate the value of foreign money; and for other purposes

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 535. An act relating to the landing and operation of submarine cables in the United States.

LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. Osborne, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House without leaving copies the papers in the cases of H. R. 843, 835, 836, 849, 846, and 839, Sixty-sixth Congress, no adverse reports having been made

THE PACKERS BILL.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill now under consideration—not, however, to interfere with Calendar Wednesday—the House take up H. R. 6320 for consideration under the general rules of the House, the same being what is known as the packers bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the request for unanimous consent that the House has heard. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understood the gentleman to say "not to interfere with Calendar Wednesday."

Mr. MONDELL. I may make a request later to dispense with Calendar Wednesday, but for the present I am not prepared to do that. My thought was that we would probably finish the deficiency bill some time to-morrow afternoon and could then take up the packers bill for consideration. Whether or not we should want to dispense with Calendar Wednesday would depend on the status of measures from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Unfortunately one of the minority members of the Committee on Agriculture has been called out of the city on account of a death in his family.

Mr. MONDELL. I understand that that member is favorable

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not personally know as to his attitude. I do not wish to object. It may be that subsequent developments might cause me to make some request to the gentleman touching the matter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. I should like to ask the gentleman if this is the same measure that was pending in the last session?

Mr. MONDELL. No, Mr. Speaker, it is not the same measure. Some features of it are similar to that measure, but in the main it is quite a different measure.

Mr. WALSH. How much debate will there be?

Mr. MONDELL. That will be a matter to be determined when the bill is taken up. I imagine some considerable debate will be desired. There is no disposition to shorten the debate.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Yes. Mr. MONDELL.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Does the gentleman happen to know whether there is much controversy about the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I understand that the bill is unanimously reported from the committee, and I do not know that there is very much controversy about it. I doubt if there is.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will suggest that it is pretty hard to tell about that. We had a bill in recently that was reported unanimously from the same committee, where there was a great deal of opposition.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, I have no doubt there will be a difference of opinion in regard to the provisions of the bill; it would be very extraordinary if there were not; but as far as the committee was concerned it was reported unanimously.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman couple with his request the provision that it shall be a continuing order?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT,

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, May 24, 1921, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. VAILE, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2205) to add certain lands on the North Fork of the Shoshone River to the Shoshone National Forest, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 88), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Resolution for relief of the disabled.

Resolution for relief of the disabled.

Whereas as a part of the great body of American public opinion which compelled and supported the entrance of this Nation into the World War for democracy and freedom against autocracy and oppression, we feel solemnly and in duty bound to accept along with the victory our troops so handsomely won the obligation to render to our soldiers, sailors, and marines injured and disabled in the service every aid, comfort, and restitution which through hospital care, financial support, and vocational rehabilitation a grateful Nation can give; and Whereas now more than two years after the conclusion of the war there remains much to be done in providing adequate hospitalization, compensation, and vocational training for our disabled; and Whereas the American Legion, representing the great bulk of the disabled, as well as all exservice men and women, is, after careful analysis and study, suggesting and supporting a program of relief for the disabled which commends itself to us as most conservative and reasonable; and
Whereas with deep consciousness of our debt to the disabled we wish to join our voices with the voice of the American Legion in requesting that the legislation proposed be given earnest consideration by the national Congress: Therefore be it

*Resolved, That we hereby indorse the program of legislation asked by the national Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we hereby indorse the program of legislation asked by the American Legion of the Sixty-seventh Congress in the interest of the disabled soldiers, sailors, and marines of America, and urge upon our Representative from this clistrict and our Senators from this State the speedy enactment of the five bills involved, including—
1. Legislation consolidating the three ex-service bureaus.
2. Appropriations for a permanent hospital building program.
3. Legislation decentralizing the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.
4. Legislation to further extend the benefits of vocational training and providing vocational training with pay for all disabled men with disabilities of 10 per cent or more traceable to the service.
5. Legislation providing privilege of retirement with pay for disabled emergency officers of the World War.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HARRELD:

A bill (S. 1870) to grant the military target range of Lincoln County, Okla., known as the Chandler Rifle Range, to the city of Chandler, Okla., and reserving the right to use for military and aviation purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

By Mr. WADSWORTH:

A bill (S. 1871) to amend section 403 of the revenue act of 1918, approved February 24, 1919; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. McNARY: A bill (S. 1872) to authorize the acquiring of a site and construction of a Federal building at Astoria, Oreg.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. WILLIS:

A bill (S. 1873) granting a pension to George A. Devoe (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McCORMICK:

A bill (S. 1874) to create in the Department of State the bureau of insular and territorial affairs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: A bill (S. 1875) to amend section 4a of the act of Congress approved June 4, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

bill (S. 1876) to amend the interstate commerce act by adding thereto a new section, No. 20b, and to amend an act entitled "An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes," approved October 15, 1914, by adding a new paragraph to section 10 thereof; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. EDGE:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) granting consent of Congress to the States of New York and New Jersey to enter into the agreement for the establishment of "the port of New York authority"; to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 58, line 16, insert before the word "officers" the word "flying," so that the beginning of the paragraph shall read:

"There shall be a chief of the bureau of aeronautics, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the officers of the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps, who shall within one year after his appointment qualify as an already pilot or observer."

On page 59 line 22 strike out the period offer the conditions of the senate of the conditions of the observer."

On page 59, line 22, strike out the period after the word "Navy," replace with a colon, and add the following: "Provided, That not to exceed 30 per cent of the officers in each grade below that of rear admiral who fail to qualify as aircraft pilots on as aircraft observers within one year after the date of their detail into the bureau of acronautics shall be permitted to remain detailed in this bureau: Provided further, That flying units or detachments with the exception of aircraft carriers or other vessels shall in all cases be commanded by flying officers."

On page 59, at the end of section 16, add a new section, as follows:
"Sec. 17. Provided, That hereafter no member of the Army or Navy, on the active or retired list, shall be either directly or indirectly cannected with or in the employ of individuals, capartnerships, or corporations which are engaged in the manufacture of supplies, ordnance, or materials of any kind which the Government shall purchase or which submit bids or proposals therefor, or have or offer to have any contractual relations for furnishing supplies, ordnance, or materials to the Government: Provided further, That violation of this section shall be punishable by a reduction of rank and the forfeiture of all pay and allowances."

Mr. POINDEXTER submitted an amendment providing that all orders or contracts for work or material, under authoriza-tion of law, heretofore or hereafter placed with Governmentowned establishments, shall be considered as obligations in the same manner as provided for similar orders placed with private contractors, and appropriations for such work or material shall remain available for payment therefor as in the case of contracts or orders with private contractors, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

CONDITIONS IN THE COAL FIELDS OF WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. JOHNSON. I submit a resolution which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The resolution (S. Res. 80) was read and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, as follows:

Whereas conditions of violence at present exist along the border between West Virginia and Kentucky; and Whereas for a long period in the past in the coal fields of West Virginia there have been disturbed coaditions which have led to turbulence and violence and bloodshed; and Whereas the conditions referred to are a menace to orderly democratic government and to the general safety and welfare of the people living in the territory affected: Therefore be it in the territory affected: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, or any subcommittee thereof, to be appointed by it, is hereby authorized and directed to make a thorough and complete investigation of the conditions existing in the coal fields of West Virginia and in the territory adjacent to the border of West Virginia and Kentucky; that said committee ascertain the causes of the recent acts of violence upon said border and of the conditions which have existed, and do now exist, in the said coal fields, and generally investigate thoroughly the causes which have led to conditions which have obtained in the past, and which now exist in said territory, and report its findings and conclusions thereon to the Senate.

REMOVAL OF SOLDIER DEAD FROM FRANCE.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I should like unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a short letter from Rev. Oliver Paul Barnhill, printed in the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, the subject mat-ter of which refers to the bringing back of the remains of dead soldiers from abroad. There has been a request made to me by Judge McCoy, of this District, that it might be inserted in the RECORD in answer to a previous communication from other authorities opposing this action. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"BRING GUR BOXS BACK FROM FRANCE—PLRA OF ASSISTANT PASTOR OF MARBLE COLLEGIATE CHURCH,

"EDITOR BROOKLYN DAILY EAGLE:

"By contact with those immediately concerned I am made aware that there is a great desire to have the bodies of our soldier dead disinterred and brought home for reburial.

Chiefly because the cemeteries of France are inaccessible, for obvious reasons, to the majority of our bereaved families, and for other reasons not so patent, a league has been formed entitled 'Bring Home the Soldier Dead League of the United States.' This league is composed exclusively of relatives of our soldier dead, whose remains are desired returned to America. Their slogan is 'An American tomb in America for every American hero who died on fereign soil.' The next of kin are pleading for their dead to be buried in American soil. I affirm that the wishes of the next of kin, presumably the parents, in all these cases should be respected and complied with. It is interesting, and when first brought to our attention it is news; to read, e. g., that it is the policy of the British Government to bury their soldier dead where they fall, or that France is not in favor of removing the remains of our hero dead, or that distinguished individuals, such as Bishop Brent, Gen. O'Ryan, President Hibben and John H. Finley, Thomas Nelson Page and Owen Wister, prefer having our beys' bodies remain in France. But let us do our own thinking.

"If a mother who has gone down to the gates of hell and brought back a man child is sentimental about the body of that erstwhile wee bairn when prone and cold in death, prerogative. What earthly government, what individual, can say her nay? Let her have her blessed boy's body that it may be reburied in the family plot, in a new and individual tomb, undesecrated by mortality, in consecrated ground, in the dear U. S. A.—at home. There let that mother alone with her grief to deck that grave with evergreens and perennials and to water them with her tears.

"I can understand why people who wear gold stars want the bodies of their dear ones brought home. I can understand why France opposes this. But why should these detached outsiders oppose in academic fashion the granting of the hearts' desire of these sorely bereaved families?

"OLIVER PAUL BARNHILL, "Assistant Pastor Marble Collegiate Church, "Fifth Avenue and Twenty-ninth Street, New York City."

SPEECH OF HON. HENRY W. GRADY.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, many thousands of the people of my State meet to-day in the city of Atlanta to do honor to the late Henry W. Grady, patriot, publicist, and statesman, who, through his speeches and writings, did more in his time to bring about reconciliation between the sections of our country than any other man. I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD his speech delivered in New York City before the New England Club December 21, 1886.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"THE NEW SOUTH.

"On the 21st of December, 1886, Mr. Grady, in response to an urgent invitation, delivered the following address at the banquet of the New England Club, New York:

"There was a South of slavery and secession—that South is dead. There is a South of union and freedom—that South, thank God, is living, breathing, growing every hour.' words, delivered from the immortal lips of Benjamin H. Hill, at Tammany Hall, in 1866, true then and truer now, I shall make my text to-night.

"Mr. President and gentlemen, let me express to you my appreciation of the kindness by which I am permitted to ad-I make this abrupt acknowledgment advisedly, for I feel that if, when I raise my provincial voice in this ancient and august presence, I could find courage for no more than the opening sentence, it would be well if in that sentence I had met in a rough sense my obligation as a guest, and had perished, so to speak, with courtesy on my lips and grace in my heart. Permitted, through your kindness, to catch my second wind, let me say that I appreciate the significance of being the first southerner to speak at this board, which bears the substance, if it surpasses the semblance, of original New England hospitality, and honors the sentiment that in turn honors you, but in which my personality is lost and the compliment to my people made plain.
"I bespeak the utmost stretch of your courtesy to-night.

am not troubled about those from whom I come. ber the man whose wife sent him to a neighbor with a pitcher of milk, and who, tripping on the top step, fell with such casual interruptions as the landings afforded into the basement, and, while picking himself up, had the pleasure of hearing his wife call out, 'John, did you break the pitcher?'

"'No; I didn't,' said John, 'but I'll be dinged if I don't." "So, while those who call me from behind may inspire me with energy, if not with courage, I ask an indulgent hearing from you. I beg that you will bring your full faith in American fairness and frankness to judgment upon what I shall say. There was an old preacher once who told some boys of the Bible lesson he was going to read in the morning. The boys, finding the place, glued together the connecting pages. The next morning he read on the bottom of one page, 'When Noah was 120 years old he took unto himself a wife, who was'then turning the page—'140 cubits long, 40 cubits wide, built of gopher wood, and covered with pitch inside and out.' He was naturally puzzled at this. He read it again, verified it, and then said: 'My friends, this is the first time I ever met 'My friends, this is the first time I ever met this in the Bible, but I accept this as an evidence of the assertion that we are fearfully and wonderfully made.' If I could get you to hold such faith to-night, I could proceed cheerfully to the task I otherwise approach with a sense of consecration. "PURITAN AND CAVALIER.

"Pardon me one word, Mr. President, spoken for the sole purpose of getting into the volumes that go out annually freighted with the rich eloquence of your speakers—the fact that the cavalier as well as the Puritan was on the continent in its early days, and that he was 'up and able to be about.' I have read your books carefully and I find no mention of that fact, which seems to me an important one for preserving a sort of historical equilibrium if for nothing else.

"Let me remind you that the Virginia cavalier first challenged France on the continent—that cavalier, John Smith, gave New England its very name, and was so pleased with the job that he has been handing his own name around ever since, and that while Myles Standish was cutting off men's ears for courting a girl without her parents' consent, and forbade men to kiss their wives on Sunday, the cavalier was courting every-thing in sight, and that the Almighty had vouchsafed great increase to the cavalier colonies, the huts in the wilderness being as full as the nests in the woods.

"But having incorporated the cavalier as a fact in your charming little books, I shall let him work out his own salvation, as he has always done, with engaging gallantry, and we will hold no controversy as to his merits. Why should we? Neither Puritan nor cavalier long survived as such. The virtues and good traditions of both happily still live for the inspiration of their sons and the saving of the old fashion. both Puritan and cavalier were lost in the storm of the first revolution, and the American citizen, supplanting both and stronger than either, took possession of the Republic bought by their common blood and fashioned to wisdom, and charged himself with teaching men government and establishing the voice of the people as the voice of God.

"My friends, Dr. Talmage has told you that the typical American has yet to come. Let me tell you that he has already come. Great types, like valuable plants, are slow to flower and fruit; but from the union of these colonists, Puritans and cavaliers, from the straightening of their purposes and the crossing of their blood, slow perfecting through a century, came he who stands as the first typical American, the first who comprehended within himself all the strength and gentleness, all the majesty and grace of this Republic-Abraham Lincoln. He was the sum of Puritan and cavalier, for in his ardent nature were fused the virtues of both, and in the depths of his great soul the faults of both were lost. He was greater than Puritan, greater than cavalier, in that he was American and that in his honest form were first gathered the vast and thrilling forces of his ideal government-charging it with such tremendous meaning and elevating it above human suffering that martyrdom, though infamously aimed, came as a fitting crown to a life consecrated from the cradle to human liberty. Let us, each cherishing the traditions and honoring his fathers, build with reverent hands to the type of this simple but sublime life, in which all types are honored and in our common glory as Americans there will be plenty and to spare for your forefathers and for mine. "THAT OTHER ARMY.

"Dr. Talmage has drawn for you with a master's hand the picture of your returning armies. He has told you how, in the pomp and circumstance of war, they came back to you, marching with proud and victorious tread, reading their glory in a nation's eyes. Will you bear with me while I tell you of another army that sought its home at the close of the late war-an army that marched home in defeat and not in victory, in pathos and not in splendor, but in glory that equaled yours and to hearts as loving as ever welcomed heroes home? Let me picture to you the footsore Confederate soldier as, buttoning up in his faded gray jacket the parole which was to bear testimony to his children of his fidelity and faith, he turned his face southward from Appomattox in April, 1865. him as ragged, half-starved, heavy hearted, enfeebled by want and wounds, having fought to exhaustion, he surrenders his gun, wrings the hands of his comrades in silence, and lifting his tear-stained and pallid face for the last time to the graves that dot old Virginia hills, pulls his gray cap over his brow, and begins the slow and painful journey. What does he find—let me ask you who went to your homes eager to find in the welcome you had justly earned full payment for four years' sacrifice—what does he find when, having followed the battle-stained cross against overwhelming odds, dreading death not half so much as surrender, he reaches the home he left so prosperous and beautiful? He finds his house in ruins, his farm devastated, his slaves free, his stock killed, his barns empty, his trade destroyed, his money worthless, his social system, feudal in its magnificence, swept away; his people without law or legal status, his comrades slain, and the burdens of others heavy on his shoulders. Crushed by defeat, his very traditions are gone. Without money, credit, employment, material, or training, and beside all this confronted with the gravest problem that ever met human intelligence-the establishing of a status for the vast body of his liberated slaves.

"What does he do, this hero in gray with a heart of gold? Does he sit down in sullenness and despair? Not for a day. Surely God, who had stripped him of his prosperity, inspired him in his adversity. As ruin was never before so overwhelming, never was restoration swifter. The soldier stepped from the trenches into the furrow; horses that had charged Federal guns marched before the plow, and fields than ran red with human blood in April were green with the harvest in June; women reared in luxury cut up their dresses and made breeches for their husbands and, with a patience and heroism that fit women always as a garment, gave their hands to work. There was little bitterness in all this. Cheerfulness and frankness prevailed. 'Bill Arp' struck the keynote when he said, 'Well, I killed as many of them as they did of me, and now I'm going to work'; or the soldier returning home after defeat and roasting some corn on the roadside, who made the remark to his comrade, 'You may leave the South, if you want to, but I am going to Sandersville, kiss my wife, and raise a crop, and if the Yankees fool with me any more I'll whip 'em again.' I want to say to Gen. Sherman, who is considered an able man in our parts, though some people think he is a kind of careless man about fire, that from the ashes he left us in 1864 we have raised a brave and beautiful city; that somehow or other we have caught the sunshine in the bricks and mortar of our homes and have builded therein not one ignoble prejudice or memory.

have builded therein not one ignoble prejudice or memory.

"But what is the sum of our work? We have found out that in the summing up the free Negro counts more than he did as a slave. We have planted the schoolhouse on the hill top and made it free to white and black. We have sowed towns and cities in the place of theories and put business above politics. We have challenged your spinners in Massachusetts and your iron makers in Pennsylvania. We have learned that the $400,-000,000 annually received from our cotton crop will make us rich when the supplies that make it are home raised. reduced the commercial rate of interest from 24 to 6 per cent and are floating 4 per cent bonds. We have learned that one northern immigrant is worth fifty foreigners and have smoothed the path to southward, wiped out the place where Mason and Dixon's line used to be, and hung out the latchstring to you and yours. We have reached the point that marks perfect harmony in every household, when the husband confesses that the pies which his wife cooks are as good as those his mother used to bake; and we admit that the sun shines as brightly and the moon as softly as it did before the war. We have established thrift in city and country. We have fallen in love with work. We have restored comfort to homes from which culture and elegance never departed. We have let economy take root and spread among us as rank as the crabgrass which sprang from Sherman's Cavalry camps until we are ready to lay odds on the Georgia Yankee as he manufactures relics of the battle field in a 1-story shanty and squeezes pure olive oil out of his cotton seed against any down-easter that ever swapped wooden nutmegs for flannel sausage in the valleys of Vermont. Above all, we know that we have achieved in these 'piping times of peace' a fuller independence for the South than that which our fathers sought to win in the forum by their eloquence or compel in the field by their swords.

"BEAUTIFUL IN SUFFERING.

"It is a rare privilege, sir, to have had part, however humble, in this work. Never was nobler duty confided to human hands than the uplifting and upbuilding of the prostrate and bleeding South—misguided, perhaps, but beautiful in her suffering, and honest, brave, and generous always. In the record of her social, industrial, and political illustration we await with confidence the verdict of the world.

"But what of the Negro? Have we solved the problem he presents or progressed in honor and equity toward solution? Let the record speak to the point. No section shows a more prosperous laboring population than the Negroes of the South, none in fuller sympathy with the employing and land-owning class. He shares our school fund, has the fullest protection of our laws, and the friendship of our people. Self-interest, as well as honor, demand that he should have this. Our future, our very existence, depend upon our working out this problem in full and exact justice. We understand that when Lincoln signed the emancipation proclamation, your victory was assured, for he then committed you to the cause of human liberty, against which the arms of man can not prevail—while those of our statesmen who trusted to make slavery the cornerstone of the Confederacy doomed us to defeat as far as they could, committing us to a cause that reason could not defend or the sword maintain in sight of advancing civilization.

"Had Mr. Toombs said, which he did not say, 'that he would call the roll of his slaves at the foot of Bunker Hill,' he would have been foolish, for he might have known that whenever slavery became entangled in war it must perish, and that the chattel in human flesh ended forever in New England when your fathers—not to be blamed for parting with what did not pay—sold their slaves to our fathers—not to be praised for knowing a paying thing when they saw it. The relations of the southern people with the Negro are close and cordial. We remember with what fidelity for four years he guarded our defenseless women and children, whose husbands and fathers were fighting against his freedom. To his eternal credit be it said that whenever he struck a blow for his own liberty he fought in open battle, and when at last he raised his black and humble hands that the shackles might be struck off, those hands were innocent of wrong against his helpless charges and worthy to be taken in loving grasp by every man who honors loyalty and devotion. Ruffians have maltreated him, rascals have misled him, philanthropists established a bank for him, but the South, with the North, protests against injustice to this simple and sincere people. To liberty and enfranchisement is as far as law can carry the Negro. The rest must be left to conscience and common sense. It must be left to those among whom his lot is cast, with whom he is indissolubly connected, and whose prosperity depends upon their possessing his intelligent sympathy and confidence. Faith has been kept with him, in spite of calumnious assertions to the contrary by those who assume to speak for us or by frank opponents. Faith will be kept with him in the future, if the South holds her reason and integrity. "LOYAL TO UNION.

"But have we kept faith with you? In the fullest sense, yes. When Lee surrendered—I do not say when Johnson surrendered, because I understand he still alludes to the time when he met Gen. Sherman last as the time when he determined to abandon any further prosecution of the struggle-when Lee surrendered, I say, and Johnson quit, the South became, and has since been, loyal to this Union. We fought hard enough to know that we were whipped, and in perfect frankness accept as final the arbitrament of the sword to which we had appealed. The South, found her jewel in the toad's head of defeat. The shackles that had held her in narrow limitations fell forever when the shackles of the Negro slave were broken. Under the old régime the Negroes were slaves to the South; the South was a slave to the system. The old plantation, with its simple police regula-tions and feudal habit, was the only type possible under slavery. Thus was gathered in the hands of a splendid and chivalric oligarchy the substance that should have been diffused among the people, as the rich blood, under certain artificial conditions, is gathered at the heart, filling that with affluent rapture but leaving the body chill and colorless.

"The old South rested everything on slavery and agriculture, unconscious that these could neither give nor maintain healthy growth. The new South presents a perfect democracy, the oligarchs leading in the popular movement—a social system compact and closely knitted, less splendid on the surface, but stronger at the core—a hundred farms for every plantation, 50 homes for every palace—and a diversified industry that meets the complex need of this complex age.

"The new South is enamored of her new work. Her soul is stirred with the breath of a new life. The light of a grander day is falling fair on her face. She is thrilling with the consciousness of growing power and prosperity. As she stands upright full statured and equal among the people of the earth, breathing the keen air and looking out upon the expanded horizon, she understands that her emancipation came because through the inscrutable wisdom of God her honest purpose was crossed and her brave armies were beaten.

This is said in no spirit of timeserving or apology. The South has nothing for which to apologize. She believes that the late struggle between the States was war and not rebellion, revolution and not conspiracy, and that her convictions were as honest as yours. I should be unjust to the dauntless spirit of the South and to my own convictions if I did not make this plain in this presence. The South has nothing to take back. In my native town of Athens is a monument that crowns its central hill-a plain, white shaft. Deep cut into its shining side is a name dear to me above the names of men-that of a brave and simple man who died in brave and simple faith. for all the glories of New England, from Plymouth Rock all the way, would I exchange the heritage he left me in his soldier's death. To the foot of that I shall send my children's children to reverence him who ennobled their name with his heroic blood. But, sir, speaking from the shadow of that memory which I honor as I do nothing else on earth, I say that the cause in which he suffered and for which he gave his life was adjudged by higher and fuller wisdom than his or mine, and I am glad that the omniscient God held the balance of battle in His Almighty hand and that human slavery was swept forever from American soil, the American Union was saved from the wreck

"This message, Mr. President, comes to you from consecrated ground. Every foot of soil about the city in which I live is as sacred as a battle ground of the Republic. Every hill that invests it is hallowed to you by the blood of your brothers who died for your victory, and doubly hallowed to us by the blow of those who died hopeless, but undaunted, in defeat-sacred soil to all of us—rich with memories that make us purer and stronger and better—silent but stanch witnesses in its red desolation of the matchless valor of American hearts and the deathless glory of American arms, speaking an eloquent witness in its white peace and prosperity to the indissoluble union of American States and the imperishable brotherhood of the American people. Now, what answer has New England to this message? Will she permit the prejudice of war to remain in the hearts of the conquerors when it has died in the hearts of the conquered? Will she transmit this prejudice to the next generation, that in their hearts, which never felt the generous ardor of conflict, it may perpetuate itself? Will she withhold, save in strained courtesy, the hand which straight from his soldier's heart Grant offered to Lee at Appomattox? Will she make the vision of a restored and happy people which gathered above the couch of your dying captain, filling his heart with grace, touching his lips with praise, and glorifying his path to the grave—will she make this vision on which the last sigh of his expiring soul breathed a benediction a cheat and delusion? If she does, the South, never abject in asking for comradeship, must accept with dignity its refusal; but if she does not refuse to accept in frankness and sincerity this message of good will and friendship, then will the prophecy of Webster, delivered in this very society 40 years ago amid tremendous applause, become true, be verified in its fullest sense, when he said, 'Standing hand to hand and clasping hands, we should remain united as we have been for 60 years, citizens of the same country, members of the same Gov-ernment, united, all united now and united forever.' There have been difficulties, contentions, and controversies, but I tell you that in my judgment-

"Those opposed eyes,
Which like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
All of one nature, of one substance bred,
Did lately meet in the intestine shock,
Shall now, in mutual well beseeming ranks,
March all one way."

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 4803) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The pending amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary. The pending amendment is on page 30 in the appropriation for the pay of the Navy, where the Committee on Naval Affairs proposes, in line 22, to strike out "$72,421,647" and in lieu thereof to insert "$87,798,447."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate this morning to certain articles which are published in this morning's issue of the Washington Post bearing upon the pending amendment and the general policy with reference to the increases in the pending bill which are proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I think if Senators have not already read these articles they will be convinced when I quote from them that as to one of them, at least, there has been a deliberate intention to distort the news for the purpose of aiding these increases. I do not, of course, charge this to the management of the Washington Post; the management of that paper is, no doubt, entirely ignorant of it; but there is some one evidently in the office of that newspaper who is willing, for the purpose of influencing legislation here, to distort the news. On the first page, in a "box," are given quotations from President Harding's speech of yesterday. The first ore reads as follows:

One hundred thousand sorrows are touching my heart. It must not be again. God grant that it will not be. I do not pretend that the millennial days have come and that there will be no more war. I would wish a Nation so powerful that none will dare to provoke its wrath.

It is the last sentence to which I especially refer:

I would wish a Nation so powerful that none will dare to provoke tts

The inference being that President Harding was urging a military and naval policy that would make this Nation the greatest military power on earth. Mr. President, that was exactly the German policy, and it was that policy that caused the ruin and fall of Germany. I hope that the United States does not propose to follow in Germany's footsteps.

What was it, Mr. President, that President Harding did say on the occasion of his speech yesterday? On page 11 of the same newspaper I find the text of his speech as given by the Associated Press, and I now read from it as follows:

I would not wish a Nation for which men are not willing to fight, and if need be to die, but I do wish for a Nation where it is not necessary to ask that sacrifice. I do not pretend that millennial days have come, but I can believe in the possibility of a Nation being so righteous as never to make a war of conquest, and a Nation so powerful in righteousness that none will dare invoke her wrath.

The words "in righteousness" are omitted from the first page of the newspaper, and any Senator can see what President Harding did say was exactly the opposite of the purported quotation from his speech upon the first page of the Washington Post.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if the Senator from Wisconsin will turn to the column before the one from which he read, on page 11, he will see a quotation in the Associated Press dispatch where the words "in righteousness" are left out.

Mr. LENROOT. I was reading from page 11 the text of the address, where it is stated:

The President's address in full follows.

On examination I find that, although the statement of the Senator from Maine is correct, nevertheless, we have the text of what the President did say, and the only point of the Senator from Maine as to the quotation to which he has now called my attention is that whoever wrote the headline or the lead to this Associated Press article is guilty of the same distortion of news as is found upon the first page of the Post. Mr. President, it ought not to be necessary to do things of that kind to advance any kind of legislation here.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President— The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield. Mr. WALSH of Montana. I am very glad the Senator has called our attention to the exact language of the President, because I have before me a copy of the New York Tribune of this morning, which has large headlines, as follows:

Harding, weeping for war dead, pledges a United States none dare provoke.

I suggest to the Senator that it would look as though there were some conspiracy among the papers to misrepresent the President.

Mr. LENROOT. That may be, but, whatever the fact is, it is inexcusable and indefensible, because they are putting words in the mouth of President Harding that he never uttered at all, Everyone will agree with the statement which President Harding actually did make, and why any attempt should be made to distort that language, unless it be for the purpose of influencing legislation here upon which the Senate will soon vote, I can not understand.

Mr. President, there is another article in the Post written by one of its correspondents, who is a very good friend of mine, where the same thing is repeated. I take it for granted that he, instead of reading the text of the speech, read the article published in the Post in its copy form, and therefore he was entirely innocent in his use or misuse of the President's speech; but with reference to this article, Mr. President-Senators, no doubt, have read it-it has the headline:

Drive menaces Navy-

And then all those who are opposed to these increases are classed as "anti-Navy" people.

classed as "anti-Navy" people.

Mr. President, I do not know of Senators on either side of the aisle who are "anti-Navy" people. I certainly am in favor of an adequate Navy. I consider a Navy an adequate one which is sufficient at all times to protect and defend the interest of the United States of America, and any Navy that goes beyond that point is not only a useless expense, but will in itself be an inciting cause of trouble in the future between the United States and other nations.

Then, in this article, the statement is made that if the pending amendment shall be defeated and the personnel of the Navy shall for the next fiscal year be reduced to 100,000 men, some of the dreadnaughts will have to be put out of commission. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. Poin-DEXTER], in charge of this bill, if this ameadment is not adopted, and if during the next fiscal year we have an enlisted personnel of 100,000 men, whether some dreadnaughts will have to be put out of commission?

Yes, Mr. President; two dreadnaughts Mr. POINDEXTER.

will have to be put out of commission.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Then, if that be true, I want to ask the Senator from Washington whether it is intended to put those dreadnaughts out of commission just as soon as the new Latteships and cruisers shall have been completed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not intended, if the Navy is maintained at its present strength, except as to ships of the second line.

I want to call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin also to the fact that not only dreadnaughts but, what is equally important, substantially the entire destroyer force of the Navy will have to be put out of commission practically if the Navy is reduced to the extent of 20,000 men, as proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, if that be true, I want to ask the Senator from Washington how many men will it require to maintain our Navy when the 1916 program is completed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It will require, on the average, 120,000 men who will have had the opportunity of training in the training schools, and consequently

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator how many men will we have to appropriate for?

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will allow me to finish my answer, we will have to appropriate for 120,000 men, and they will be able to take care of the increasing Navy, by reason of the fact that a larger proportion of them will have the necessary training to go to sea.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, may I ask the Senator how many additional dreadnaughts and battle cruisers we will have with the completion of the 1916 program?

Mr. POINDEXTER. With the completion of the 1916 program we will have 21 of the first line.

Mr. LENROOT. An increase of 21?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; no.
Mr. LENROOT. I said "increase"; more than we have now. Mr. POINDEXTER. We will have nine more than we have

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I think the Senator from Washington is mistaken, or else I did not understand the question of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I asked how many additional dreadnaughts and battle cruisers we will have with the completion of the 1916 program.

Mr. KING. Exactly. The 1916 program calls for 11 battleships and 6 battle cruisers; so that is 17.

Mr. LENROOT. How many of those have been completed and are now in commission?

Mr. KING. One.

Mr. LENROOT. That would be 16. Now, how does the Senator from Washington arrive at his figure of 9?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I arrive at that figure by differing from the Senator from Utah as to the 1916 program. He says that it provides for 11 battleships. My information is that it provides for only 10, and one of those in commission leaves 9.

Mr. LENROOT. What about battle cruisers?

Mr. POINDEXTER. There are six battle cruisers provided for in the 1916 program.

Mr. LENROOT. And how many have we now?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We have none now. Mr. LENROOT. How many dreadnaughts?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We have 16 at the present time. We have no battle cruisers at all.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Now, let us see where the Senator's logic brings him to.

We have 15 dreadnaughts now. If we reduce the personnel to 100,000 men, he says we will have to put out of commission our destroyers and some of the dreadnaughts. At the same time he says that with 120,000 men we can not only keep in commission these 17 dreadnaughts, but we can man 17 more without any additional men. If the Senator thinks he can make any sensible or reasonable Senator believe any statement of that kind, I am very much surprised. The Senator must be mistaken; he can not be otherwise-honestly, no doubt—but it is not possible, Mr. President, that without putting any present dreadnaughts out of commission we must have 120,000 men now, and we do not need another man for the 17 additional dreadnaughts and battle cruisers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator from Wisconsin, gaining his information by asking questions here upon the floor of the Senate, has more information about the matter than has the Navy Department, which devotes itself to the study of these subjects, of course, I concede the correctness of his conclusion. My information comes from the Navy Department, and the proposition is that six battleships will be put in reserve in the next fiscal year, and others as the new ships are commissioned.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Are those dreadnaughts?
Mr. POINDEXTER. It depends upon what you call dreadnaughts. They are dreadnaughts of the second line, not of the modern type of the 1916 program. That is a very different proposition from maintaining them in full commission, with a full complement of men.

Furthermore, Mr. President-

Mr. LENROOT. Right there, may I ask the Senator a question? He stated that the article in the Post is correct when it says that if we reduce the Navy to 100,000 men, dreadnaughts will have to be put, not in reserve, but out of commission. He said that that is true. Does he repeat that statement when he says that with this program six battleships must be placed in reserve? Could not some of these dreadnaughts be placed in reserve with 100,000 men, as well as six battleships later on?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly they could be placed in reserve. The entire fleet could be placed in reserve.

Mr. LENROOT. That is begging the question, as the Senator well knows

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why is it begging the question? The Senator asked me whether certain ships could not be placed in reserve. I say they could be placed in reserve, and I called attention to the fact that the entire fleet could be placed in reserve.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator says now that they could be placed in reserve, why did he agree with the statement that with 100,000 men they would have to be placed out of com-

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, because that would be absolutely necessary with the number of men to which the Navy would be limited. I stated that two battleships would be placed out of commission, not six.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator says now they could be placed in reserve, but would be placed out of commission. Now, why should they be placed out of commission if they could be placed in reserve?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Because there will not be enough men to keep them in reserve.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.
Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me a minute? I should like to have him tell me the total amount of the personnel, and what this bill proposes to increase it to.
Mr. LENROOT. The personnel now, I understand, is 120,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does not propose to increase that number by a man, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina. The bill, as reported by the Senate committee, does not propose to increase the present personnel of the Navy.
Mr. OVERMAN. So the present personnel is 120,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Approximately.
Mr. LENROOT. The Senate amendment increases the personnel 20,000 over the House provision. The House appropriated for an enlisted personnel of 100,000 men. The Senate committee proposes to increase that by 20,000. Now, the Senator said, casting good-naturedly some reflections upon me-I do not claim to be a naval expert; far from it-

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I did not mean to cast any reflections on the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was rather giving the source of my information. I do not pretend to know, from any special knowledge that I have, the possibilities of maintaining and caring for the new ships of the Navy as to the number of men that are required. I get my information from the Navy Department. I give it to the Senator, relying upon it as being accurate. If the Senator has any better information, I shall be very glad to have it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, that is the trouble with this whole business. The Naval Affairs Committee get their information from the Navy Department and do what the Navy Department asks them to do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We do not do what the Navy Department asks us to do. The Senate Committee on Naval Affairs failed to do what the Navy Department asked them to do in perhaps 90 per cent of the matters that were presented to the

Mr. LENROOT. How many men did the Navy Department ask for?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They asked for 120,000 men.

Mr LENROOT. That is what you gave them, did you not? Mr. POINDEXTER. That is what we are allowing in this

That is what I had reference to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We agreed with them in that particular

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me, I should like to pour some oil on these troubled waters, and call his attention to what I believe is quite evident now to an observer like myself as to where the difficulty is.

The Senator from Wisconsin has admitted that he is not a naval expert, and I think that explains it all. It will take 120,000 men to man the present Navy. When our program is carried out and that fleet is increased by about 16 or 17 battleships and cruisers, it will take only 120,000 men to man it. The Senator, like myself, is very much perturbed as to how that mathematical proposition can be brought about, and the reason why it can be brought about and is undoubtedly true is because the experts say so. So the Senator must not put his mathematics up against the opinion of experts. If they are going to perform that apparent impossibility, we have only one thing to do and that is to permit them to do it.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say a word with respect to the personnel of the Navy?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. The personnel of the Navy now amounts to about 119.000 men. This bill does not increase it or decrease it, If 120,000 men should be allowed, we would have the Navy about what it is now. I think the Senator from Washington is correct in saying that the new program would not increase it over 120,000 men. The Senator from Wisconsin has a different impression. Let us see what the present conditions are, and why we require 120,000 men now.

When this program of 1916 was devised it was estimated that it would take about 100,000 men to man it. Admiral Palmer made a statement at that time as to the number of men required for each ship, which was submitted to the committee. the Navy at that time it was estimated that it would take, in round numbers, about 100,000 men. That estimate was made in 1916 and the personnel was fixed at that number.

Since that time we have increased aviation. This bill takes six or seven thousand men for aviation, which at that time was not contemplated; but everybody realizes that aviation has grown. They expected to take care of that in the 100,000 men.

Radio has been developed. In 1916 radio was a very small matter. It takes from 1,000 to 1,500 men to man these ships for radio. Nobody would think of sending out any ships which could be equipped with radio unless they had it.

Since that time what they call the fire control of a ship has been changed. Of course, it is a subject of ridicule on the part of people who are better experts than the Navy. Now, what is meant by fire control? They have what they call salvo At present they shoot 25 miles. In 1916 they would shoot about 10 or 12 miles, and you could see from the gun to Now they have a telephone system, by which they send up balloons when they fire a salvo and ascertain whether the aim has been too far or too near, and then telephone down the result in a few minutes. It is a very intricate system. That takes possibly 100 men more for a ship.

These things have compelled an increase of personnel in the Navy; but what are the present conditions that require it. which, I hope, will be changed soon? I hope we shall have an agreement. I favored and I tried to put on the bill in the committee the proposition of the Senater from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. I think we ought to have a conference to try to stop naval construction or military construction and save this money to the people. Now, what are the present conditions?

You have between six and eight thousand men in European Do you want to withdraw them? You can do it. Those ships can be put in reserve or out of commission. They are in Smyrna, they are in the Black Sea, they are in the Baltic and all the perturbed parts of Europe. We have American citizens there. We have American interests there. They are small ships. Later on you may not need them. They will take care of three or four battle cruisers and superdreadnaughts when those conditions disappear.

You have nearly 3,000 men in Asiatic waters. Do you want to withdraw them from Asiatic waters, with all the trouble in China, a revolution there, in Siberia, and elsewhere? Nobody advocates that. Temporarily you have got to keep them there. That is, between three and four thousand men, which would take care of nearly two dreadnaughts later on. In Haiti, in San Domingo, in Cuba, in Panama, with the conditions there, you have, I suppose, two or three thousand men. Later we hope they will be withdrawn. With peace conditions in the world, these people can all be put back in one fleet. When you have them all in one fleet, I am satisfied that 120,000 men will be all you will need. I believe to-day that if it were not for the conditions in Europe, the conditions in Asia, the perturbed conditions in San Domingo and Haiti and elsewhere in the world, the 100,000 men that you already have would be ample to man the present fleet and put some in reserve.

I am satisfied that if we can have a distinct understanding with Japan and with England, as contemplated by the resolution of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], which I earnestly favor and which I fought for in the committee and expect to do all I can to have passed, it would be safe for us to go back to the number of 75,000 men.

What is the condition in regard to the Navy at this time? You have 119,000 men. On the 1st of July you will have about 115,000. During the war what did we do? So that we would not have two or three hundred thousand men enlisted for four years, which is the enlistment period in the United States Navy, we changed the enlistment to two years, three years, and four years, and during the term of the war. So next year we will have the biggest turnover we have ever had in the history of Forty-three thousand enlistments expire between the Navy. the 1st of July this year and the 1st of July next year. Ordinarily you would have about 25 per cent of new enlistments, because of the four-year enlistment, but the Naval Affairs Committee thought it was wrong to have three or four hundred thousand men enlisted for four years, and on the insistence of the Navy Department we thought we would only keep the men until their enlistments expired under the contract agreement. Consequently the enlistments will expire. The Navy Department has made an estimate of 43,000 enlistments which will expire between the 1st of next July and the subsequent 1st of July. That means that you will have to have reenlistments.

I believe everybody wants an adequate Navy. If you do not get old men, it means that you will have to enlist new men, and in order to train a new man to be an ordinary seaman you must train him four months in a training station before you can put him on one of the great battleships, with all the intricate ma-

Nobody would think of putting a new man on a battleship before he had been in training for four months. Take, for instance, mechanics. Take the various people who enlist. takes 9 or 10 months for them to be trained. Nobody would think of having an electrician or a expert mechanic, or any of the other various experts, unless they had had 9 or 10 months' experience.

So next year you will have more men in training in the training stations than you have ever had before in the history of the Navy. Between 50 and 60 per cent will reenlist. Take, for instance, your increase in aviation. The Navy Department estimates-and I do not know whether it is true or not-that if you give them 120,000 men they will have between 90,000 and 100,000 men available for sea duty under present conditions. I do not believe we can run our Navy with less than 100,000 men, equipped and trained for sea duty. If we had enlistments as Great Britain has, 12-year enlistments, and only an 8 per cent turnover a year, I believe, especially after we got rid of the troubles in Europe and in China, and the other troubles in the perturbed state of the world, 120,000 men would be ample; but I do not think at this time it is wise to reduce the number.

If the Senator from Wisconsin has read the Senate hearings, I ask him to try to make an estimate of what 120,000 men would mean, what submarines they would put in commission, what would be done with aviation. Taking into consideration the number necessary for aviation and the turnover, I am satisfied the Navy could not get along with 100,000. That was the view of the committee. I understand that the Navy Department, in submitting the estimates to the House, wanted 132,000 men. That was the basis, and they felt they could run the Navy with 120,000.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator how many men it takes to man a superdreadnaught?

Mr. SWANSON. I think it takes about 1,500 or 1,800 men. Mr. McLEAN. How many men does it take to man a fleet submarine?

Mr. SWANSON. It depends on its size. I think on a submarine they have about 60 or 70, and on some they have 30.

Mr. McLEAN. I mean the cruising, long-distance submarines? Mr. SWANSON. The very large submarine, what you call the seagoing submarine, we have not completed. I suppose it would take 200 or 300 men.

Mr. McLEAN. We have not anything of that kind? Mr. SWANSON. We have not completed those. Mr. McLEAN. It takes 60 men to man a submarine and 2,000 men to man a superdreadnaught?

Mr. SWANSON. It takes from 1,500 to 2,000 to man a dread-naught at present.

So, Mr. President, that was the view of the Navy Department. Now, I want to ask the Senator from Wisconsin another question. I understand the Military Affairs Committee has made a sort of compromise, to which I think the Senator from Wisconsin agreed, which would increase the Army from 150,000 to 170,000 men. I spoke to the Senator from Wisconsin about it, and he said he felt that that was a pretty fair compromise. Now, what does that mean? Let the Senate and the country understand what it means. We have 119,000 men in the Navy. It is the idea of the Senator from Wisconsin to take 20,000 men from the Navy, reduce the Navy to 100,000, and take those 20,000 men and put them in the Army, in forts, and at drilling, and put your ships, which are the first line of defense, in reserve and out of commission.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me interrupt the Senator right there. I want the Senator to have his facts correct. We now have in the Army 230,000 men. The Senate committee proposes to decrease that number by 60,000 men. The Navy does not propose to decrease the personnel one single man. That is the differ-

Mr. SWANSON. The authorized personnel of the Navy is 143,000.

Mr. LENROOT. I am speaking of the actual strength.
Mr. SWANSON. We have done what we thought was right. But let the country decide the question. The House passed a bill providing for 150,000 men in the Army and 100,000 for the Navy, your first line of defense. Is it wise to do a thing like that? Is it sensible? It seems to me to be the supreme act of folly to take 20,000 men from the Navy and put them in forts, taking them from your first line of defense, your line of defense which if it stands will obviate the necessity for any The Senator has acquiesced in taking them from the Navv.

Mr. BORAH. Would the Senator be willing to join those of us who are insisting on reducing the Navy to 100,000 and the Army to 150,000?

I have said that we should let the Navy Mr. SWANSON. remain as it is, because it is our first line of defense. I say, as long as you keep an adequate and a well-equipped Navy no foe can ever come to America. If you have trouble in China with your commerce, who goes there, the Army or the Navy? The Navy goes there.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Army is there now.

Mr. SWANSON. Whatever troops may be there, the Navy goes there too. If you have trouble anywhere it is the Navy which goes. It is a conflict as to whether we shall have 20,000 men less than provided by the House for the Navy. That you will decide by your votes, but I stand for the Navy as the first line of defense. I am surprised at the position which the Senator from Wisconsin takes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, a little knowledge is a dangerous thing

Mr. SWANSON. The Senator has illustrated that very forcibly in the last two weeks.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator has just talked about the Army appropriation bill, and I do not blame the Senator from Virginia for not knowing very much about the Army appropriation bill. I confess that I do not know much about the naval bill, except some very rudimentary principles. But the Senator evidently does not understand that, owing to the previous administration, the Army was increased over the appropriations made by Congress until we have to-day an Army of 240,000 men. The House appropriated for an average Army of 150,000 men, which would in fact have brought the Army down before the end of next year to 120,000 men. The Senate committee proposes to appropriate for an average Army of 170,000 men. That does not mean that we will have 170,000 men in the Army at the end of the next fiscal year. At the present rate of discharge it will mean that we will not have over 150,000 men in the Army, which is the the House fixed as their belief of what the Army should be.

Mr. SWANSON. Now, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. SWANSON. That estimate as to what the average would be was made by Army officers, was it not?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; and we got the detailed figures. Mr. SWANSON. We got the detailed figures as t

We got the detailed figures as to what 100,000 men in the Navy would mean, with a turnover of 43,000. You would have only between 90,000 and 100,000.

Mr. LENROOT. We did not rely on the estimates of the Army officers. We took the figures month by month as to the discharges, and we arrived at the totals.

Mr. SWANSON. So did we, and we made an estimate that if you have 100,000 men authorized you would not have 90,000 men available for sea duty.

Mr. LENROOT. The same thing is true in the Army, exactly. Mr. SWANSON. The Senator has admitted that we need 100,000 men for the Navy, and yet the estimates show that we will have less than 100,000; that we would not have 80,000 men.

Mr. LENROOT. I have submitted that all we need in the Navy under present conditions is an enlisted personnel of 100,000 men, and neither the Senator from Virginia nor any other Senator has thus far produced any argument to refute it.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, the Navy estimates that if you have 100,000 men you would not have 80,000 men available for the Navy, by the same process you followed in estimating for the Army. With 120,000 men they estilowed in estimating for the Army. With 120,000 men they estimate you would have between 90,000 and 100,000, with the turnover, available for the Navy. The only question I wanted the Senator to explain was why he could take the judgment of the House on the Navy and could not take the judgment of the House on the Army, and was willing to increase the Army 20,000 men and was not willing to increase the Navy, the first line of defense

Mr. LENROOT. Because the provisions in the Army bill passed by the House would bring the Army down to 120,000, when they themselves took the position that we ought to have an Army of 150,000. There was no contention that, with the present rate of resignations in the Navy, if we appropriate for 100,000 men in the Navy we will not have 100,000 men in the Navy

Mr. SWANSON. Yes, there is, if the Senator will permit me. There was a turnover of 43,000. Five per cent are sick. The Navy estimates that if you have simply 100,000 men under present conditions, with what you have in China and in Europe, it would be a serious condition in the Navy, worse than in the The Senator accepts the statement for the Army, and he will not accept it for the Navy.

Mr. LENROOT. By the same reasoning in the Army, instead of 150,000 or 170,000 we will not have more than 125,000 any time, although we appropriate for 170,000 or 150,000, as the case may be.

But now, Mr. President, I want to go a little further and take the premises as laid down by the Senator from Virginia him-He says that the personnel has been increased necessarily by 100 men per ship by reason of fire control, that it has been increased further by the necessities of aviation, and yet he would have the Senate understand that with an addition of 17 dreadnaughts and battle cruisers we do not need any more men.

Mr. President, I went to school when I was a boy, and I learned at least the simple principles of arithmetic, and while it may be that these Senators look to the Navy for their information, I would suppose that some simple problems of arithmetic might be worked out by the gentlemen themselves.

Mr. NORRIS. They use calculus in the Navy; they do not use arithmetic.

Mr. SWANSON. Do you expect five or six or seven thousand men-I do not know the exact number-to remain all the time in Europe? There are about 3,000 in China, there are some in Cuba, and there are some in Panama. Then, when the other dreadnaughts are put in commission, you would put others in reserve or commission. I am satisfied that when you get back to the 4-year term of enlistment and do not have a turnover, such as you have now, 120,000 men will be all you will need in the Navy; that that number will be ample for all purposes, including aviation.

I have never believed in any great increase. I have believed we could put a great many of these ships in commission in reserve, which ought to be done, but at this time, with 100,000 men as a maximum and considering the present turnover, I do not believe we would have 80,000 men in the Navy. That is my frank, candid impression, and I believe with that situation the Navy would be in a perilous condition.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose that we do not do that, and suppose that we only had 80,000 men actually fit for service in the Navy. In 1916 we had 55,000, which is 25,000 less than the Senator states we would have if we had an enlisted personnel of 100,000 men. Is there any comparison between conditions now and those existing in 1916?

What is a navy for? Is it for dress parade, or is a navy for the purpose of defending and protecting the country? Does the Senator from Virginia believe that there is the slightest possibility of our Navy being engaged in war within the next 12 menths?

Mr. SWANSON. I did not think in 1915 that we would— Mr. LENROOT. Ah, Mr. President—but I should like to have the Senator's statement about what he thought in 1915.

Mr. SWANSON. I do not think that in the next 12 months and I do not think that in the next 2 years we will be engaged in war, but I look upon the Navy as insurance. However, there is one thing wherein the Navy differs from the Army. The Navy has to be ready at the time war is declared. It is not going to be increased or decreased after war is declared, so far as its efficiency is concerned, except in its personnel. That is the condition as it relates to the Navy. We can not take chances with the Navy like we can with the Army. We can get an Army as the war progresses, but we have to have the Navy at the beginning of the war or not at all.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator agree with ex-Secretary Daniels that when the war broke out the Navy was ready to fight at the drop of the hat and fully prepared?

Mr. SWANSON. I do not believe it was fully prepared. It was very well prepared on account of the act of 1916.

vas very well prepared on account of the act of 1916.

Mr. LENROOT. With a maximum of 68,000 men?

Mr. SWANSON. No; that is where the Senator is mistaken again. We had at that time, thinking war might come to us, enacted a law providing that the President, if the emergency arose, could increase the naval personnel to 87,000. That provision was included in a bill enacted in 1916, and that authority was exercised promptly.

Mr. LENROOT. How much of a naval personnel did we have when the war broke out?

Mr. SWANSON. The Regular Navy had 74,000 men, as provided by the act of 1916.

Mr. LENROOT. But that included all those who were sick and disabled.

Mr. SWANSON. There were 55,000 originally, increased to 74,000; and then, to man everything, there was a law enacted providing that in case of emergency the President by Executive order could increase the personnel to 87,000, which he did very promptly when trouble became evident.

Mr. LENROOT. Eighty-seven thousand is 13,000 less than proposed by the House bill and is 33,000 less than proposed by the Naval Committee of the Senate. The Senator may not have thought in 1915 that there was any possibility of the United States being drawn into the European war, but I doubt whether there were many other American citizens who agreed with him. With the European war having raged for over a year, it must have been in the minds of everyone that we might possibly become engaged in it.

But what is the situation to-day? There is only one possibility of our being engaged in war, because there is only one nation with which we have any differences, and that is Japan. The Senator does not think, I am sure, that there is a shadow of a possibility of our being engaged in war with Japan within the next five years, whatever the future may hold in store. If not, for what do we intend a larger personnel than we had when we entered the World War? What is it for? What is the purpose of it? Why do we need more than 100,000 men now? Does anyone give any reason or explanation for it, except that they want so many men in these waters and so many men in those waters and so many men in our domestic waters. What are they going to do with them? What purpose is the Navy going to serve by having more than 100,000 men? What occasion will there be to use these additional 20,000 men?

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is proposed to do with them, the Senator asks, and we might as well have the issue presented. Congress has authorized a building program of certain ships, and I assume that authorization will be enacted into law. The complement of those ships is well known. The Navy Department states to us the number of men required to man a battle-ship, and I assume that they are not lying; that they are not going to put supernumeraries on those ships. I take the members of the General Board of the Navy to be truthful, honorable men. Has the Senator from Wisconsin any information to show that the number of men the Navy Department states to us is required to man a battleship is not correct?

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What do we propose to do with these men? The Senator asks what we are going to do with them, and I reply that we are going to man the new ships of the Navy.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Then the Senator's position is that we must pay $15,000,000 a year for the next two or three years not because we need the men but because we want the men when the new Navy is completed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not at all. No such inference can be drawn from my remarks.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, when will they be needed? Mr. POINDEXTER. The 120,000 men will be needed this

Mr. POINDEXTER. The 120,000 men will be needed this year.

Mr. LENROOT. What for?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Or as many of them as can be trained and fitted for sea service.

Mr. LENROOT. What are we going to do with them? What are they for?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For manning the ships of the Navy that are in commission.

Mr. LENROOT. What are the ships going to be used for?
Mr. POINDEXTER. For the general purposes of the Navy.
Of course, if the Senator assumes, as he has stated a number of times, that there is no use for a navy, I agree with him in his conclusions.

Mr. LENROOT. But, Mr. President, I have not said—

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just one moment. The Senator can correct me if I misquote him. I understood him to say we can calculate on not having a war, and I hope that that calculation is correct, and he seems to base his naval program upon that assumption. If we are going to provide for the Navy on the basis that there is going to be no war, it seems to me the logical thing to do, following that line of reasoning, is not only to reduce the number of men in the Navy but to dismantle the Navy altogether and do away with it, because the purposes of the Navy are not only to meet the possible contingency of war, but in the meantime to back up the United States in its negotiations with foreign countries for the protection of the rights of American citizens.

We have had proposed an international negotiation for disarmament. The existence of the Navy, whether it is used or not, will do much to bring about such an agreement and to secure justice for the national interests and protect the welfare of this great Nation and its people. If it is not in existence the United States will be compelled to accept the terms of foreign countries with whom we are negotiating. I assume that is what we are going to do with the Navy, from the Senator's viewpoint.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know how the Senator from Washington could have gathered any such idea as he seems to have gathered from any remarks I have made upon this floor. I have never suggested that we do not need a Navy. What I have said and I now repeat is that no showing has been made on this floor, and I am confident that none can be made, that we would need a Navy of more than 100,000 men in the next year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I said if we do not have more than 100,000 men that among other things that can not be done but that ought to be done will be the care and the proper use of $300,000,000 worth of destroyers that Congress has appropriated money for and which are now in commission, but which with 100,000 men will have to be put entirely out of commission, if the places where they can be put out of commission can be found in the navy yards of the United States. I doubt very much whether they can be found. Special provision would probably have to be made for that purpose.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, let us see where the Senator's reasoning brings him.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I just want to say this much further. I regard it as a very poor business proposition, not in the interest of the economy which the Senator from Wiscousin advocates, after having procured a great fleet of destroyers, most of them less than 4 years old, and having adopted the policy of maintaining a strong Navy, that we should so cut down the personnel of the Navy that those ships will have to be practically abandoned and will begin immediately to deteriorate, so that if in the future there should be need for them, they would not be fit for use as active ships of the fleet.

Mr. LENROOT. Let us see where the Senator's reasoning brings him to now. He says now, in addition to putting out of commission two dreadnaughts, that with 100,000 men we will have to put out of commission all of our destroyers, and yet the Senator would have us understand-

Mr. POINDEXTER. I did not say all of them; I said many of them; $300,000,000 worth, at least.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well, we will have to put those out of commission, and yet the Senator would have the Senate believe that with the addition of 17 new battleships and cruisers, without putting any dreadnaughts out of commission, we will not need an additional man more than is required now; in other

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin think we will need more?

Mr. LENROOT. I certainly do.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We would be very glad to entertain a proposition to increase the number. We are trying to hold the number down to 120,000 and were convinced, upon the showing made, that we could get along with that number. The Senator insists that with the addition of these new ships to the fleet we will need more men. I should like him to present the evidence to the Congress and to the committee, so that we might have the benefit of his conclusions in the efforts we are making to maintain a sufficient number of men.

Mr. LENROOT. It would seem to me it would be plain to a school boy that if 100,000 men are not sufficient now that with the addition of 17 battleships and battle cruisers, with the airplane equipment that will be necessary and the destroyers that will be necessary, we will certainly need more than 120,000 men when the program is completed. It is a matter of arith-

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is the difference between the theory of the Senator, who said a moment ago that he has only a little elementary knowledge about the naval bill, and the actual facts ascertained after conferring with the men who have to man and operate the ships. I assume the answer to the Senator's apparently insoluble problem is that as these ships from year to year go into commission-and the program will not be completed until 1925, by reason of the reduced rate of construction provided for in the bill-that the older ships of the Navy will be put out of commission, and men will be released to man the new ships of the Navy. The Senator would say we ought not to put the old ships out of commission. that is true, we shall have to have more men.

But the theory of the committee and the theory of those in charge of naval operations was that with the advent of the new ships the older ships, many of which have served in the Navy for a generation, will go out of commission, and that out of the complement of men provided for in the bill by releasing the crews of the older vessels a sufficient number will be found to man the new ships.

Mr. LENROOT. Let us see about that. The Senator from Washington said this morning that with the completion of the 1916 program no existing dreadnaught will be put out of commission. He has said that repeatedly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator is mistaken. the contrary, I said that two would be put out of commission.

Mr. LENROOT. No; the Senator said they would be put in reserve. With a personnel of 100,000 men, the Senator may have said what he now states.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I stated two dreadnaughts would have to be put out of commission.

Mr. LENROOT. With 100,000 men?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Exactly.
Mr. LENROOT. But now I state that the Senator has said that with the completion of the new program and with 120,000 men no existing dreadnaughts will be put out of commission.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I did not state that.

Mr. LENROOT. I appeal to the record if the Senator did not state that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The record will show for itself. I stated that the program of the commissioning of new ships would require the putting out of commission of two dread-I stated that several times to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. With 120,000 men?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; with 120,000 men. Mr. LENROOT. Very well. Then, Mr. President, if it will require the putting out of commission of two dreadnaughts when this program is completed, when we can look forward in 1925 to the possibility of needing a very strong Navy, if they are going to be put out of commission, then no harm can come if they are put out of commission now. The Senator from Washington can take either horn of the dilemma that he wants to take, for unless he assumes that we need those dreadnaughts in commission now because of the possibility of attack by some foreign power within the next 12 years, then no harm can come even if those dreadnaughts are put out of commission.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let me ask the Senator why he assumes that they are not going to be put out of commission now? Of course, I do not mean to-day, but I mean during the coming year, for which the appropriation is provided. I have no information that they are not going to be put out of commission during the fiscal year for which this appropriation is intended to provide. Why does the Senator from Wisconsin assume that their being put out of commission is going to be postponed?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Washington stated to me that he agreed with the article to which reference has been made to the effect that if we appropriated for only 100,000 men, two dreadnaughts would have to be put out of commission now,

Mr. POINDEXTER. That is true, but the Senator from Wisconsin asks why not put them out of commission now.

Mr. LENROOT. If they are going to be put out anyway, if we are not going to use them when the new program is completed, why not put them out now?

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding is that they are going to be put out when the new ships come in, and there will be two ships under that program which will be placed in commission during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. LENROOT. So that when the effort is made to influence legislation by the plea that two dreadnaughts will be put out of commission, the Senator from Washington says they are going to be put out of commission anyway. So that argument falls, does it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Certainly it falls.

Mr. LENROOT. I am very glad we have gotten that far in agreement. Nobody ought now to make the argument to the Senate that we are going to put two dreadnaughts out of commission unless this amendment be adopted, because the Senator from Washington now says they are going to be put out of commission anyway

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why does the Sentaor assume that the statement was made to influence legislation? The statement was made in answer to a categorical question that was asked by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I was speaking of the newspaper article.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not know anything about the article. I have not read the article, except in a very cursory

Mr. LENROOT. The article stated that two dreadnaughts would be put out of commission, and I asked the Senator from Washington if that were true, and he said it was. I assume and I thought he wanted the Senate to assume that that would be made necessary if we appropriated for only 100,000 men, but now he says that those dreadnaughts are going to be put out of commission anyway.

Mr. POINDEXTER. A great many additional ships will be put out of commission by the reduction of the personnel from 120,000 men to 100,000 men, including the 218 destroyers to which I referred a moment ago; 3 light cruisers; 4 destroyer tenders, with a total complement, with the battleships of the second line, of 19,882 men.

Mr. LENROOT. But under the statements which have been made by the members of the committee, we shall have a larger personnel than when we entered the war with Germany.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Wisconsin yield to me?

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield first to the Senator from Utah. The Senator from Washington has referred to Mr. KING. the effect of diminishing the personnel of the Navy. I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that Great Britain, which has more ships than have we, is now reducing her personnel down to 121,000; indeed, some of the naval authorities there state that it will be lower than 121,000, and others state that it will aggregate, officers and men, 123,487.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

Mr. KING. I am trespassing on the time of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I yield to the Senator from Washington. Mr. POINDEXTER. I was merely going to ask the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] if in his statement he takes into consideration the fact that out of the personnel of our Navy approximately 8,000 are required for the naval aviation service, whereas in the British Navy none of their naval personnel are required for that service, because their aviation service is a separate one; if he takes into account the fact that in our Navy the marines do not perform the duties of seamen, even as to the manning of guns, whereas in the British Navy marines serve in capacities which correspond to those of American seamen in the manning of guns on board ship; and that, as to Great Britain, Australia and Canada have navies of their own, which are, for all intents and purposes, a part of the navy of Great Britain to meet any contingency which may arise affecting the interests of the Empire? I think Canada has approxi-mately 5,000 men and Australia approximately 3,000 men, making some 8,000 men in the navies of those two dependencies.

However, more important than all those considerations is the one great outstanding fact—I take it as a fact upon informa-tion I have, and I regard it as very important, though it is brushed aside by the opponents of the pending bill as being of no importance-that the average term of service of a British That is the enlistment period under a conseaman is 12 years. tract, as the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] suggests, for reenlistment; but the average period of service is 12 years by reason of the fact that a very large proportion of the personnel of the British Navy have served more than 12 years. Some of them, of course, have served less than 12 years, but many of them have served a great deal more than 12 years; so that that is the average length of service in the British Navy, with all that that implies of training and of fitness for the work of a seaman, while in the American Navy the average term of service is only 3 years.

I am not responsible for those conditions. If my information is not correct, the Senator from Utah and the Senator from Wisconsin, who have studied this matter with so much detail, can correct me; but I am informed upon reliable authority that what I have stated is the case. In a contingent of 120,000 men in the American Navy at least 20,000 out of the 120,000 will have to be in training schools in order to be instructed and trained sufficiently to put them on board of a battleship for service, whereas in the entire British Navy there are not over 6,000 men in the training schools. Those circumstances undoubtedly should be taken into consideration in comparing, as the Senator from Utah is comparing, the personnel strength of the British and the American Navies, Mr. KING. Mr. President, it would be improper for me to intrude upon the time of the Senator from Wisconsin to reply to the observations just made by the Senator from Washington, which are not pertinent to the point to which I rose to invite the able Senator's attention. Let me say, however, by way of parenthesis, that I have taken into account in the statement which I made and which I am about to make the suggestion made by the Senator from Washington relative to the aviation services and relative to the personnel furnished by Canada and Australia. The point that I was trying to make was that, notwithstanding the fact that Great Britain has more ships than we have-I do not say that they are as good as our ships; many of them are far inferior to our ships-she is decreasing her docks from 75; she is decreasing her personnel; she has scrapped more than 300 of her ships and is pursuing a course which is wise, namely, taking men off the big battleships, which are unnecessary, which are obsolescent, and putting them upon submarines and upon torpedo boats, because she recognizes the potential force of those two agencies in coming naval warfare.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I shall not occupy the floor much longer; I have already occupied it longer than I expected; but I do want to make this observation: I have not suggested the abandonment of the 1916 program; I have not even suggested its suspension; but I do think that we ought to go slower than this bill proposes to go. I supported the proposition for two additional airplane carriers at a cost of $26,000,000 each, with a present appropriation of $15,000,000; and that is going to require a very considerable addition to the personnel further than was contemplated by the 1916 program, unless there be an abandonment of some ships in view of the provision for the airplane carriers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think the Senator is correct about There will have to be an abandonment of older ships of the second line which have had many years of service.

Mr. LENROOT. I mean the construction program, because we are adding in this bill to the extent of $52,000,000 to the construction program of 1916, minus the deduction that might be made by the elimination of 12 destroyers. Am I not correct?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In so far as airplane carriers go Mr. LENROOT. No; I mean the building program.

Mr. POINDEXTER. We are not adding anything at all in the Senate bill to the building program provided in the House bill, so far as ships of the line are concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. But the two airplane carriers are a part of the building construction program, are they not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I just stated a moment ago to the Sen-ator that we have provided for airplane carriers and also for

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly; and with that I am very much in

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand the Senator is; and I was going to call his attention to the fact that there would be men needed to man the new submarines which are coming into com-I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin-at least, I understand that some of the Senators who are opposed to the general policy of the bill are in favor of developing to a greater extent our submarine service. There is a very large contingent of submarines that are coming into commission, and a large number of men will be required to man them.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word further while I am on my feet. I would not ask the Senate to follow my opinions as to what will be an adequate Navy in the future, but personally I am fully satisfied that, as to the present construction program, where the ships have not proceeded very far toward completion, it would be folly to complete those ships according to the original plan.

I have had some occasion as a member of the Military Affairs Committee recently to investigate the question of chemicals in warfare. Whatever views some people may entertain concerning the use of chemicals in warfare, I believe that the use of chemicals will be one of the most important activities of warfare in the future, and that any nation that is not prepared to defend against chemical attacks and to use chemicals, if used by an opponent, will be defeated, I do not care what navy or what army it may have. If we are to have an adequate Navy in the future, Mr. President, that Navy must be protected, so far as it is possible to furnish protection, against chemical warfare, against poisonous gases. That will necessitate a very considerable change in design as to the battleships that are now being completed. It is my judgment, though I do not ask others to accept it, that inside of five years every one of them will be obsolete. In addition to that, the warfare of the future, in my judgment, will be conducted largely by the use of chemicals and by the airplane. Airplane carriers are absolutely necessary or a Navy will be of no value. Protection against chemical warfare will be necessary to every ship, or a battleship will be of no value.

It would be the height of folly, it seems to me, except as to those ships that are nearing completion now, whose designs can not be changed, to undertake to go on with this building construction program to the full extent without taking into consideration the developments that have been made in chemical warfare and in airplane development.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that all those things have been taken into consideration. At least, the Chief of the Bureau of Construction, who I suppose has no superior as a naval constructor in the world, tells us that those things have been taken into consideration, and that in so far as provision can be made to meet the methods of warfare to which the Senator from Wisconsin refers, it has been made in the newer types of ships.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I do not question that the Senator has stated what has been stated to him; but I do say that no one, naval constructor or otherwise, no man anywhere, has been able to devise full protection against the latest developments in chemical warfare by the United States Army. visited Edgewood Arsenal two or three weeks ago, in company with the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Florida [Mr. Fletcher]. I do not feel at liberty to state some of the things that we found there; but from what we did see there, and from what any Senator might see if he took occasion to visit it, he would be convinced that the warfare of the future will be completely revolutionized through this branch of war activity, and that unless protection be discovered which has not yet been discovered to protect battleships from such attacks, a battleship will be obsolete before this 1916 program is completed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, before the Senator resumes his seat, may I inquire of him whether he thinks it is wise for the United States to adhere to a program which was devised in 1915 and crystallized into a law of Congress in 1916, which outlined then the number of destroyers, the number of submarines, the number of battleships, and the number of battle cruisers? Since that time we have had the experiences of the war with We have seen the successful operation of the subma-Germany. rine. We have discovered the important force of the airplane in naval service as well as upon land; and, moreover, we have discovered the tremendous effect of poisonous gases, not only upon land but, modern investigations show, upon the sea. repeat, in the light of those investigations, does it not seem to the Senator that it is the height of supreme folly for our Government to adhere so religiously and so scrupulously to an archaic policy, instead of conforming it to modern revelations and modern developments and to the scientific information which has been obtained?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Sterling in the chair).

Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. LENROOT. I do.
Mr. POINDEXTER. Without any discourtesy at all, or any reflection upon the naval ability of the Senator from Utah—

Mr. KING. Oh, we concede the naval ability of all members of the Naval Affairs Committee: likewise the distinguished

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator being a member of the committee, we make that concession to him. I was just going to ask the Senator from Utah if he would give the Senate the sources from which he obtained this information that battleships are obsolete, as against the opinion of all the naval strategists in the world, including those of Japan, Great Britain, and the United States, all of whom still are committed to a policy of constructing battleships? I have no doubt they are all mistaken, in view of what the Senator from Utah states, but I am just interested in knowing where he gets his enlightenment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I did not make the statement, attributed to me by my distinguished friend, that battleships were obsolete. What I did was to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he did not think it would be the height of supreme folly for our Government to adhere religiously and scrupulously to a program which was conceived in 1915 and crystallized into law in 1916, in the light of the developments of the recent war?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I assume from that statement that the Senator from Utah is of the opinion that the type of ships, their defensive and offensive equipment, was fixed in 1916.

the Senator's opinion?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would not say that definitely but the type of ship conceived in 1915-16 is the type of ship which is now being builded by the Navy Department.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In that the Senator is mistaken, according to the information which I have. I am informed that the types of ships, especially those of the later contracts, have been changed a number of times since 1916.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, there have been some changes; I will not say material ones.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The program of 1916 did not do any more than to call them battleships and battle cruisers. is about as far as they decided the type.

Mr. KING. But the general scheme of the 1915-16 program is being adhered to now, not only as to the number but as to the general types of ships.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is true that the program calls for battleships and battle cruisers; but they have made changes many times as to their equipment, armor, and armament.

Mr. KING. There is some change in the armor; there is some change in the electric drive; and some inconsequential changes which it is not necessary for me to detail now.

Mr. POINDEXTER. All these changes are made in the light of all the information that naval constructors could obtain anywhere in the world. If there is some other source that we have not got, of course, we ought to have it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think the changes at all meet the question of airplanes. I do not think the changes at all meet the question of the torpedo. There is some change in the armor, some change in the manner of placing it above or below the water line; but, generally speaking, we are adhering to a program which was conceived in 1915, and crystallized into law in 1916.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. LENROOT. I am going to yield the floor in a minute.

I do not want to take too long a time.

Mr. KING. I propounded that in the form of a question to the Senator from Wisconsin. I should be delighted to have

Mr. LENROOT. I will say fairly in reply to that question, as I said a moment ago, that I am not even advocating the suspension of the 1916 program. I do think that whatever money is expended on the 1916 program ought to be expended on ships nearing completion. I have stated that I would not urge upon the Senate the acceptance of my views that these battleships will be obsolete inside of five years, although that is my own belief; but as to battleships where we are only beginning the construction, I believe that it would be the height of folly to go on with those under present plans in view of the marvelous development that is being made in chamical warfare and airplane construction. Those things, it seems clear to me, should be postponed until it is deter Mained what will be necessary in order to afford protection, if protection can be afforded, to these ships from this new kind of warfare.

To get back to the pending amendment for just a moment-

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption right at that point? It may not be interesting to the Senator, but I should be glad to have him know that as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee I recommended to the Senate this program with respect to the 1916 program: That those battleships which have reached a percentage of completion of over 60 per cent, or thereabouts-and there are six of those—should be rapidly completed; that work upon the remaining five battleships, the keels of some of which were only recently laid and the percentage of completion of which is from 1.3 up to 15 or 16 per cent, should be suspended until an effort can be made to secure an international arrangement against competitive armament or for reduction of armament. I recommended that we should suspend the construction of four of the battle cruisers and that we should rapidly complete the balance. I favored the construction of the other ships that were called for by the 1916 program generally, and in addition I favored the construction of airplane carriers. With the new developments it did seem to me that it would be unwise to construct more of the heavy battleships and heavy battle cruisers than those that I have just indicated.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, to get back to the pending amendment, it does not require a naval expert to see that if we need 120,000 men now for the present Navy, when we have 17 additional dreadnaughts, battle cruisers, and airplane carriers we are going to need many more than 120,000 men.

Mr. President, will the Senator let me Mr. SWANSON. explain that to him?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator has tried to explain it; but the Senator can not by any possibility make me believe that a difference of just 20,000 men, granting all that has been said about reenlistments, will take care of 17 additional dreadnaughts and 2 battle cruisers

Mr. SWANSON. Now will the Senator yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield. Mr. SWANSON. The N The Navy is organized something like the Army. The Senator wants a certain Army. Why? Because you have divisions, you have regiments, you have brigades, and you have corps. In the Navy you have squadrons, you have divisions, and you have fleets. When you get an extra ship, and you have a squadron of four ships, one of them goes out in reserve or out of commission, and the other takes its place. You can not have an irregular Navy any more than you can have an irregular Army. If you had a Navy and did not have it protected in its center and on its wings, one ship would be surrounded and destroyed. A navy is organized, and it is more important that it should be than an army. Where you have so many squadrons in a fleet, and a new ship comes in, another one is put in reserve. If you had 100,000 men, and your Navy had no concert, no divisions, you would have it all torn to pieces so far as being able to maneuver, so far as being able to practice just like the Army, is concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. Was it torn to pieces in 1917? Mr. SWANSON. In 1917 you still had your squadrons. Senators talk about the Navy being increased. Why, we had be-tween five and six hundred thousand men in the Navy during the war. We have demobilized rapidly and quickly to 120,000. We are not trying to increase the Navy. We have demobilized until we have got it down to 120,000, and all we want to do is to keep what we have on account of this trouble in Europe. Now, what the Navy insists on is 120,000 men-no bigger than the Army that the Senator wants. In the Army you will need them. Why? Because the country needs the defense, and otherwise there would not be enough to provide an adequate defense. It is just as necessary to have the same conditions in the Navy, and what I want to impress on the Senator is that if we had these squadrons and divisions and a ship went out we would not have any ship to go in and take its place.

Mr. LENROOT. The theory is that the Navy Department shall determine the number of squadrons and divisions, and then Congress must appropriate for whatever the Navy Department decides they want.

Mr. SWANSON. No; science determines how many ships you ought to have in a squadron, so that a ship can not be surrounded and cut off. Naval strategy determines it. The battle of Trafalgar was won more by strategy than by superiority of armament. There is nothing that requires more strategy and sense and judgment than a naval battle. Science determines these questions. You have so many destroyers, you have so many submarines, in a fleet or in a squadron, and when you get an extra one you put one in reserve. That is why I am satisfied that 120,000 men will take care of the Navy under all circumstances; certainly until an emergency shall arise such as occurred in the late war, when the personnel of the Navy was increased to four or five hundred thousand.

Mr. LENROOT. We have so often seen estimates made by different departments as to how great a personnel will be required—and this does not apply to the Navy or the Army alone, but to any department—as to how large a personnel will be required when that particular proposition is completed, and never once in the history of the United States has such an estimate been adhered to. It will not be adhered to in this

Mr. President, if the Navy can not get along with 100,000 men under the present conditions, it will not be able to get along with 150,000 men when this program is completed. If they can not get along under present development with 100,000 men, with an appropriation of nearly $500,000,000, when the 1916 program is completed it is going to cost us seven or eight hundred million dollars a year to maintain our Navy.

It is not going to cost us that much, Mr. President, because the country will never stand for any such expenditure when conditions are similar to those which exist to-day.

Why is it that we always get these scares when an Army or a Navy bill is up before the Senate? We hear about what Japan is doing. Does any member of the committee tell us, does any official of the Navy Department tell us, about the fact that Japan, at the very time when we are fighting on this bill, has put out of commission its present second squadron and part of its third squadron in order to avoid expense? Why are we not told these things? There is only one reason, Mr. President, because those facts would tend to defeat increases such as are proposed in this bill.

Mr. President, it seems to me that our policy ought to be very clear and very plain. I have not found any Senator who believes there is any possibility of our being engaged in war in the next two or three years. Yet we should not, of course, abandon our Navy. It seems to me, Mr. President, that our policy should be so clear that he who runs may read. Our naval policy ought to be, whether we have a disarmament agree-ment or whether we do not, that the United States shall be at all times the second naval power in the world, and when we go beyond that we are throwing the money of the taxpayer away in useless naval construction and operation.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, there seems to be no doubt about the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] being agreed to. I have supported it most heartily, and it seems to me that every Member of this body would gladly vote to bring about disarmament between Japan, Great Britain, and the United States. I can not understand why there should be any necessity for the increases in appropriations provided by the Senate Naval Committee over the bill as it passed the House until we have opportunity for the conference between the countries referred to in the Borah resolution to meet and see if we can not get an agreement to disarm, and save the already burdened taxpayers of our country more than a hundred and fifty million dollars annually.

Mr. President, I spent several weeks in Japan last year, and investigated conditions there as best I could. That country is going through exactly the same conditions we have here. The military party there, through their newspapers and propaganda, are doing everything they can to frighten the about what the United States expects to do, in a manner similar to that referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin when he called attention to an article in this morning's Washington Post. Their only hope to tax the people and burden them as the world has never known of before in time of peace is by just such alarming statements to prejudice their people.

Those opposed to the military party in Japan are increasing in numbers all the time, just as are those opposed to it in this country. Ninety per cent of the people of this country are opposed to such appropriations as are provided for in the bill reported by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs, and a like number favor an agreement between all countries to

Mr. President, I do not expect any trouble with Japan. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot] has said that Japan is the only country we would have any trouble with. In the first place, they are having the same financial troubles that other nations of the world are having, and not only that but they are having other troubles. Mr. President, I believe that the great majority of the Japanese are our friends. Of course, in two or three Provinces there is prejudice against our country, just as in three or four States on the Pacific coast there is prejudice against Japan. But a great majority of the people of the United States are friendly to that country, and we want to keep on friendly terms with them. They are among our best customers and our commercial relations are cordial. The United States is the best customer Japan has, and the people of Japan want our friendship and wish to avoid war.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President— The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. King in the chair). the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRIS. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER, Does the Senator from Georgia think it is a wise policy for us to be continually discussing the probability or possibility of war between the United States and Japan? Why is that subject constantly brought up here, and held before the minds of the people of the two countries? I should think it would be a thing we would not want to discuss, at least publicly.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, the matter was referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Lenroot]. I believe we ought to discuss things frankly. I do not believe we are going to have war with Japan, as I have stated. I believe they want to be our friends, and I know a majority of the people in this country want to be friendly with Japan. I think all the discussions about trouble between this country and Japan in certain sections of this country are unwise, and I think if there should be more discussion to the effect that those people are our friends, and we are their friends, it would be far better than the denunciation of Japan all the time by some people in some of the Pacific Coast States.

Congress will be in session several months. If we can not get a disarmament agreement, as provided by the Borah resolution, then it will be time enough for the Senate of the United States to appropriate a hundred and fifty million more than carried in the bill as it passed the House. For my part, if we can not get some kind of disarmament agreement I will be ready to join the Senator from Washington and the other Senators who favor an increase in the Navy.

But, Mr. President, with the people of this country burdened with taxation as they are to-day, I think it is almost a crime to burden them with $150,000,000 additional to be spent on the Navy. Let us first give the conference to be called under the Borah resolution a trial, and see if the Navy can not be reduced instead of being increased.

Mr. President, we only appropriate about $40,000,000 annually for agricultural purposes for the entire country, and some Senators who oppose those items for agricultural advancement vote for four times that amount of increase in the appropriations of the naval bill.

The per capita tax in the United States has increased from $6 annually to $48. The percentage of disbursements annually by this country show 67.81 per cent for past wars; 25.02 per cent for plans of future wars; 3.19 per cent for the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Government; 1.01 per cent for public health and education; 2.91 per cent for public works, including rivers and harbors, the Panama Canal, and public buildings.

Mr. President, it is the duty of Congress to reduce the expenditures of our Government and save our people the great burden of taxation now upon them. As long as I am a Member of this body I shall do my best to bring about this condition.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, before the final vote is taken on the pending amendment and on the proposal to increase the number of battleships of the Navy and the amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BoraH] looking to disarmament, I have wished an opportunity to define my position in the Record, and this seems to be as good an opportunity as I can get, as the debate has lulled at this moment.

Mr. President, I do not think it possible fully to analyze the present condition and reach a final determination as to what we should do toward carrying great armaments in the future unless we review the past, and I do so in no party spirit and with no party criticism, for if one party is to blame I think the other party can be convicted by the same evidence.

If we go back to the period of the War between the States we find that at the close of that great war we probably had the most effective Navy in the world. We had the largest number of men under arms.

The burdens of that war brought a sentiment in the country-North, South, East, and West—in favor of a retrenchment of expenditures, and the Republican Party, who were in power immediately after the war, and the Democratic Party, which came into power a decade and a half after the war closed, both stood for the same proposition—the reduction of armies and the refusal to build a Navy commensurate with those of the great nations of the world. In other words, from the period of the Civil War down to the time we became involved in the great World War the sentiment of the American people and the policy of the political parties which controlled the Government were against burdening the American people with unnecessary expenditures for armies and navies. I think that statement can be made without being controverted by any man. In other words, we stood for peace—peace at home and peace abroad.

We demonstrated our honesty of purpose in standing for the peace of the world by refusing to arm ourselves for the fight. The result has been that without fault on our part, with absolutely clean hands, with no aggressive policy to cause an attack, we were driven into the greatest war of the world, left 100,000 men on the battle fields of France, and are facing the burden of an indebtedness of over $25,000,000,000, which must be paid by taxes wrung from the toiling masses of the American people.

No man can question that this policy of half a century was honest on the part of the American people and their Government. No man who believes in peace and the maintenance of peace can question that that policy was right. But after a trial of 50 years and the results that grew out of that policy, I think we may well question whether the means which we adopted to bring about universal peace was a wise one or not.

Since the beginning of time there has been no greater burden on the progress of civilization than the maintenance of armies and navies. Taxes wrung from the peoples of the governments of the world, instead of being applied to the education of the masses, the building of public works, the onward development of all the high ideals of civilization, have been distributed to build up machines of destruction. It seems to me that no man can contemplate the future, the future of our country and the future of the world, without alarm if the old abhorrent system of government by force, of the world's great nations reaching out to make themselves greater by the power of conquest and the force of destruction, is to continue to prevail.

Unless the lessons of the war just closed lead us to a change of sentiment, to be striving after new ideals, the ideal of universal peace instead of the ideal of conquest and the destructive force of war, then I think the civilization of our day and time is in danger, in serious danger for the future. Wrong came into the world and civilization was destroyed. The world went back to barbarism and then a new civilization was born. Out of the Dark Ages came the light of a Christian civilization. That civilization, among its high ideals, is based on the right of the individual to liberty, on freedom of government, on protection of property.

If the world in the generations to come must be burdened with great taxation not only to pay for the wars that are past but to maintain preparation for wars in the future, then well we may say that the right of property may not long exist. Taxation to maintain just government is right. That property should pay its due share of taxes as property is right. But when taxes are elevated to the point where taxation becomes confiscation and the burden of taxation becomes so great that there is no longer an incentive for men to own property, then property values cease to exist. Now, I do not say that we have reached that standard to-day. In the operations of the income tax we have taken so large a percentage of men's incomes that we have come dangerously close to confiscating their property. Ah, you may say that only relates to a very few American citizens, but when you once establish the principle that through taxation you can confiscate, as the maw of the mouth of war becomes more and more greedy, the brackets at the bottom will begin to weaken, and the area of confiscation by taxation will increase.

That may not be so threatening in these sovereign States of ours, but it has nearly reached the point of confiscation in the great countries of Europe. I see but one way to avoid it. There is a way out, an absolute way out. Remove the burdens of war preparation and the world can work itself out and pay the war indebtedness of the past and work back to the point where the great masses of the peoples of the world are no longer oppressed by the burden of taxation and where what a man earns by his daily toil or his genius may be acquired in large part for his old age and the care of his family in the future or for the upbuilding of his country and the reaching out of the civilization of his day and time to higher ideals. But if this burden of military preparation must continue for two generations longer then in my judgment it will become so overwhelming that in the end it will destroy the present civilization of the world and the onward progress of civilization must stop, because the world will not be able to carry its great burdens of war indebtedness and war preparation and at the same time advance the progress of civilization.

Now, when we came out of the war I think there was a universal sentiment among the American people in favor of disarmament of the world, the entering into agreements by the great nations of the world to forego the settlement of international disputes by force of arms and to recognize their determination in great judicial tribunals that should decide the questions from the standpoint of right by the force of logic and reason and not at the cannon's mouth or at the end of the pointed sword. Have we forgotten that settlement? It was only three years ago and yet it seems we are about to abandon the hope of maintaining the peace of the world except by the force of arms.

I supported the motion for the unconditional ratification of the treaty of Versailles, and why? It was not that I thought it was a perfect treaty. It was made by men. It was formed by nations that had just come out of a great conflict, with all the anger and the animo. ites that grow out of such a conflict. It would be impossible under those conditions for any set of men to write a perfect treaty.

men to write a perfect treaty.

But within the lines of that treaty there was one great provision which shone out as the light of the world for future generations. It was a compact by the great nations of the world to submit their differences to a tribunal of arbitrament and not to the force of the sword. Unfortunately, in my judgment, so far as we are concerned, the compact failed here in this body, in the Senate of the United States, and our failure to take our position in the councils of the world for peace and right has brought the entire edifice of the temple of peace down in ruins. It could not stand without the pillar of these 48 sovereign States sustaining its dome. Our withdrawal shat-tered the confidence of the world. We find that those, all but ourselves, who but three years ago, in solemn compact, signed an agreement that great international differences should be solved through an international court of arbitration, have now gone back to the old war game of the past, the destructive game of the ages; a game that has produced the downfall of all free peoples; a game that has been played over the dead bodies of the masses of the people of the great nations of the world for centuries past. They have gone back to the game of war.

Mr. President, this side of the Chamber does not hold the direct responsibility for the management of the Government to-day, but we would be recreant to the constituencies we represent if we did not stand ready to give a helping hand to the party in power when they are endeavoring to serve the people of this great Nation along right lines, and if we were not willing to sacrifice ourselves, if necessary, by standing in the way of legislation that is not in accord with the great ideals of the American people, the ideals of our Republic, the ideals of our fathers. So, although our Republican brethren hold the responsibility, we can not excuse ourselves from our share of it, and, without intending it as a political criticism, I want to say to you gentlemen who bear the responsibility of the party in power that unless you solve this one question of the future peace of the world you will fail in your duty to the country, and the country will repudiate you for that failure.

You have taken over the control of the Government with the greatest burden of indebtedness that it has ever faced. In generations past the American people hardly knew what taxation was, so far as the Government of the United States was concerned, because the taxes fell so lightly that the burdens of taxation were not felt, but to-day the burden of taxation is bearing down upon the home of every man, be he rich or be he poor, whether it stalks in under the guise of an income tax or whether it meets him at the breakfast table in an indirect tax on what he must buy in order to sustain life and health. majority party can pay the war indebtedness, as they should: they can solve this problem within the decade if they are ready and prepared to relieve the American people of the burden of preparedness for future wars. It is to-day necessary to raise at least $4,000,000,000. More than half of that must be paid for past wars; at least a fourth of it is for preparation for fu-ture wars. If that fourth that is to be raised for preparation for future wars were used to pay our past indebtedness, to wipe out the burdens of the wars that have passed, and to bring the generations of the future to a point where they may work for civic righteousness and not for the destruction of humanity, a great advance would be accomplished for the civilization of the world.

I do not regard the $100,000,000 that is being fought for in the pending bill as more than a mere bagatelle, a pawn on the chessboard. It is not the money involved in the bill that is the issue, but it is the principle for which we stand. It is the question as to whether or not we shall stand for an insistent policy, not that we alone but that the world shall disarm. That is the real question involved in the issue to-day.

As I said a moment ago, we have tried the policy of disarmament alone, and that policy found us unprepared when a war nation struck at our throat. Three years ago there was not a flag in all the world that carried under its folds greater moral power in the councils of the nations than did the Stars and Stripes of our great country. Have you abandoned that for which the flag stood?

Are you now prepared to draw yourselves into the confines of these several States and say that we owe no duty to the world; that there is no obligation for the peace and happiness of mankind that we must recognize for the future? Are we to adopt the recreant policy of selfishness, and think that we may save our own hide and care not what becomes of our neighbors? Mr. President, I think we have gone too far for that. The wheels of time can not turn back. We took our place in the councils of the great nations of the world and we can not abandon that place without having dishonor written across the face of our country.

I am not urging you to go back to a league of nations or to a ratification of the treaty of Versailles. You have decided that question; you have adopted your policy; but because you have adopted a policy that negatives the treaty of Versailles and its covenants does not exempt you from advocating a policy in the councils of the world that will insure the peace of the world in the future.

Many of you Senators on the other side of the Chamber two years ago, when you repudiated the League of Nations and the treaty of Versailles, said that you stood for an international understanding to keep the peace; that you stood for an agreement that the world should disarm, and that we should have no more war. I take it that what you said then you said in all honesty of purpose; but I ask you to-day, What have you done since that time by your actions to convince us of the honesty of your statements?

You were in power in the legislative branch of the Government for two years without action looking to the peace of the world. You have been in power in every branch of this great Government of ours for nearly three months, and so far as I have seen the only affirmative action that has been taken by anyone belonging to the party in power has been the proposal of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl], and that was combated on the other side of the Chamber until a few days ago.

Of course, you well knew that this side of the Chamber would support the proposal of the Senator from Idaho when it came before the Senate, and we knew, not how many votes, but we knew that it would gain some support from your side. I am delighted now to know that the leadership of the Republican Party has concluded not to resist further the proposal of the Senator from Idaho, because it is the only light, it is the only hope that the party in power has held out to the people of the United States against the burdens of war taxation in favor of the peace of the world for the future.

But if you merely intend to allow the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, proposing a conference between three of the great nations of the world looking to disarmament, to go into the bill because you have not the power to keep it out, and do not intend to back it up with the moral power and the moral force of this great Government, then it is idle to incorporate it into the folds of this bill.

But, Mr. President, I believe that there is a force at work in the country that is even greater than the power of the Government that you exercise, and that is the great heart throb of the American people, who are almost unanimous in their cry for "Peace! Peace!"; and if you do not act, and act aggressively, to bring about the peace of the world, that pervading sentiment in the hearts and minds of the American people will in the end force you to action.

For these reasons I shall most heartily support the amendment of the Senator from Idaho; but to my mind the question does not rest there entirely. That is the great objective, but we must be prepared to take our objective.

It is argued by many—and I do not say that their arguments do not carry weight; if it were not for the history of the past they would carry weight with me—that if we want to disarm, and want the world to disarm, we must show the world the way by disarming ourselves. That is a Christian theory. It ought to be a right theory. It would be if the true principles of Christianity beat in the hearts of all men; but, as I said before, for half a century we practiced the theory that we would disarm. Before the Spanish War I think we had only about twenty-five or twenty-six thousand men in the Army, and a Navy that even a second-rate power would not fear; and yet the great nations of the world went on piling up their armaments and the burdens of war indebtedness. Our theory failed. It did not work out. Those nations that still believe in the ideals of war and conquest went on preparing for them.

To-day we stand at the dividing of the roads. There is no use in halfway doing this thing. We are only fooling ourselves and trying to fool the Nation by saying that we will cut off $100,000,000 when it reaches into billions. We must either stand for peace by not preparing for war or we must stand for peace by making a war preparation that those who carry the knife of war in their teeth will have reason to fear. economy in this bill does not appeal to me. If we are going to have peace by disarmament, if we are going to bring about peace of the world by establishing the principle of disarmament, let us disarm ourselves and strike out all the pages of this bill that relate to a new Navy. Let us make the example a real one; but if we have not the courage to do that, let us not fool ourselves or attempt to fool our constituencies. If we are still going to stand for war and the instruments of war, if we are going to maintain peace at the cannon's mouth because our neighbors will not allow us to have it otherwise, then let us have the greatest cannon that the world knows, let us have an armament that the world will fear, and let the President of the United States carry the proposal of the Senator from Idaho to the councils of the world, demanding universal disarmament and universal peace. So far as I am concerned, I think at this hour and day that is the only way to accomplish the result.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Some question was made this morning about a newspaper report of the speech of the President, and whether he said "the overwhelming power of the United States" or "the overwhelming power of the righteousness of the United States." I think what the President had in mind, assuming that he used the language which I have last quoted, is just what the Senator from Alabama is now speaking of.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not speaking to the President of the United States. I am not going to assume his position in this matter. The issue is for us to-day; it will be for him to-morrow. We all hope and expect that when the problem lies at his door he will do a man's part and endeavor to solve it for the best interests of the people of the United States. But we can not escape our burdens by looking to the President of the United States to assume them for us.

I do not know who placed on the wall the diagram which is before us, but I do know that the figures it contains are substantially correct, and there the burden of war faces the Senate of the United States.

Of all this great indebtedness we must levy taxes to maintain, nearly 93 per cent is utilized to pay for past wars and future preparation for war. The great powers of actual government embraced in the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of the Government are maintained and paid for by only 3 per cent of the taxes we wring from the American people, and that is their Government—the legislative branch to make their laws, the judicial branch to construe them, the executive branch to maintain them. Three per cent of the burdens of taxation which rest on the American people actually carries on the real functions of the Government.

Then in addition to that 3 per cent covers the expenditures for your public works, your river and harbor improvements, your good roads, your endeavors toward building up the Nation and advancing civilization.

Then you give 1 per cent out of these burdens to education and public health, to aid in the education of the children of the Nation, for the building up of men and women as the guardians of the Nation's future, and to the maintenance of the public health and the keeping of the plagues of foreign countries off our shores.

Seven per cent of all this great burden of $5,000,000,000,000 of taxes which you are levying on the American people you spend for actual government and the other 93 per cent you are paying for wars that are past and for future wars. Can the party in power face that proposition and expect to be sustained by the American people unless they are willing to affirmatively, energetically, and unequivocally stand for the great principle of the disarmament of the world and the future peace of mankind?

In my judgment, they can not. It is the great problem of all the problems which rest on your shoulders to solve, and I am glad to know that the leadership of the majority party in the Senate has at least consented to recognize the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah].

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the committee amendment, on page 30, line 22, under the item "Pay of the Navy," where the committee proposes to strike out "$72,421,-647" and to insert "$87,798,447."

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst Borah Brandegee Broussard Bursum McKellar McLean McNary Moses Nelson Hale Harreld Spencer Sutherland Harrison Harrison Heffin Swanson Townsend Hitchcock Newberry Norbeck Oddie Underwood Wadsworth Walsh, Mass. Walsh, Mont. Cameron Capper Caraway Colt Curtis Johnson Jones, Wash. Kellogg Kendrick Overman Phipps Poindexter Warren Watson, Ga. Watson, Ind. Kenyon Keyes King Ladd La Follette Dillingham Pomerene Robinson Sheppard Shields Shortridge Simmons Smith Williams E kins Ernst Fernald Willis Wolcott Lenroot Fletcher Lodge McCormick Gerry

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that my colleague, the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell], is necessarily absent. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day. The VICE PRESIDENT. Sixty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I have voted against every proposition to increase the size of the Navy bill as it came from the House, and if the Senate decides to incorporate in the pending bill any considerable part of the increases recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs, I shall vote against the bill. It seems to me the situation is serious enough for men to carry their protests against the present tendency to extravagance to the limit.

The great thing the world is suffering from to-day is the monstrous governmental extravagance, an extravagance not only in the United States but in other nations; an extravagance which threatens the very solvency of Governments themselves.

I doubt whether Senators who are voting for this enormously wasteful bill realize what we have been gradually led into. Before the war we were in the habit of voting each year a hundred million dollars for the Army and one hundred and twenty-three millions per year for the Navy, and I do not agree fully with my friend the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] when he indicates that the United States was then committed to a policy of disarmament. The fact was that even before the war more than one-third of the great appropriations made by Congress each year were devoted to the Army and Navy, or to the preparation for future wars, and when we entered the war we had a Navy which was practically second only to that of Great Britain. We had an Army upon which we had expended a hundred million dollars a year for a number of years, and a Navy upon which we were then expending $123,000,000 a year. So I do not think the United States can be charged with having adopted a policy of disarmament before the war.

Large as those appropriations were, however, they sink into insignificance compared with the monstrous appropriations which are now calmly proposed in the Senate, at the very time of all others when we have the least practical need for a great Army or a great Navy.

Before the war it was evident that the world was arming for war. Before the war, while we did not expect to be drawn into war, it was evident that other nations did, and we knew that there was one great nation in Europe particularly which for nearly 50 years had been preparing for the war which finally broke.

Now the situation is entirely different. That great nation, the German Empire, is practically disarmed. Her great fleet, which was probably equal to our own, lies at the bottom of British waters on the other side of the Atlantic Ocean. France as a Government is to-day well nigh bankrupt. The British Government to-day is in such a condition as regards taxation that it can not impose another penny of taxes upon the British people, and can not even as yet pay to us the interest on the debt it owes us.

Germany, as we all know, is practically in the hands of a receiver, and will be for many years. The Italian Government is in a precarious situation financially, and every nation in Europe has had its indebtedness so enormously swollen by the war that war is the last thing they will think of in the future, the thing that they will avoid above every other evil in the world. The existing condition is entirely different from that before the war, and this is the psychological moment of all others when the United States can afford to set an example to the rest of the world.

Mr. President, it is well known that I preferred an international agreement for disarmament. That is a sure and certain way to bring about disarmament. I hoped for an international agreement through the terms of the League of Nations. That is not now apparently to be secured, but, in my opinion, it still remains for this great intelligent American people under a bold leadership to do something for disarmament, and the thing which it can do is to set an example to the rest of the world.

Suppose it goes out to the rest of the world that the United States, the richest, the most populous, and perhaps the most effective nation in war, has deliberately adopted a policy of disarmament, what is the effect going to be in other countries, in every country on the face of the globe, Japan as well as the others? It will be tremendous. In Great Britain, in France, in every nation of the world, there is a powerful party favoring disarmament, and the example which the United States would set by adopting a policy of disarmament, even in the absence of an international agreement, would have a powerful effect in every one of those countries and disarmament would be taken up, if not by international agreement, certainly as the result of example.

Suppose, on the other hand, we adopt the other policy. Suppose we go forward in a way imitating the plan of the German Empire and attempt to have the greatest Navy in the world. Why, inevitably the force of that example will be felt in every nation in the world, inevitably the military party in every nation of the world will be strengthened, and inevitably those who believe in disarmament in every nation of the world, including Japan, would be invigorated.

So I say we are now at the parting of the ways. If we choose disarmament, if we choose a partial disarmament, if we choose a reduction, yes, if we even choose moderation, our example will be a powerful one in every nation in the world and will go far to bring about that which we desire.

I agree with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Underwood] when he says it is not merely the extra $100,000,000 involved in this dispute in the Senate, not merely the question whether the Senate will insist on increasing the amount in the House bill to $500,000,000. It is not simply the money consideration, but there is another issue involved. It is the moral effect of what we do that is potent, that is important, and for that reason I shall vote as I have voted against every one of the proposed increases, and if they or any considerable number of them are put into the bill I shall vote against the bill, and I shall go out to the people of my State protesting not only that I do so because I believe in disarmament of the world in order to save the world from bankruptcy and war, but I do it also in order to save the American people from the destructive burden of taxation now oppressing them.

Do Senators realize what this burden has become? Do we realize that within a few years, since most of us entered the Senate, governmental expenditures have increased from $600,000,000 a year to nearly $5,000,000,000; that we are now deliberately proposing to burden the American people, who are already suffering from depression, with taxes during the coming year almost ten times as high as we dared levy upon them 8 or 10 years ago; yes, 5 or 6 years ago? Do we realize now what difference this makes to the individual? Let us see.

In 1913 the per capita tax due to appropriations made by Congress was $6.75—$6.75 per person in the United States. If the bills as now proposed are passed that per capita tax in the United States during the coming year will approximate $48. I saw an article not long ago in a New York paper declaring that the burden of taxation on the people of the United States, taking the State, local, and national taxes into account, was something like $750 per family. That is an understatement. It is practically $50 per person, or $750 per family, for the taxes which we in the Congress of the United States levy. That takes no account of the various State taxes.

In the various State legislatures and in many of the municipalities they are almost as drunk with extravagance as we are here in Congress.

My own State of Nebraska, whose legislature has just adjourned, has distinguished itself by levying taxes upon the people of Nebraska for the next two years amounting to $30,000,000. A few years ago—yes, I think only two years ago—the taxes for a period of two years in my State were $22,000,000. A few years before that they were $18,000,000, and I can remember very well when we complained of the legislatures which levied taxes of $6,000,000 in my State about the time I entered the Senate.

That enormous increase in taxes in my State is no doubt approximated by that in other States of the Union. While these great taxes are being levied, enormous debts are being piled up which increase the taxes still more.

In 1913, according to the Statistical Abstract, the per capita indebtedness, State and local, throughout the United States was about $40—$40 for every man, woman, and child in the United States of indebtedness of the States, cities, school districts, and so on. At that time, 1913, the national debt was $10 per capita. In other words, the burden of National, State, and local indebtedness was then $50 for every man, woman, and child in the United States.

What is it to-day? As nearly as I can approximate it, according to the figures so far as given in the Statistical Abstract, the State and municipal indebtedness now approximates $60 per person in the United States, and the national indebtedness, as we all know, now amounts to about $240 per capita in the United States.

In other words, the people of the United States, who in 1913 bore a governmental indebtedness of $50 per person, now bear a governmental indebtedness of over $300 per person.

There is a limit to this. There must be a stop put to it. It can not be done by trifling words; it can not be reached as long as committees listen only to Cabinet officers and bureau chiefs. I am a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, as some other Senators are members of the Committee on Naval Affairs. Whom do you hear in your meetings? You hear only the men interested in swelling expenditures. You hear naval officers, you hear bureau chiefs, each one anxious to enlarge his own sphere of action, and those are all we hear before the Committee on Military Affairs. No one ever comes there urging a reduction. Every bit of testimony that comes before either the Committee on Military Affairs or the Committee on Naval Affairs is an interested, one-sided bit of testimony. It is all for expenditure, all for increasing appropriations.

In seeking the testimony only of such witnesses the commit-tees make a great mistake. The members of these committees hear only one side. They are not well posted; they are not able to cross-examine the witnesses intelligently upon the recommendations which they make; and the result is that appropriations for the Army and the Navy of the United States are not really made by Congress, but are practically dictated by the officers of the Navy and the Army; the large and small functionaries who spend the money are the only advisers of the committees, who naturally go to extremes. There is only one remedy; that is a heroic effort by the responsible Senate and House to lop off excesses and insist on economy.

Mr. President, we not only have a bonded debt of $24,000,-000,000 but we have a floating debt of $2,000,000,000 that is being constantly renewed at 51 per cent interest. Senators on the other side of the aisle will have to do something with that great menace. What are you going to do with it? You are going to issue bonds pretty soon. Would it not be better, if you propose to continue to levy enormous taxes, to use some of that money to pay off some of that floating debt? Would it not be better, instead of increasing your coal bill ten or fifteen million dollars in order that the ships of the Navy may sail around in constant motion, to use some of that money to retire some of that floating debt? Would it not be better, instead of adding to the House bill enough money to increase the naval personnel from 100,000 to 120,000, to use that fifteen or twenty million dollars in retiring some of this indebtedness that is hanging over the country like a cloud, injuring business at the présent time and responsible to some extent for the large number of men out of employment?

This great burden of indebtedness and this great burden of taxation affects the business of the country. It affects business men, large and small, and it affects laboring men. It increases the cost of their living. You can not take four or five billion dollars away from the people of the United States every year and burn it up in Government expenses without affecting all those business interests. We have to-day a condition of depression in the United States which may well give us pause to consider what we are going to do to remedy it. There is the South at the present time practically prostrate in business because its great crop has found almost no market. The men that own six or seven million bales of cotton that are still stored will have to sell it for perhaps half enough to pay the cost The copper mines in the United States are practically all closed; our railroads are in a miserable condition: the farmers in my section of the country, who raise wheat and corn and cattle and hogs, have not been able to get enough for them to pay for the cost of raising; indeed, they have not been able probably to get half enough to reimburse them for To-day the foreign commerce of the United States, that cost. which is absolutely necessary in order to make this country prosperous, is falling off at the rate of $100,000,000 a month in exports and $100,000,000 a month in imports.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President—

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Touching the increase in the personnel of the Navy, the Senator from Nebraska, if I understood him correctly, suggested that the addition proposed by the bill as reported by the Senate committee would add something like $20,000,000 per year. Is the Senator aware of the fact that the addition of every single man in the personnel of the Navy means an addition of $2,000 per annum? If we increase the personnel of the Navy, by every single man that we increase it, merely for the pay, care, and maintenance of that man alone, to say nothing about the additions necessary to be made to the appropriations on account of other enlarged activities carried by such an increase in the personnel of the Navy, there is involved an increase of $2,000; so that 20,000 men added to the personnel of the Navy would require an expenditure of $40,000,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator from Wiscensin has made a more painstaking study of the bill than have I, and I am very glad to accept his figures. I was using the figures as exhibited in the appropriation bill which I think approximate $17,000,000 Of course I realize that would not be all of the additional expenditure. It is only the mere matter of pay. There is also the matter of maintenance and travel and many other items that would come in, and I approximated it at $20,000,000. However, whatever the addition may be, it is wrong; any increase is wrong.

The supreme issue, as I see it, not only in the United States but throughout the world, is to do something to bring down the awful cost of government to the people. We are destroying government. The people will not tolerate this sort of thing. We are destroying the credit of governments; we are destroying the respect for government; we are making of government a devouring monster that is eating up the substance of the people. Senators who listen only to naval officers and Army officers who come before committees when they ask for appropriations that will involve the consumption of tens of thousands of tons of coal in order that the naval ships may sail the seas will get a different impression when they get out and talk to the American people, who to-day are struggling to make both ends meet and who object to the imposition of taxes amounting to $750 for every family of the land in order to maintain the Government in time of peace.

We can afford an enormous reduction, in my opinion, of our governmental expenditures. The only way to reduce is to reduce just as was once said in a national crisis, the only way to resume was to resume. We have got to do it heroically: we have got to close our ears to some of the Army and Navy officers and to use our common horse sense and say it is unnecessary for every ship of the American Navy to be sailing the high seas all the time and burning up oil and coal; that it is unnecessary in time of peace for every ship in the American Navy to be manned to its full complement of men to meet every requirement of war. We can in time of peace like this enormously reduce the expense of maintaining the Navy of the United States.

I indorse also very much of what was said by the Senator from Wisconsin in denouncing the vast expenditure that is proposed for the construction of great battleships, which a large part of the intelligent opinion of the world believes obsolete to-day and that will be upon the scrap heap almost before they are finished.

So I say, Mr. President, that in the interest of the taxpavers of this country, who object to these Government extravagances, it is my purpose to vote against every preposed increase in the bill; and if any considerable number of those increases are put in, I shall vote against the appropriation bill itself.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I am in favor of the disarmament amendment of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah]. I should like to have other nations included in it; all the nations should be invited to participate in a general conference for the purpose of bringing about an understanding on a program for reduction in national armament, but inasmuch as his resolution, which includes only America, Great Britain, and Japan, furnishes us a starting point, and inasmuch as this is the most opportune time that has come to the civilized nations in a long time to begin this work, I shall gladly support his amendment.

As has been suggested here by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], whenever a big appropriation is sought, either for the Army or the Navy, we have some kind of a war scare held up to our gaze; and it is pointed out to us that we are in imminent danger, when, as a matter of fact, there is not a single war cloud to be seen anywhere on the sky of our national existence. We do not intend to make war upon any nation and no nation on earth is seriously considering the matter of making war upon us.

Mr. President, we have just emerged from the flood and carnage of the most cruel and criminal war that ever cursed the world. That war in four years' time murdered 10,000,000 men; crippled and wounded thirty-odd million more; and cost in money and its equivalent more than half the wealth of the world.

When such a horrible war has been ended in victory for civilization and liberty, when right thinking people everywhere are wanting something done to prevent the recurrence of another such war, it seems to me that this is the time for this great peace-loving Nation to insist upon immediate action in the interest of a general reduction in armament amongst all the nations of the earth.

Germany was the mightiest and most terrible war machine in all the world, but her war implements are broken and her murderous war machine is shattered. Great Britain upon the seas is the mightiest war power on earth, and we stand second to We are good friends and we were comrades in arms in the World War just ended. Together we constitute now the dominant war power of the world, and if this is not the appropriate time to start a movement in the interest of a reduction in national armament, when will that time ever come?

Mr. President, the people of the United States are groaning to-day beneath a heavy tax burden, and yet the effort is being made here to increase that burden, to pile more upon the backs of the taxpayers of America, and for what purpose? Not to put us in a position to defend ourselves against a danger that threatens, but for the purpose of enabling a certain group of people to run their arms deeper and deeper into the Treasury of the United States.

The farmers of the South and West are in dire distress; millions of people who produce that which feeds and clothes the world are held in the grasp of very trying and embarrassing conditions, and the Government is not handing out to them the money of the public to tide them over this awful time. They are not asking for relief in that form. They ask to be treated as any other substantial business is treated. There are other concerns here, however, which, according to the hearings, say they want this Government work to tide them over until normal conditions return. Is that the business of this Government? What in truth is the Government? It is the great servant and giant agent of the people of the United States. We are not sent here to dole out money from the Public Treasury to certain crafty and avaricious concerns that would fill their coffers with the money of the taxpayers of the country.

We are here to do that which will bring about the greatest good to the greatest number; we are here to prevent the strong from oppressing the weak and to enforce the laws of justice. In spite of the fact that there is not a war cloud in sight, and in spite of the fact that we have the next largest Navy in the world, we are being asked to-day to greatly increase the tax burden of the American people by appropriating several hundred millions of dollars for naval purposes. We should all be in favor of an adequate Navy; and if we did not appropriate a dollar for the extravagant and unnecessary items included in this bill we would still have an adequate Navy.

Let me say to the Senators on the other side that the people are not with them in this useless expenditure of the tax money of the country.

Mr. President, under the guiding hand of Josephus Daniels, Secretary of the Navy, the American Navy was put in the finest condition in which it had ever been, and to-day, even without a dollar being appropriated by Congress, our is capable of defending our rights and interests against any sea power on earth. Without going into the Treasury for another dollar, if war should come to-morrow we could take the equipment we have and go out and fight the war to a successful conclusion.

Then what is the use of appropriating this money at this time? What right have we under the conditions that obtain to increase the taxes of the people for these things? God knows that in the darkest hour of the country's history, when our liberties were imperiled, they responded cheerfully and helped to win the war with all that they could contribute, and now that the war has been won and no threatening cloud is in sight, let us stop this thing; let us stop this tax gouging for one year at least.

Mr. President, what would be the impression and what effect would it have if this Nation should say to the other nations, "We are not going to increase our Army and Navy for 12 months; we are going to show to the nations of the earth that we are willing to practice what we preach; we have advocated a reduction in armament; we are now proving our faith by our works; we have already commenced the important work of reduction in our national armament program"? What effect would it have upon the nations of the earth for the United States to stand out upon the stage of the world holding up to the nations the dove of peace and the banner of disarmament?

Why, the nations of the world would say, "Behold America, the richest nation in the world, the decisive factor in the World War just ended, she is not going forth like other nations have gone that have experienced great military triumph and then determined to become the greatest military power in the world; she wants to get back to the broad thoroughfares of peace and international good will, and behold she leads the way.

Such action on our part, Mr. President, would have more effect than all the written and spoken appeals that can be made in any other way.

Some Senators say this is dangerous; we ought to wait until we arm ourselves until we groan beneath the weight of our own armament, and then walk out amongst the nations covered with bristling bayonets and say to them: "Now we are ready for disarmament. Are you ready?" Then they would say: "We did not understand you. While you were building up all of this war equipment we were building, too, because we did not know what you intended to do. We could not understand why you should thus equip yourself with war implements. feared that your head had been turned, as so many before you have been, under the spell of victory and that you might seek to conquer and rule the world; so we have been arming too."

In the absence of some international peace tribunal and some general program for reduction in armament every nation would in a little while go to arming itself and then another war would come, and it would be more terrible, more dangerous and deadly than the one just ended.

Mr. President, I repeat, there never was a time so propitious as the present for this Christian Nation to prove its faith by its works, and say to the world, "I am ready to take the first step in the great work of reduction in armament. We have no desire to disturb the peace and happiness of other nations.

want peace with all the nations of the earth."

I know that the suggestion of cutting down the appropriations for these unnecessary equipments is very displeasing to those who thrill at the clink of the dollars that fall into their coffers from the Public Treasury. The only music that they know and really enjoy is the clink of the taxpayer's dollar. They care nothing for the peace of the world. They make money out of war. They are happy and contented if you will permit them to clip their coupons and swell their fortunes at the expense of the American people.

Mr. President, the time has come for the Congress of the United States to make known to all the world the real feeling of the American people upon the all-important question of the future peace of the world. No set of men who profit by the sale of war implements have the right to stifle the voice of the American people on this subject. The taxpayers of the country are vitally interested in this question, and, above all, the fathers and mothers of America; and boys now living and boys yet unborn are going to be affected by our action upon this question. God help us to so act that all the world will know that our country is sincerely on the side of universal peace.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. Let the amendment be read. The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The READING CLERK. On page 30, line 22, the committee proposes to strike out "$72,421,647" and to insert "$87,798,so as to read:

Pay of the Navy: Pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty, and officers on waiting orders, $37,023,859; officers on the retired list, $3,113,771; commutation of quarters for officers, including boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, machinists, pharmacists, pay clerks, and mates, naval constructors, and assistant naval constructors, $4,254,192, and also members of Nurse Corps (female), $1,000; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, or commutation of quarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops, and hire of quarters for officers and enlisted men on sea duty at such times as they may be depived of their quarters on board ship due to repairs or other conditions which may render them uninhabitable, $25,000; pay of enlisted men on the retired list, $620,250; extra pay to men reenlisting under honorable discharge, $4,390,800; interest on deposit by men, $10,000; pay of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineer's force and men detailed for duty with the Fish Commission, enlisted men, men in trade schools, and pay of enlisted men of the Hospital Corps, $87,798,447.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN].

Observing that he is not in his seat, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH of Montana (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr.

FRELINGHUYSEN]. I am told, however, that if he were present he would vote "yea." I propose to vote "yea," and I accordingly vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. ERNST. I am paired with my colleague, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. New] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. EDGE. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Owen] to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Knox] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. Glass], who is necessarily absent from the Chamber. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr.

PAGE] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. FERNALD. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. Jones]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. Weller] and will vote.

I vote "yea."

Mr. COLT. Although I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL], I am at liberty to vote on this question. I vote "yea."

Mr. KING. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCumber]. I inquire whether he

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. KING. Not being able to obtain a transfer, I am compelled to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nav.

Mr. HARRIS. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] to the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. Culberson] and will vote. I vote "nay."
Mr. BROUSSARD. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] on account of illness. I have been requested to announce that if present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CARAWAY (after having voted in the negative). I have general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKinley]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. Reed] and will let my vote stand. Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. Trammell] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

Mr. KENDRICK. Has the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCormick] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with that Senator. As I am unable to obtain a transfer, I shall have to withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay.

Mr. KELLOGG (after having voted in the affirmative). have a general pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. May I inquire if he has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. KELLOGG. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from North Carolina to the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. France] is paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], and that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Penrose] is paired with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 23, as follows:

So the amendment of the committee was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment passed ever.

The Assistant Secretary. The next amendment of the committee passed over is found on page 31, line 5, where the committee proposes to strike out "$7,000,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$12,810,222," for "retainer pay and active-service pay of members of the Naval Reserve Force.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this represents an increase of nearly 100 per cent, and it seems to me we ought to have some statement regarding it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The principal reason for the increase is the fact that estimating the amount needed for retainer pay for the Reserve Force, the House allowed for one month's pay, while the law requires two months' pay. It is necessary to correct the amount in order to comply with the existing law.

The amendment was agreed to. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee passed over.

The Assistant Secretary. The next amendment of the committee passed over is on page 31, line 9, where the committee proposes to strike out, in the total, "$133,202,263," and to insert in lieu thereof "$154,389,285."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment of the committee passed over.

The Assistant Secretary. The next amendment of the committee passed over is on page 35, line 7, in the item "Fuel and transportation," where the committee proposes to strike out "$17,500,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$25,000,000."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I assume this increase was based upon estimates, and I would like to know as to the date of the estimates regarding the price of coal covered by this appropriation; I mean the estimates relied upon by the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The first Monday in December approximately, at the time of the convening of Congress. The estimates were made during the previous Congress. Those estimates, however, were very much larger than the amount allowed

Mr. LENROOT. What I mean is this: I assume that in making this increase the committee determined that coal would cost so much a ton.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes.
Mr. LENROOT. As of what date was that determination made?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The date as to the price of coal upon which the estimates were based was April 1, 1921.

Mr. LENROOT. Can the Senator state to us the difference between the estimated price of coal on April 1 and when the original estimates were made?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can not state that to the Senator.

Mr. LENROOT. Can the Senator state the price per ton of the coal covered by this item?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Six dollars and seventy-five cents a ton.

Mr. LENROOT. Delivered, or at the mine?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Delivered. The estimate was $37,-000,000, but the committee reduced it to $25,000,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How does this compare with the appropriation for last year?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The appropriation last year was $10,- 000,000 and there was a deficiency of $26,000,000, making a total ooo,000 and there was a denciency of $20,000,000, making a total appropriation of $36,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, that is one reason why I lost interest in the $25,000,000 item, or the increase of $10,000,000. It does not make a particle of difference what Congress appropriates, the Navy will go ahead and make the expenditure, and we will cover it by a deficiency appropriation, just as we have been doing heretofore. So they make an estimate this year of $36,000,000, and for the sake of apparent economy and decency the committee reduces it to $25,000,000; but it will come in for $36,000,000 or more and be appropriated for.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would like to say to the Senator that the committee inquired very particularly as to this item of expense, as to the manner in which the fund is administered, and there is no evidence of any mismanagement or lack of economy on the part of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts in buying coal. They bought in response to public notice for bids and the contracts were let to the lowest bidder.

Mr. BORAH. I suppose perhaps that is true, so far as the Navy Department is concerned; but, as a matter of fact, there is no competition. The parties who sell the coal do not compete with one another, and while perhaps the Navy does all it can do, so far as it is concerned, as a matter of fact those who sell the coal see that there is no competition.

Mr. POINDENTER. I do not think that is the case.

Mr. BORAH. I think if the Senator would investigate it as far as I have, he would conclude that it is the case.

Mr. POINDEXTER.

There is considerable combination among coal operators, but it does not exclude competition

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, in regard to this item, I think in justice to the former Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Daniels, I should say that he had the power of commandeering, and he exercised it. He was criticized for his action very much at that time, but if I recall correctly, he paid only $4.24 a ton, when coal was selling in the market for fifteen or twenty dollars. He told the dealers he would not pay beyond a certain price. He had the power to commandeer, and he forced a reasonable price of coal. I think that was disclosed by the committee investigating the coal situation.

Mr. KENYON. Before what is called the Calder committee, the Committee on Reconstruction and Production, that fact was developed, as well as another most interesting fact, that the Navy had secured its coal at a price much lower than that at which the Army secured its coal.

Mr. SWANSON. Secretary Daniels had power to commandeer oil and coal. Exorbitant prices were being asked, and he proceeded to exercise his power of commandeering, which had been given him by Congress to prevent extortionate prices, and he got the coal and oil at reasonable prices.

That does not get at the proposition which I suggested, that the coal operators act together. There is no competition between them. As I said, the Navy Department probably does all it can do, but it is simply dealing with one seller.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether there is any authority of law for the Secretary of the Navy to incur a deficit under this

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is, and there was a deficit incurred for the current fiscal year of $26,000,000.

Mr. LENROOT. Are we to understand, then, that no matter what appropriations we may make the Secretary of the Navy is authorized by the law to spend any amount that he may see fit for coal?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Only a sufficient amount to provide the fuel that is necessary for the operation of the Navy.

Mr. LENROOT. He determines what is necessary. send the fleet around the world every year, if he saw fit, and we would have to pay for the coal, no matter how unnecessary the cruise was.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Secretary of the Navy could not send the fleet around the world, but I suppose the President of the United States could.

Mr. LENROOT. As a matter of fact, the Secretary of the Navy does determine the ordinary movements of the fleet.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The items going to make up this amount consist of the following: Coal, estimated at 406,575 tons, $3,110,-000, in round figures; fuel oil, 3,649,048 barrels, $14,048,834. Mr. LENROOT. With reference to that, may I ask the Senator whether April 1 was the date of the estimate of the cost of oil?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; April 1, 1921.

Mr. LENROOT. Can the Senator give us the price per

Mr. POINDEXTER. Fuel oil, per barrel, $2.55.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator know what the price is to-day?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not.

Mr. LENROOT. It is going down, is it not?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, if it goes down, the Navy should get the benefit of the reduction in price.

Mr. LENROOT. The Navy would, but the Treasury would not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Undoubtedly the Treasury would.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, this is another of those items where some economies can be effected by those in charge try-ing to economize in the use of oil and coal. There are not many places where that can be done, it is true, without express direction by Congress, but it does seem to me that in view of the present situation there should be some effort upon the part of the Navy Department, in determining the movements of the fleet, to have a little regard to what it is costing the taxpayers of America There has not been in the past; I do not know that there will be in the future. I do not know that it would be of any use to defeat this amendment, in view of the stateparently the Navy can go right on and spend the money just the same and we will pay the bill. Congress appears to have no control whatever over this matter.

It seems to me that deficits should not be permitted to be created by any department of the Government except where there is a liability fixed by law. Unless something of that kind is done we may pare down appropriations as much as we please, but what good does it do if they can go on and incur the liability and spend the money just the same.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Washington indicate what the authority is that the Secretary has to incur deficits? Is it by general statute of the United States or is it by some provision in appropriation acts heretofore passed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is by general law.
Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator remember the section of the statutes?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Section 3732 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its falfillment, except in the War and Navy Bepartments for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the Senator to say that the price of coal has been placed at something like $6.50 per ton?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It was estimated for in the estimates which were made at the beginning of the last session of Congress in December, estimating the prospective price of coal as of the 1st of April at $6.75 per ton delivered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What portion of the $25,000,000 goes for

Mr. POINDEXTER. Three million one hundred and ten thousand two hundred and ninety-eight dollars.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The rest of it, some $21,500,000, for oil? Mr. POINDEXTER. Oil, gasoline, and for the maintenance and operation of coaling stations and bunker depots and for tug and vessel hire and incidental items.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it not a fact that oil is now quoted at but little more than half what it was last year?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not think there has been any such reduction as that. I have not the latest market quotations on oil.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have noticed in the papers that there is an enormous reduction, a reduction so great as to affect the stock values of oil companies, and is a material thing.

Mr. LODGE. The current price of gasoline is 26 cents a gallon, and that is what it is estimated on.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The inquiry was about oil.

Mr. LODGE. Crude oil is $2.25 a barrel, and it is based on

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it is less than that now. I should like to ask the acting chairman another question. Who regulates the number of miles these vessels shall sail and burn coal or oil?

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Chief of Naval Operations, subject to the direct supervision of the Secretary of the Navy and the President of the United States.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So if they cut down the sailing of vessels one-half that item could be cut down one-half?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; approximately, based on the number of steaming hours, of course.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does not the Senator think there is a very legitimate opportunity for economy there?

Mr. POINDEXTER. On the contrary, it has been the policy of the Navy to carry on maneuvers, and to keep the Navy a really proficient Navy, which will require an increase of steaming operations. Furthermore, lately a very large part of the fleet has been sent to the Pacific Ocean and is now based on the Pacific coast, and the expectation is that the remainder of the fleet may be sent for a part of the time to the Pacific coast. which, of course, will increase the fuel consumption.

Mr. HPTCHCOCK. I realize that it will, but it is something wholly within the judgment of the Navy Department. This appropriation is the equivalent of 4,000,000 tons of eoal to be burned up. It does not much matter whether it is coal or oil: it is the equivalent of 4,000,000 tons at the present price. Does not the Senator think the governing body-

Mr. POINDEXTER. The estimate for coal is 406,575 tons. Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; but I say the $25,000,000 at the current price of coal represents the equivalent of 4,000,000 tons of coal.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator can figure that out.
Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; I did figure it out. It is a matter ment made by the acting chairman of the committee, for ap- of simply moving the ships about for the purpose of burning up coal to keep them in motion. Is not that a matter within the discretion of the Navy Department?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very largely.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And can not the lawmaking body, by limiting the amount of money to be expended for that purpose, influence that judgment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. They can not under the existing law. It would not affect it in any way at all. Of course, if Congress wanted to pass a bill saying ships should not steam except a certain amount and direct by law where they should go, that would affect the matter, but I think it would be impracticable and absolutely prevent the training or the proper use of the Navv

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska seems to have the idea that the department has an erratic, irregular way of sailing the ships. They have some kind of a policy that keeps a ship about two days in port and one day at sea. It is a systematic plan which they have in effect. The maneuvers which they conduct are not conducted in an erratic, capricious way. I think that is about the policy which they have usually followed. They have found that the best way to keep the ships equipped and the men in training is to keep them sailing as they do. It is not done capriciously and irregularly, as the Senator from Nebraska would seem to think.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I had not said it was capricious, but I do say it is arbitrary. Whatever policy the Navy Department adopts it can enforce. It can have a ship at sea only one day a week if it proposes. When the department burns up $25,000,000 worth of fuel a year for the American people, it seems to me it is a question Congress ought to consider whether that is a matter of necessity or not.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Navy Department adopts a great many expedients with a view of economizing in the use of fuel. Among other expedients, it offers prizes to engineers and firemen for reduction in the amount of fuel consumed. The utmost attention is given to minute details in the expending of this money for fuel and in the use of the fuel after it is obtained. The question is whether or not we can direct the expenditure by legislative act or must of necessity trust to the administration and to the executive officials. Of course, that is a question of policy to be determined by Congress.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If they burned up over $30,000,000 worth of fuel last year and in times past in moving the ships around, it would seem to me as though they were offering prizes to those who could burn the most fuel.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; they do not do that. The Senator will remember that last year they sent the fleet to the Pacific Ocean.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The next amendment will be stated. The Assistant Secretary. The next amendment passed over will be found on page 44, in the total of pay of enlisted men, active and reserve list, Marine Corps, where, in line 18, the committee propose to strike out "$11,550,300.76" and in lieu insert "$13,620,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill what number of men on the reserve list that provides for? I suppose it includes men who are on the active list and also includes those on the reserve list.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does include officers who are on the reserve list.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has it been called to the Senator's attention that there are a large number of retired naval officers who can be brought into the service in place of men who are on the reserve list at one-half the cost to the Government? That is to say, if an officer on the retired list is by order of the department brought into the service, all the additional pay involved is the difference between the retired pay and the full pay; but if an officer upon the reserve list is brought into the service, it means full pay for him. I have been told that that is one of the places in the service where economy might be practiced; that is, the department might call out retired naval officers to perform certain duties, but instead of doing so they call out reserve naval officers to perform duties, thereby involving considerable additional cost.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This does not relate to the Navy; it relates only to the Marine Corps.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The same argument would apply to it. Mr. POINDEXTER. The same argument would apply to it, but the Senator has overlooked the fact that officers on the retired list, placed there under the statute, can not be ordered to active duty without their consent. They are old officers who are supposed to have passed the period when they can render efficient service. Congress has fixed the age of retirement, I suppose, upon full information, which age has been fixed for many years, and when officers reach that age it is supposed that it is in the interest of economy to retire them upon such pension as has been fixed by Congress and put younger officers in their place.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is a very violent supposition. had an officer in my office the other day who is on the retired list. He is in employment in New York, holding a position. He would be very glad to get back into the service. He was back in the service during the war and now he is put back on the retired list and some man to fill his place is drawn from the reserve list and put into the active service with full pay, whereas the Government could secure the services of that retired officer and hundreds of others by simply paying the difference between the retired pay and full pay.

Mr. SWANSON. If the Senator will permit me, no retired officer when on active service, unless there has been a change in the law during the last year, can get higher pay than that of a lieutenant commander. I think that is the present law. Any man on the reserve list who comes in can get no higher pay than a lieutenant commander. The retired officer and the reserve officer are in exactly the same position in that respect, If a man is ordered into active duty from the reserve list, and comes back to duty, his pay is limited to the full pay of a lieutenant commander.

Now, retired officers formerly only got pay up to the pay of a first lieutenant. There was an amendment passed in one of the appropriation acts allowing to Army officers to draw pay as high as a major if a retired Army officer was put on active duty. The retired officers are anxious to be retired, and we go on the theory that they were anxious to be retired, and we said we take for granted they were retired because they could not do full duty. If they could do fully duty they would not be retired, and hence when they are called back into active service we do not give them any higher pay than a lieutenant com-

I have an idea the retired officer talking to the Senator was anxious to get the law changed so he could be called to active duty and get the full pay at which he was perhaps retired.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is mistaken. He did not ask for any change in the law at all; he did not even broach the subject.

What he said was that it was the policy of the Navy Department to call out reserve officers because they could be sent to sea and certain regular naval officers could be allowed to stay on the land, whereas if they brought out retired officers and put them on the list, they would have to stay upon the land, and the other regular officers would have to go to sea. For that reason the policy of the Navy Department was against the use of retired naval officers and at higher expense was using the reserve officers

Mr. SWANSON. It could not be at any higher expense, because the pay is the same. If an officer who is a senior lieutenant on the retired list goes into the active service he receives the pay of a senior lieutenant because his rank is below that of lieutenant commander. If a senior lieutenant is called from the reserve he also gets the pay of a senior lieutenant, The reserve force is generally a younger and more active body of men than are the retired officers. The law in connection with the retired officers is that they can not be paid when on active duty at a rate higher than the pay of a lieutenant commander. Congress refused to make their pay higher even during the recent war. If an admiral was called into active service he received the pay of a lieutenant commander because being retired he could not do full duty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator what is the pay of a lieutenant commander upon the retired list?

Mr. SWANSON. It would be three-fourths of his active-duty

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, if he is called into active service, in addition to the retired pay which he already receives, he would get the difference between three-fourths and fourwould get the difference between three-fourths and four-fourths. On the other hand, if a lieutenant commander be taken from the Reserve Corps he has to be paid the full salary of that grade.

Mr. SWANSON. He gets the full pay.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. He gets four-fourths; the Government is paying him four-fourths, whereas in the case of the lieutenant commander on the retired list he is only getting his retired pay and one-fourth additional; that is exactly what I mean.

The Navy is expending an unnecessary amount of money for officers supplemental to the regular service, because it is using the reserve officers who can be sent to sea rather than using retired naval officers who are fit probably only for duty on land.

Mr. SWANSON. That is true, and that ought to be so. An officer of the rank of lieutenant commander is generally placed in command of a destroyer. An officer who is retired on account of ill health or because of some physical disability can not perform sea service; it would be foolish to send him to sea to take command of a destroyer. The only duty he can perform is shore duty; and there are already too many officers on shore duty. I should like to see the officers of the Navy at sea; that is what a Navy is for-to keep to the sea. Of course, Navy officers who are retired would like to be put upon active duty, but so far as the pay is concerned, there is no difference whether an officer from the reserves or an officer on the retired list is called to active duty, except as the Senator has indicated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee. The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 46, line 18, to strike out "$17,533,891.97" and to insert "$19,603,591.14," so as to read:

In all, pay, Marine Corps, $19,603,591.14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 51, at the end of line 5, to strike out "$9,348,950" and to insert "$14,381,002; and the money herein specifically appropriated for the maintenance of the Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with the existing law as maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund," so as to make the clause read:

In all, for the maintenance of Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, $14,381,002; and the money herein specifically appropriated for the maintenance of the Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, shall be disbursed and accounted for in accordance with the existing law as maintenance, Quartermaster's Department, Marine Corps, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 51, line 13, to strike out "$26,882,841.90" and to insert "$33,984,593.14," so as to make the clause read:

Total, Marine Corps, exclusive of public works, $33,984,593.14.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, on page 58, after line 5, to insert a new section, as follows:

The next amendment passed over was, on page 58, after line 5, to insert a new section, as follows:

Sec. 16. That there is hereby created and established in the Department of the Navy a bureau of aeronautics, which shall be charged with matters pertaining to naval aeronautics as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, and all of the duties of said bureau shall be performed under the authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and its orders shall be considered as emanating from him, and shall have full force and effect as such.

There shall be a chief of the bureau of aeronautics, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among the officers of the active list of the Navy or Marine Corps, for a period of four years, and who shall, while holding such position, have the corresponding rank and receive the same pay and allowances as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by or in pursuance of law for chiefs of bureaus of the Department of the Navy.

An officer of the active list of the Navy, or Marine Corps, may be detailed as assistant chief of the bureau of aeronautics, and such officer shall receive the highest pay of his grade, and in case of the death, resignation, absence, or sickness of the chief of the bureau shall, until otherwise directed by the President, as provided by section 179 of the Revised Statutes, perform the duties of such chief until his successor is appointed or such absence or sickness shall cease.

There shall be a chief clerk at a salary of $2,250 per annum.

The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to transfer to the bureau of aeronautics such number of the civilian, technical, clerical, and messenger personnel, together with such records, equipment, and facilities now assigned for aeronautic work under the various bureaus of the Department of the Navy or Marine Corps used in connection with aeronauties, including the appropriation, "Aviation, Navy," is hereby made available for the use of the bureau of aeronautics.

The number of officers and en

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I think the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] has an amendment which he wishes to offer to that section.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask whether the committee amendment to insert section 2, on page 53, after line 14, was agreed to?

If so, I did not know that it had been.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to, as I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to the reconsideration of the vote whereby that section was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the vote whereby the amendment was agreed to will be reconsidered.

Mr. LENROOT. I offer an amendment to the amendment. The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary. In section 2, page 53, line 16, after the word "gratuity," it is proposed to strike out the words or any proportionate part thereof, in excess of an amount equal to one month's pay for each year of service in the last expiring enlistment of such enlisted man," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That hereafter no enlisted man in the Navy shall be paid a reenlistment gratuity.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if the amendment to the amendment is adopted it will eliminate all reenlistment gratuities. That is being proposed in the case of the Army under the Army appropriation bill now upon the calendar of the Senate, and I see no reason why it should not be done in the Navv. In the case of the Army it will save $3,000,000 a year and in the case of the Navy it would save at least one month's pay in every case of reenlistment and might save four months' pay, depending upon the length of service under the previous enlistment of the enlisted man who is discharged.

These gratuities, Mr. President, were offered at a time when it was very difficult to secure men to enlist in the Army and Navy. I doubt very much whether under present conditions the gratuity is a determining factor in any single case of re-enlistment; and if that be so, there is no reason why the Government should not save a very considerable amount of money by the adoption of the amendment which I have proposed to the committee amendment. The saving will certainly be over a million dollars and how much more I do not know.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the committee amendment which the Senator from Wisconsin seeks to amend proposes a reduction in the gratuities allowed for reenlistment. The total saving under the committee amendment will probably be approximately $2,000,000. The gratuity pay under existing law is a month's pay for each year of the new enlistment, which under the practice adopted by the Navy under the authority they have to adopt such a policy would be four years, making four months' pay. Most of the expiring enlistments are of two years' duration, and the amendment reported by the committee would base the gratuity upon the expiring enlistment; that is, upon the number of years that the man has served instead of upon those in the new period of enlistment.

The Senator from Wisconsin, as I understand, in his amendment proposes to repeal the law providing for any gratuity for reenlistment. That brings up the question of whether or not encouragement should be given in this way to men to reenlist. The great trouble with our Navy at the present time is the absence of experienced men, the excessive proportion of green men in the Navy requiring an enormous expenditure for training, and increasing the personnel of the Navy on that account, leaving a smaller number of men who are fitted to go to sea until they have been trained for at least four months at a training school. Men who are taken from a farm or from some civilian industry or from none at all, without any experience whatever in the duties of a seaman, are, in the absence of training, utterly unfitted to perform the duties which they are called upon to perform. My own opinion is that a gratuity for reenlistment so as to encourage in every way possible within reasonable limits of expense the experienced men to remain in the Navy is a wise policy, and in the long run will result in great economy. So I trust that the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment reported by the committee will be defeated.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, the Senator assumes that a payment of $30 or $60, as the case may be, will be a determining factor with an enlisted man who has been discharged in reenlisting in the service. I do not believe, and I doubt whether the Senator from Washington believes, that such a payment has any influence. If a man desires to reenlist, his action is not going to be determined either for or against by the fact that he will get a gratuity.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On the contrary, Mr. President, it does have a very great influence with men, not merely because of the amount of money involved but because of the fact that it is a recognition of his services, a prize, as it were, for assuming another term of enlistment in the Navy. Whether it is in harmony with what we might reason out, a priori, as to the effect upon the men, experience shows that it does have the effect of influencing reenlistments.

Mr. LENROOT. What experience have we had that shows

Mr. POINDEXTER. We have had the experience of the Navy.

Mr. LENROOT. What has there been to determine that fact? When a man reenlists in the Navy, there is no way of determining whether he reenlists because he wants to remain in the service or whether he wants the $60. I do not believe that the Naval Committee has testimony to the effect that any man who reenlisted in the Navy for an additional four years did so because he wanted to get $60 in money. That may be so, but I do not believe any such thing has occurred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment reported by the committee.

Mr. KING. I ask that the amendment to the amendment be stated. Some of us having been in attendance upon a committee have just come into the Chamber, and have not been able to learn what the amendment to the amendment is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again state the amendment to the amendment.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 53, in the committee amendment, it is proposed to strike out the words "or any proportionate part thereof, in excess of an amount equal to one month's pay for each year of service in the last expiring enlistment of such enlisted man."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" it, and the amendment to the amendment is adopted. have

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I do not think the question was understood.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I myself misunderstood the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken again, or that the vote by which the amendment to the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered, for the reason that I am sure the Senate did not understand that it was voting on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that a number of Senators understood they were voting upon the committee amendment. I myself thought so.

The VICE PRESIDENT: Without objection, the Chair will again put the question. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment reported by the committee was agreed to.
The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment known as section 16, adding a new section to the bill.

Mr. KING. Let it be stated.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been stated once. Does the Senator from Utah desire to have it stated again?

Mr. KING. As I was saying, some of the Senators have just come into the Chamber, having been detained on account of attending a committee meeting, and I am not sure what the amendment is:

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was read several days ago.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have some amendments to that section. I offered them for printing a few days ago, and they were printed, and are now lying upon the desks of Senators. I have found it advisable, in order to carry out the idea I have in mind, to have them reprinted; and considering the lateness of the hour, I ask that this section may go over until to-morrow. I send to the Clerk's desk the amendments, with the corrections in them which I ask to have made, and request that they be reprinted and laid upon the desks of Senators.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question in regard to the amendments?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Certainly. Mr. POINDEXTER. I noticed that one of the amendments related to the chief of the bureau, requiring him to be a flyer, and provided a certain limitation of time within which that requirement should go into effect. I suggest to the Senator that he make that limitation more than one year, the period that was fixed in the copy of the amendment that was submitted to me. Of course, it would scarcely be reasonable to expect officers who are now in command of the bureau to fit themselves to comply with that requirement within that time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have made the corrections in the various amendments in accordance with the best advice I could get upon the subject from the experts with whom I have consulted; and if the amendment as I shall have it reprinted does not meet the approval of the acting chairman of in retaining it, it can then be considered.

the Committee on Naval Affairs when the matter comes up tomorrow, he can suggest such amendment to it as in his judgment should be made:

In addition, Mr. President, while I am on my feet, I ask leave to offer an amendment as an addition to the bill-not an amendment necessarily of any of the provisions of the bill, but as an additional section of the bill-which I should like to have printed and put upon the desks of Senators.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin that section 16 be allowed to go over until to-morrow.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There are one or two amendments to which I should like to call attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is one other amendment passed over which has not been acted upon. The Secretary will state it.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 27, in the total for public works, there is an amendment which was passed over at the instance of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borah], where in line 19 it is proposed to strike out "$5,632,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$12,971,000."

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, that is a matter of totaling the items for public works. The item for a naval supply base at Alameda, Calif., has been rejected by the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that the item of $12,-971,000 be amended to read "$11,471,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary. It is proposed to strike out "$12,-971,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$11,471,000."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to:

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington with reference to section 15, which was adopted on a day when I was absent from the Senate, with some statement that the Senator would be willing to reopen it upon my return? I should like to ask the Senator from Washington whether he would have any objection to striking out of that section all on page 58 following the word "Navy," in line 1?

will state the situation as it is presented to me.

This section is intended to permit the removal to the United States courts of actions where a subcontractor and a principal contractor with the United States are in litigation, and the United States, through the Secretary of the Navy, desires the opportunity for the United States to defend those actions as the real party in interest. For that reason removal is sought to the United States courts wherever the Secretary of the Navy may so request, which I think is very proper. The section, however, goes on and provides that-

The procedure therein and the defense thereof shall be subject to the rules of court and the law applicable to the defense of suits against the United States.

And it is said that where there is an action between two private parties this will permit the raising of certain presumptions against the plaintiff in such an action that would not exist in a suit between himself and the principal contractor.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not assume that this section is intended to have or would have the effect of relieving the principal contractor of any liability.

Mr. LENROOT. No; it could not do that.
Mr. POINDEXTER. It could not do that, and consequently it could not have the effect which the Senator from Wisconsin suggests, so far as I can see. The same liability, both as to procedure and as to the merits of the case, would

Mr. LENROOT. Not as between the parties. It would, of course, as between the principal contractor and the Government; but it might relieve the principal contractor from certain presumptions against him that would not exist except for this language. I will say that I think it is very preper to provide for the removal of such cases to the United States courts, and for the United States to have an opportunity to be represented therein to defend its rights,

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do not see that the language which the Senator from Wisconsin moves to strike out has any effect. My judgment is that, regardless of this provision, if the United States is a party, as this section provides it shall be, then, as a matter of course, the procedure and the defense will be subject to the rules of court and to the law applicable to the defense of suits against the United States. I do not see that anything is gained by having this language here, nor that anything would be lost by striking it out; so I have no objection to the Senator's motion.

Mr. LENROOT. May I ask that it be stricken out now?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well.

Mr. LENROOT. I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment was adopted.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Wisconsin what different rule he conceives to exist in making a defense or asserting a claim where the United States is a party and where a private individual is a party?

Mr. LENROOT. If there is no different rule, of course, it will do no harm; but the parties who wrote me state that no presumption is ever raised against the United States, while a presumption is raised in actions between private parties under certain conditions. In other words, estoppel would not run against the United States, but estoppel would run as between private parties.

Mr. KING. Let me ask whether this section has any application to cases in which the Government of the United States is a

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no; it is between private individuals; but where on a cost-plus contract, for instance, in the absence of fraud, the Government will have to pay the entire cost and the Government is interested and properly interested in seeing to it that a principal contractor does not pay a subcontractor more than he ought to be paid.

Mr. KING. The Senator's position is that if his amendment were to prevail it would not create any liability against the

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. Or deprive the Government of any advantage that now exists in any case in which it is interested?

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, not at all.

I ask unanimous consent for the reconsideration of the vote whereby section 15 was inserted in the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote whereby section 15 was inserted in the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, I move to strike out, on page 58, all of line 1 after the word "Navy," and lines 2, 3, 4, and 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 58, in the committee amendment, line 1, after the word "Navy," it is proposed to strike out the comma and the rest of the section down to the period.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I do not know that that motion ought to prevail. If the suit is transferred, and the Government of the United States discloses its interest in the suit and really becomes the actual defendant, although not the nominal defendant, the suit then becomes a suit against the United States and not against a private party.

Experience has shown that a judgment will go against the Government very much more readily than it will go ordinarily against a private litigant, and accordingly the Government of the United States, in permitting itself to be sued, has always fixed certain rules that are not available in an action against a private litigant. For instance, a suit may be brought in the United States district court upon a contract against the United States for a sum not exceeding $10,000. Pending legislation contemplates increasing that to $50,000. But in an action of that character the complainant can not have a trial by jury, and there are other limitations in that kind of action.

Now, we propose by this to transmute a purely private lawsuit between private litigants into a lawsuit against the Government of the United States, and that lawsuit against the Government of the United States in which it thus consents to be sued will be brought upon different lines and in a different method from those involved in a suit that is commenced against the United States, whereas it seems to me that exactly the same reason should obtain for safeguarding suits of this character as there is for safeguarding suits brought directly against the Government of the United States, and I have no doubt that it was with that thought in mind that this protection was granted.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, under the present law the suit could not be removed to the United States court at all, unless it came within the rule making it removable as between private parties. As the law now provides, it will permit the removal to the United States court in any such case. Is not that a matter of inconvenience for a plaintiff who has no relationship whatever to the Government, and, so far as he is concerned, is indifferent to the Government's relations with the contractor?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Yes; but the subcontractor contracted, of course, with the knowledge that the principal contractor had his contract with the Government of the United States. He knew he was doing Government work, an 1 he ought not to be permitted to have any advantage in holding the Government of the United States responsible.

Mr. LENROOT. He is not trying to hold the Government.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand he is not, but this assumes that such relations exi-t between the Government of the United States, on the one hand, and the principal contractor, upon the other, as that the Government of the United States becomes actually bound by the judgment, and responsible over to the principal contractor, and thus the suit really becomes one which determines liability upon the part of the Government of the United States, and if it is transferred and actually assumes that attitude and the jury understands it, you will have the ordinary lawsuit, as the jury perfectly understands it, against the Government of the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think the Government would be better off if this removal were not permitted at all?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No.
Mr. LENROOT. Because then the Government would in no sense be a party to the action.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. No; I think the Government would be better off with the thing just as it stands.

Mr. LENROOT. I have no desire whatever to give anyone any advantage over the Government; of course not.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I might say to the Senator that I am myself disposed to extend the right of litigants in these actions in which the Government of the United States is held. am heartily in favor of extending the jurisdiction to $50,000, so as to give litigants an opportunity to sue the United States in the neighborhood of their homes, at least, without coming to Washington to sue before the Court of Claims. But our experience, running over many years, has cautioned us about allowing the Government of the United States to be sued under just exactly the same condition, and by exactly the same procedure, as suits proceed against private litigants, and that is the situation which presents itself here. It seems to me that when it becomes in truth and in effect a suit against the Government of the United States it ought to be tried in exactly the same way as suits brought directly against the Government of the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I can not quite follow the Senator's argument. If a principal contractor makes a contract with a subcontractor, and the subcontractor does not look to the Government in any way, he is indifferent as to what the Government's relations to the principal contractor are: he is satisfied with the financial responsibility of his principal contractor. Why the subcontractor in that case should, in addition to having his case removed to a Federal court, be subject to a different rule of evidence and to a shifting of the burden of proof, does not seem clear.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It does not seem fair, unless it be understood in the first place that the principal contractor had his contract with the Government of the United States, a piece of Government work.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator from Washington suggests that the whole matter go to conference, and I am willing not to press the amendment, with the assurance of the Senator that it will be given full consideration in conference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment is withdrawn. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. On behalf of the committee I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 53, line 14, after the word "otherwise," insert a comma and the following:

Provided, That all orders or contracts for work or material under authorization of law heretofore or hereafter placed with Government-owned establishments shall be considered as obligations in the same manner as provided for similar orders placed with private contractors, and appropriations for such work or material shall remain available for payment therefor as in the case of contracts or orders with private contractors.

Mr. KING. I would like to have some explanation from the Senator before we act upon that amendment. I am not sure whether I understand its full implications.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The purpose of it is to enable Government navy yards, such as the navy yard here in Washington City, to bid upon contracts for the Navy on the same terms as private establishments. A number of cases were called to the attention of members of the committee where important work could not be bid for by a navy yard because of the fact that the appropriations, in case of contracts with the navy yards, expired at the end of the fiscal year, whereas in the case of private contractors the appropriations remained in effect until they were expended. It is for the purpose of giving employment to the navy yards and to put them upon the same basis as private contractors that we offer this amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I have not heard this amendment before, and I would like to inquire of the Senator whether it permits the application of funds which may not have been expended in one year to the expenditures for the Navy Department in the succeeding year? Does it perpetuate an appropriation which may not have been exhausted for a given navy yard to be expended in the succeeding year?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It does not affect the appropriations made for the maintenance of navy yards or for improvements in navy yards. It relates to a case, for instance, where a navy yard bids on a ship. The appropriation would be available for the contracts made during the year for which the appropriations were made, after the expiration of the year, just the same as they are in the case of a private contractor.

Mr. KING. Suppose a navy yard does bid, is successful in the competitive bidding, and the contract is awarded to it. What provision is made for the overhead expenses which are incident to keeping that yard in operation beyond a period when, under the general appropriation, it would have nothing

Mr. POINDEXTER. The appropriation could not be used for the overhead expenses, and the question of overhead expenses would not in any way whatever be affected by this amendment. My information is that in all bids made by navy yards overhead expenses are figured. But that question is not affected by this. This is simply to enable a navy yard to bid on a contract which will not be finished within one year. If the completion of the work goes over beyond the end of the fiscal year, under existing law the navy yard could not bid on it, because the appropriation would expire and there would be nothing with which to pay for the work. That is not the case with a private contractor; and the purpose of the amendment is to enable the navy yards, which are already maintained, for which the overhead expenses are already incurred, to bid upon certain classes of work.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am not sure whether I under stand the full meaning of that amendment and how far it would operate. I ask the Senator, in order that we may have an opportunity to examine it, to let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to the amendment going over until to-morrow.

Mr. KING. I would be glad to have any explanation the Senator desires to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be passed over temporarily.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I want to call attention to one or two other changes. On page 20, beginning in line 19, there is a provision as follows:

That no part of the appropriations heretofore, herein, or hereafter made for "Increase of the Navy" under the Bureau of Ordnance and no part of allotments of appropriations heretofore or hereafter made to said bureau shall be available for the payment for services or materials used in the construction of any shop, building, living quarters, or other transfer of the services of th structures, etc.

It is called to our attention that in some Government establishments, for instance, in the armor-plate plant at Charleston, heretofore contracts have been made and work has been carried on to a considerable extent upon buildings, and that if this provision is allowed to stand just as it is it would leave those projects uncompleted and the expenditure already made would become a total loss. So I move, in line 19, page 20, that the word "heretofore" be stricken out, and that in lines 21 and 22 the words "heretofore or" be stricken out, so as to make the provision apply to contracts made under the appropriations contained in this bill or hereafter, and not relate to contracts which are already in process of completion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Assistant Secretary. On page 20, line 19, after the word "appropriations," to strike out the word "heretofore," and at the end of line 21, after the word "appropriations," strike out the words "heretofore or," so as to read:

That no part of the appropriations herein or hereafter made for "Increase of the Navy" under the Bureau of Ordnance and no part of allotments of appropriations hereafter made to said bureau, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. Borahl] interposed a point of order to the amendment proposed by the committee on page 37, lines 17 to 21.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator from Washington spoke to me about that. If the consideration of the bill is to go over until to-morrow, would not the Senator be willing to permit that amendment to go over? I will say to the Senator, however, that my present purpose, unless I am otherwise advised, is to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I shall be very glad to allow it to go over until morning.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-merrow at noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, May 25, 1921, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 24, 1921.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord, consider and hear us. Thou hast dropped the mantle of darkness and lighted the lamp of another day. new page in the book of life has been turned, and we trust that our faith and our hope are still with us. As we resign our needs at Thy altar, may we depart with the sacred flame of gratitude in our breasts. Give us the blessing of the loyal heart that includes the stressed and the distressed and succors the sick. Bless our work and prosper our country and we shall be satisfied. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

SECOND DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6300, the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 6300, with Mr. Campbell of Kansas in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill, and read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT.

Bureau of Yards and Docks: The limitation specified in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 on expenditures for the pay of skilled draftsmen and other technical services in the Bureau of Yards and Docks from appropriations and allotments under said bureau is increased from $200,000 to $202,838.65.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to make an observation. Of course, in respect to the various items that are contained in this deficiency appropriation bill we all assume and we know that the Committee on Appropriations has given due consideration to them, but with respect to the items having reference to the Navy I am wondering just how much the Committee on Appropriations has consulted with the Committee on Naval Affairs. Of course, it may be outside the province of our Naval Committee to even make any suggestion about any of these items, but it does seem to me that the Naval Affairs Committee of this House, charged with the duty of endeavoring to ascertain the needs and requirements of the Navy, should have some voice or should be called upon to make some suggestions in regard to appropriations which directly affect the Navy of the United States.

I personally feel, and I know other members of our Naval Affairs Committee feel, that when the Committee on Appropriations considers items pertaining to the Navy there should be some representative from the Naval Affairs Committee there acting in an advisory capacity with the Committee on Appropriations. We have all of the facts and all of the matters pertaining to the Navy at our disposal, and I think in the interest of economy there should be some consultation between the two committees. I am going to ask the chairman of the committee whether or not there has been any suggestion made by any member of the Naval Affairs Committee in regard to these naval items?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that any member of the Committee on Naval Affairs was consulted with regard to these deficiencies. Heretofore, as a general rule, I have always consulted with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Butler] and sometimes with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Padgett] with regard to deficiencies. This year, as the gentleman from New York knows, we have the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley] on the Committee on Appropriations. He is entirely familiar with the facts in respect to these items, and he was consulted in regard to them.

Mr. HICKS Does not the gentleman think it perhaps might be a little more in the interest of economy and smoothness of legislative procedure if some member of the Committee on Naval Affairs were taken into consultation?

Mr. GOOD. I think so. I have always done that. In these matters this year there were deficiencies that were crowding and it was necessary to get the money for some of them as soon as possible. We had to consider estimates aggregating $220,-000,000. The hearings cover five or six hundred printed pages. So far as the items respecting the Navy are concerned, I think the gentleman can see that on their face there was a real deficiency. The first item merely increases a limitation by $2,838.

Mr. HICKS. I am not criticizing the items themselves nor my good friend from Iowa, but I am only suggesting it as a possible method of procedure in the future.

Mr. GOOD. It has been the policy of the Committee on Appropriations to seek light and information wherever possible, and I have always heretofore consulted, so far as I could, with at least the chairman and often the ranking minority member of the various former appropriating committees where we considered items having to do with the activities of those various committees.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HICKS. Yes. Mr. GARNER. What has become of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OLIVER]? Do they not know anything about the Navy?

Mr. HICKS. Oh, absolutely. There are probably no two men in the House who know more about the Navy than they.

Mr. GARNER. Are they not on the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Are they functioning?
Mr. HICKS. Yes; and doing their work well; but are there not 21 other Members of Congress on the Naval Affairs Committee, and do not they know something about the Navy also?

Mr. GARNER. Yes; but if the Committee on Appropriations is going to send for the 21 members of the Naval Affairs Committee, then I think we better go back to the old rule.

Mr. HICKS. There might be something in that.

Mr. GARNER. And, as I understand the gentleman from New York, he wants the Committee on Appropriations to send for the 21 members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the 21 members of the Committee on Agriculture, for the 21 members of the Committee on Military Affairs, for the 21 members of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and all the other Members of the House who are on former appropriating committees to appear before the Committee on Appropriations on the various items pertaining to the various committees. Mr. HICKS. Oh, pardon me, but the gentleman from Texas is putting into the mouth of the gentleman from New York something that the gentleman from New York did not state and does not favor. The gentleman from New York stated that he thought there ought to be a representative with the Committee on Appropriations from the Naval Affairs Committee, but not the entire committee; that would be impractical and cumbersome. But a representative could be present, so that there might be some consultation between the Committee on Naval Affairs and the Committee on Appropriations-not the entire membership of the Naval Committee, for that would be ridiculous, as the gentleman knows.

Mr. GARNER. I just asked the gentleman if he did not think there was some representation from the Committee on Naval Affairs in the presence of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Oliver]

Mr. HICKS. No; they do not represent the Naval Affairs Committee, they are not members of our committee, and do not and can not keep in as close touch with naval matters probably as the members of the Naval Committee.

Mr. GARNER. But the gentleman from New York said that they knew all about the Navy.

Mr. HICKS. But they do not know as much about the Navy as 21 men know, nor are 2 men as able to judge of matters as 21.

Mr. LITTLE, Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HICKS. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. Does the gentleman favor the present method of making appropriations?

Mr. HICKS. No. I think we can devise our rules to better conserve the public good and promote economy and efficiency. [Applause.]

Mr. LITTLE. Then the gentleman has a right to kick. I suppose.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For commissions and interest, transportation of funds, exchange, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $750,000.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS: Page 33, line 9, insert as a new Amendment offered by Mr. SEARS: Fage 35, line 9, linsert as a new paragraph the following:

"The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to pay to Mrs. T. E. S. Cates, out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $63 for rent of quarters furnished Lieuts. James E. Maher and L. E. Myers, of the United States Navy, while on submarine duty."

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Chairman, last year I offered this amendment, but the gentleman from Illinois made a point of order against it. At that time, if my recollection is correct, the chairman of the committee agreed to let this amendment go in. Mrs. Cates furnished these quarters at the request of the admiral at Key West who was in charge because there were no quarters available. This was in 1918. Both Secretary Daniels and Secretary Denby have recently urged that this appropria-tion be made. I have a letter before me, dated May the 18th, in which Secretary Denby says:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 18, 1921.

Hon. W. J. SEARS, House of Representatives.

My Dear Mr. Sears: In reply to your letter of this date relative to the bill (H. R. 1939) for the relief of Mrs. T. E. S. Cates, introduced by you on April 11, to reimburse Mrs. Cates for the rental of quarters furnished Lieuts. Maher and Myers while on submarine duty at Key West, Fla., I beg to say that I shall be very glad indeed to see this bill passed, or an amendment which will accomplish the same purpose added to the deficiency bill now pending. The claim is a perfectly just one, but there is no appropriation now available from which it could be paid by the department. The quarters were hired from Mrs. Cates by the supply officer at Key West under direction of the commandant of the naval station at that place, there being no other quarters available for the lieutenants in question who occupied them.

Sincerely, yours,

EDWIN DENBY.

Secretary Daniels writes as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, December 7, 1920.

Hon. W. J. SEARS, M. C., House of Representatives, United States

My Dear Mr. Sears: Referring to your letter of October 7, 1920, relative to a bill of Mrs. T. E. S. Cates, Key West, Fla., for rent of quarters furnished to Lieuts. James E. Maher and L. E. Myers while on submarine duty at Key West, Fla., this is believed to be perfectly justified, but there has been no appropriation passed by Congress from which the reimbursement could be made, provisions made in previous appropriation acts for reimbursement of this sort having been held by the comptroller to refer only to future payments.

The matter will, however, be presented to Congress again at the present session in connection with the regular deficiency bill.

Sincerely, yours.

Sincerely, yours,

JOSEPHUS DANIELS, Secretary of the Navy.

These two officers were at Mrs. Cates's residence, one from May 4 to June 4, 1918, and one from April 12 to May 20, 1918, or a little more than two months, so I do not believe that Members of Congress will contend that the charge of $63 for rent of quarters for two months is exorbitant, and I expect and trust that the chairman of this committee will not make the point of

Mr. Chairman, I think the claim is a legitimate Mr. GOOD. The only reason I reserved the point of order is that I claim. desired the gentleman should explain it. I think the amount of rent for premises occupied by the department for a couple of months is fair, and I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

PUBLIC WORKS, BUREAU OF YARDS AND DOCKS,

Navy yard, Norfolk, Va.: For dry dock and accessories: To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the George Leary Construction Co. the sum of $167,500 under contract No. 2258, and changes thereto, for completion of Dry Dock No. 4, in full compensation for the construction of such dry dock; and to the Giant Portland Cement Co., subcontractor, for loss sustained by it on cement furnished for this work, $75,517.94, or so much thereof as may be shown by audit of the subcontractor's books by the Navy Department; in all, $243,017.94.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against this paragraph that it is legislation unauthorized by law on a deficiency appropriation bill and is not a deficiency.

Mr. GOOD. I trust the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I will reserve the point of order.
Mr. GOOD. The point of order I do not think is good as to the entire paragraph. I think a part of it is authorized. situation in regard to this dry dock is just this: In 1916 the Government authorized the construction of two dry docks, one at Philadelphia and one at Norfolk. Contracts were made for their construction. At that time we had no dry dock on the eastern coast large enough in which we could dock a vessel of the type of the Leviathan. The contract at Philadelphia has the type of the Leviatnan. The contract at Philadelphia has proceeded on the cost-plus plan and we have already appropriated for that dry dock $5,900,000 and it is not yet completed. The George Leary Construction Co. had the contract for the construction of the dry dock at Norfolk for $3,500,000. The war came on. The Secretary of the Navy said to the Leary Construction Co. in a letter that if they would waive all claim as to the profits they might make under the contract and would make a new contract with the Navy Department, the profits to be determined by the time within which the dry dock should be be determined by the time within which the dry dock should be completed, the Navy Department would make a new contract, and this was done. The Leary Construction Co. put on three shifts, they were compelled to work night and day, and they That completed the dry dock before the armistice was signed. dry dock has been completed and the contractor has a legal contract with the Government for the payment of this amount. Now, they asked for a larger sum and the Navy Department wanted to give them a larger sum; both Secretary Daniels and Secretary Denby asked for it. When the second contract was made it was represented to the contractor that he ought to make under the new contract at least $300,000, and so when the dry dock was completed they attempted to modify that contract so as to increase this profit by $132,500. Now, the contractors went to work under the terms of the contract made by the Navy Now, the contractors Department and they completed the dry dock within a certain specified time, and under that arrangement the contractor is entitled to $167,500. He did a good job; we got a dry dock at least three years earlier than we are getting the one over at I gentlemen yet, because it was stopped here in the House.

Philadelphia, which was commenced at the same time and the contract made at the same time.

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman claim that an item becomes a deficiency until a Government auditor audits it and passes it for payment?

Mr. GOOD. That is the other item, and I say the other item will appeal to the gentleman's good judgment

Mr. BLANTON. Just one moment. It is the purpose of this paragraph to pay $75,517.94 to the Giant Portland Cement Co. for an alleged loss that it is claimed to have sustained?

Mr. GOOD. I will tell the gentleman just what that was, Mr. BLANTON. There has been no adjudication of that loss whatever.

Mr. GOOD. I want to explain that to the gentleman. think it will appeal to his good judgment, as it did to the good judgment of the committee. When the contract was made in 1916 with the Leary Construction Co. for this dry dock it immediately let the subcontract for all the cement to the Giant Portland Cement Co. The Giant Portland Cement Co. had two plants, one at Norfolk, Va., near where this dry dock was being constructed, and one at Erie, Pa. It agreed to furnish the cement at a certain price, and there is no question but what it was able to furnish that cement at that price if the Government had not intervened. The Giant Portland Cement Co. had under charter a large amount of floating equipment with which it was to bring its rock, material, and coal to its cement plant down at Norfolk with which to manufacture cement and to deliver its product. The Government stepped in and commandeered every bit of its floating equipment, so that it had to shut down the plant at Norfolk, where it was manufacturing this cement, and had to bring all of the cement from Erie, Pa. The loss was occasioned not because of the contractor but because the Government stepped in and took the floating equipment that the Giant Cement Co. had a contract to use for a period far longer than the length of the war. So it seemed to us, if it please the gentleman, while we had already taken care of all contractors who suffered loss because of the war, that here was a loss due entirely to the fact that the Government had taken over the equipment, and should be paid. In one other bill we did that, one almost on all fours with this. We were building a dry dock at Honolulu and the contractor had contracted with the Pacific Mail Steamship Co. to deliver Portland cement from San Francisco to Honolulu at a certain price.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa

has expired.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GOOD. Then the Government stepped in and commandeered the ships of the Pacific Steamship Co. and increased the rates for carrying this cement over those which the steamship company had agreed to carry it for, and the result was a loss of something like $125,000. And Congress has appropriated money to pay that loss.

These men are unknown to us. It seemed to us that it was in the interest of fairness, equity, and justice to allow this claim.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman had an unliquidated claim of $75,000 presented against him personally by some one, he would want a little more of an adjudication of the matter by a proper tribunal than has been given in this case. I take it that if this is a proper claim it ought to be presented in the usual way and come through the regular channels.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that the contracts made for lumber-

Mr. BLANTON. Has the gentleman heard the Government's side of this claim?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Who appeared in behalf of the Government? Mr. GOOD. Former Secretary Roosevelt appeared in behalf of the Government, and Admiral Parks appeared in behalf of the Government. Then, when Secretary Denby came in, he wrote a very strong letter to the committee and said he had thoroughly investigated it and it ought to be paid.

I will say to the gentleman that every one of the lumber contractors have already had their losses made good, and we ought not to make fish of one and fowl of the other.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that there are lots of claims pending now, mining claims and otherwise, and some of them are down in my country, which I have turned down whenever they have come, because a lot of them are fictitious. gentleman knows we have never passed a law to reimburse those

Mr. GOOD. We passed a law, as the gentleman knows, and appropriated money to make good the loss of contractors who entered into contracts prior to the declaration of war, and who lost because of war conditions. We paid all those.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman had lots of those claims placed on bills by amendment in the closing days of the last Congress that caused him to throw up his hands and caused the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] to say that the Treasury doors had been broken down.

That was a different class of cases.

Mr. BLANTON. But they were claims against the Government.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman that this is a meritorious claim.

Mr. BLANTON. I think this class of claims ought to come to

The CHAIRMAN. On that item?

Mr. BLANTON. On the paragraph, because of the fact that it has in it, Mr. Chairman, $75,517.94 to be paid a subcontractor for certain alleged losses, which is legislation-not a deficiency unadjudicated legislation on an appropriation bill, not authorized by law. I make it against the paragraph because of that item especially.

The CHAIRMAN. And the gentleman does not contend that the other part of the item is subject to a point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. I have not lodged that objection yet, Mr. Chairman, but I make it against the whole paragraph because of that provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa [Mr.

Good] concede the point of order?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; against that part of it. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Good: Page 33, line 18, insert the follow-

Amendment onered by Amendment onered by Amendment onered by Sing:

"Navy yard, Norfolk, Va.: For dry dock and accessories: To enable the Secretary of the Navy to pay the George Leary Construction Co. under the contract No. 2258, and changes thereto, for completion of Dry Dock No. 4, in full compensation for the construction of such dry dock, $167,500."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not a deficiency but is legislation unauthorized by law on a deficiency appropriation bill, and in that connection I will call the attention of the chairman to the fact that I understand this amount has not been audited by a Government auditor and passed for payment, such as would authorize its inclusion in a deficiency appropriation bill,
The CHAIRMAN. On what ground does the gentleman make his point of order-that it is an unaudited claim or that it is unauthorized by law?

Mr. BLANTON. On both grounds.

Mr. GOOD. It does not have to be an audited claim. It is a balance due on a contract. Here is the contract. I have made a statement of what the contract contains. Under that contract there is a balance due of this amount, and it is a valid claim against the Government.

Mr. BUTLER. There is no doubt about that. This Congress authorized the construction of that dock.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is to liquidate the claim of this construction company for any claim that they may have against the Government?

Mr. GOOD. For the balance due under the contract. The work has been performed; the work has been accepted; and the department certifies that this amount is due and that they do not have the money to pay it.

Mr. BLANTON. Has it ever been audited? It does not have to be audited. Mr. GOOD.

Mr. BLANTON. That is a point in controversy.

Mr. GOOD. It does not have to be an audited claim. Mr. BUTLER.

This contract was for the construction of a dock at Norfolk?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. I have it from the Secretary of the Navy that this was already a dead loss; there was no profit in it. The Government took the cement away from these contractors, and they could not obtain any other cement with which to finish this dock.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] made the point of order that this claim had not been audited. I will state that I do not think that has any bearing on the question of the House making an appropriation-the fact that the claim has not been audited.

It is a balance due under the contract. If the money is appropriated the question of auditing will come up in due course; but that is not a condition of an appropriation, that the balance due must be audited before an appropriation can be made. We make the money available to pay the balance due, and the ques-tion of audit comes up before actual payment is made.

The CHAIRMAN. Is this in the nature of a claim? Mr. WALSH. It is not. It is a balance due.

Mr. GOOD. It is for a balance due under a written contract authorized by law, where we have appropriated all the money, over $5,000,000, except this amount.

Mr. BLANTON. Does not the gentleman admit that this is a settlement not only of this amount but also of a big amount of unliquidated loss?

Mr. GOOD. No. They made a claim for a greater amount, but we disallowed it.

The CHAIRMAN. This work was done under a contract authorized by law?

Mr. GOOD. Absolutely.
The CHAIRMAN. And this is in full payment for that work done under that contract?

Mr. GOOD. It is, and it is in accordance with the terms of the contract

The CHAIRMAN. And not in the nature of a claim against the Government?

Mr. GOOD. It is not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: The limitation specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 on expenditures for pay of chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the supply and accounting department of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the fiscal year 1921 is further increased by $400,000.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph, in order to ask a question. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] will remember that last year, when the appropriation bill proper was up before the House, we had quite a fight over the proposed increase of this item of appropriation, and that it was argued to quite an extent, and that the House by a very decided vote cut off the proposal to increase the appriation on this item. And last February my point of order against it was sustained. Now, is the chairman of the committee, after such action by the House, going to permit this department to violate the law which he so eloquently cited to us yesterday as having been violated by another official, and is he going to permit this official to come in with a deficiency right in the teeth of the House ruling?

Mr. GOOD. This does not carry any money. Mr. BLANTON. It is $400,000 that will be expended.

Mr. GOOD. No. This only increases the limit that may be expended for a certain purpose.

Mr. BLANTON. That was the subject of controversy in the House, increasing the limit to an amount even less than this $400,000. But this sum will not be expended unless we now authorize it by our action.

Mr. GOOD. They have enough money without this approit. Then we found that in order to bring down expenditures even to this limitation they had to reduce their clerical force 20 per cent and their labor force 40 per cent, but even with that reduction they were not able to bring themselves within the reduction they were not able to bring themselves within this limitation and still do the work of maintenance.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman understands that in allowing this increase of limit to the extent of $400,000 we are going right over the head of the action that the House took in refusing it when the matter was before the House heretofore.

Mr. GOOD. This matter has not been before the House heretofore.

Mr. BLANTON. This increase of limit was argued extensively at that time, and decided against by the House.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman is mistaken about that. It was not in the Bureau of Yards and Docks.

Mr. BLANTON. This is for maintenance of Supplies and Accounts and not for the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Mr. GOOD. Yes; I should have said "Supplies and Accounts"; that is what the item purports to be. Mr. BLANTON. That was the subject of discussion heretofore. One of the gentlemen from Massachusetts sought to increase the limit. Mr. GOOD. That was the Bureau of Yards and Docks that the gentleman was referring to. This is the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts. This simply increases the limit. They have enough money, and this will not cause the expenditure of any

Mr. BLANTON. Well, if they already have it, what is the use of putting this provision in? They ought to act in accordance with the wishes of Congress.

Mr. GOOD. They did. They did reduce their clerical force 20 per cent and employees 40 per cent, but it was not sufficient to bring it within this limitation, which was a rather stringent limitation. I do not think it will accomplish anything, because when they got to the 1st of March they found they had almost reached their limitation. When the committee simply undertakes to correct the mistakes and make provisions for supply funds overexpended by the former Secretary, when the committee is just trying to clean the thing up, it would seem that that side would not stir up unfavorable criticism of the former administration.

Mr. BLANTON. It just allows one more case to go over the head of Congress and authorizes them to use more money than they were authorized to use. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the ground that it is unauthorized on a deficiency bill, and that there is no authority for it.

Mr. GOOD. I do not believe that it is subject to a point of order. The Committee on Appropriations has exclusive jurisdiction of appropriations for this department, and in the exercise of that jurisdiction it placed the limitation of $750,000 in the last bill and now only would increase that limitation. The original limitation was $3,500,000 for this purpose. Can it be said that a committee that has jurisdiction over appropriations, and fixes those limitations, if it finds that Congress in following its direction originally made an error, has not the jurisdiction to report out a provision to go back and correct that mistake? The matter was originally presented to the House by a committee having exclusive jurisdiction of these matters, and in the exercise of that jurisdiction it placed a limitation upon the amount that could be expended. Can it be said now that if that limitation was too small the committee is powerless and Congress is powerless, and that because of this erroneous limitation the Government shall not continue to function?

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Iowa say about the decision rendered on February 9 on this identical question, in which decision the Chair held that the appropriation act was the current law and that the amendment offered to that current law in the deficiency bill was a change of the current law and therefore unauthorized on the deficiency bill?

Mr. GOOD. I will say that I do not believe that decision is well founded. I do not believe it is good parliamentary practice or good parliamentary law and it is in conflict with the Hicks decision. It has been decided time and again that when we bring out a regular supply bill we can place on any item the provision that it shall be immediately available. What does that mean? It means that on a supply bill that is to become effective perhaps six months or more from the time when Congress is considering it we can make a deficiency bill of it. If we can do that—and there is a long line of decisions of this House to that effect—the converse is also true, that in a deficiency bill we can not only take care of present but of future needs. Why, Mr. Chairman, almost every deficiency bill is an estimated deficiency only. The departments come in shortly after the beginning of the new fiscal year, when it is apparent that under a plan of organization which has been adopted a deficiency appropriation is going to be necessary, and they say right at the start that they want that deficiency appropriation to be made at once. They do it under a rule that is well established that in a bill for a future year you can make the appropriation immediately available. Therefore I say that in a deficiency bill we can make the appropriation available for a year beyond. It seems to me there is absolutely no sense in making any distinction between these two classes of cases, They are both bottomed on the same fundamental thing.
Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The ruling cited by the Chair is based upon the uniform rulings of Chairmen in this House back for a num-ber of years. That is the unfortunate situation in which the gentleman finds himself.

The CHAIRMAN. This raises an interesting and important question for the House, because of the enlarged jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations. Prior to the consolidation of the appropriating power of all the committees of the House in the Committee on Appropriations, that committee had exclusive jurisdiction only over certain appropriation bills. Since the appropriating power of the whole House for all the appropriations of the Government has been given to the Committee on Appropriations, another question arises. The Chair expressed some reluctance on yesterday when the question was immediately before him to reverse a long line of decisions, and resisted the very persuasive arguments made in support of the proposition that the Committee on Appropriations now having exclusive jurisdiction of all appropriations should be enabled to bring in any item in a deficiency appropriation bill that that committee saw fit to bring in. The Chair now has no misgivings on that decision. The matter now before the Chair raises a different question from the one that was before the House on yesterday; but the identical question that is before the Chair at this time was before a Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the 9th of last The identical question was then raised that is February. before the Chair now, and upon the identical subject. The Chairman at that time held that the item in the deficiency bill was a change of current law, in that it enlarged the limitation that was made in the regular appropriation bill for the maintenance of the Navy for the ensuing year by enlarging the limitation.

In view of the importance of the matter and in view of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations now has jurisdiction of all these matters, the Chair is disposed to let the House decide this question.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, the Chair mentioned the decision of last February. Was it not February 9, 1920, instead, before the new rule became effective?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the decision was made on February 1921. The Chair submits to the Committee of the Whole the question of order and asks the committee to decide it. The question is, Is this item in the bill in order?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is this the item in the bill? The CHAIRMAN. The item in the bill.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May we have the item again reported'

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the item in controversy.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS.

Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts: The limitation specified under this head in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921 on expenditures for pay of chemists and for clerical, inspection, and messenger service in the supply and accounting department of the navy yards and naval stations and disbursing offices for the fiscal year 1921, is further increased by $400,000.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I regret that I did not hear the discussion on this item. Now that this matter is up, to be decided as a parliamentary question, I should be very glad if the gentleman from Iowa would be kind enough to go briefly over the ground again in regard to it. Is this in fact a deficiency?

Mr. GOOD. This item is to increase the limit of the amount fixed to be expended out of the appropriation for certain pur-poses. That limit was fixed in an appropriation bill for this fiscal year.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And this proposes to raise that limit?

Mr. GOOD. To raise that limit. It comes from the same committee that reported the other item, the committee that has exclusive jurisdiction of the appropriation. It has been held repeatedly that an appropriation for a future year may be made available for the current year. This does not go as far as the converse of that rule goes, but simply provides that for this year that limitation is modified to that extent.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman. Mr. PADGETT. The provision in the past bill was legislation that was adopted by the House?

Mr. GOOD. It was a limitation, not legislation.
Mr. PADGETT. But a limitation on the amount that can be expended is legislation, and that legislation limited the amount that could be expended for that purpose. Now, this provision changes that legislation in the former bill by increasing the amount that may be expended.

It is necessary and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order. If the point of order is insisted upon, it is well taken, but I hope the gentleman will withdraw it.

Mr. GOOD. I also hope the gentleman will withdraw it, because what we are trying to do is to square the books of the previous administration.

Mr, PADGETT. I do not think we ought to overrule the rules of the House, for this is clearly subject to a point of order. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point, because it is a very important matter.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the Chair and the committee to this very question as it arose in February. The gentleman will remember that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gallivan] attempted to increase this amount-

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in order to stop debate I will concede the point of order on this item, and gentlemen can take care of their own deficiencies in the Navy Department. I am tired of standing up, and, without making any reflection, trying to square things up for the former administration and take the blame of it. You can settle it with the former Secretary in any way you please.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fuel and transportation: For coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same; maintenance and general operation of machinery of naval fuel depots and fuel plants; water for all purposes on board naval vessels; and lee for the cooling of water, including the expense of transportation and storage of both, $6,000,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee in reference to this item for fuel and transportation. Does this mean that there is a deficiency of $6,000,000 for fuel for the Navy?

Mr. GOOD. The estimate was for $6,600,000. The estimate of the former Secretary of the Navy for fuel and oil for the whole year was $10,000,000. Congress granted the $10,000,000. Then the Secretary came back and asked for a deficiency of $20,000,000 more, and Congress granted that, and that fuel has practically all been used. There has been a good deal of cruising during the last year. It is claimed that sending the fleet to the Pacific to Valparaiso and the Atlantic Fleet as far as Peru made very expensive voyages, and then there is the increased cost of coal. As I say, the original estimate was $10,000,000, and we have appropriated with this appropriation $36,000,000.

All for coal, or some for oil?

Mr. GOOD, Coal and oil.

Mr. WALSH. I have not had an opportunity to examine the hearings, and I would like to ask the gentleman if there was any explanation given as to this great discrepancy between the estimates made and the coal and oil consumed?

Mr. GOOD. As I recall, the explanation was this, that originally the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts asked for $37,-000,000, but the Secretary cut the estimates down to $10,000,000, and Congress granted just what the Secretary asked for. Now, while there was that great cut in the estimates of the bureau by the Secretary there was no cut in the sailings or maneuver-ings of the fleet. The fleet, I suppose, was under more exten-sive sailings than ever before in a time of peace, and then there was an increased cost of fuel.

Mr. WALSH. How many new fuel depots were established? Mr. GOOD. I do not know; I do not know as there were any. Mr. WALSH. They have been establishing some since the war, have they not?

Mr. GOOD. There are 15 delivery points as shown by the table which was placed in the RECORD. I can not tell the gentleman whether any of them was established during the year or not.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman recall how much has been appropriated for next year's fuel supply?

Mr. GOOD. Seventeen million five hundred thousand dollars carried in the bill as it passed the House. They asked here for $6,600,000, and with the present program they will need it all. Inasmuch as the bill reported by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Kelley] was bottomed on the fact that some of the vessels would have to be tied up, the committee felt that it might as well commence to tie them up on the 1st of June as on the 1st of July.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that the consumption of fuel and oil is about on a par with that used by the Navy during the war. It may not be as much, but it looks as if-

Mr. GOOD. The fleet had many extensive sailings last year; they went as far as Guantanamo; then they sent them to the Pacific, and the Secretary of State took a naval vessel and went to South America; and, as I say, the sailings have been very extensive during the past year.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa what is contained in this item? Is it all for coal and oil, or does it cover all other activities?

Mr. GOOD. It covers some other activities; it covers some transportation charges, but the big items are for coal and for oil. The others are negligible when compared with the amount carried for coal and oil.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refund to James W. Elwell & Co., charterers of the United States ship Sterling, the excess freight charges collected from A. Iseline & Co. on 10,000 bags of coffee and 672 bags of castor beans, arriving in New York on September 25, 1918, which sum was turned over to the Navy and deposited in the Treasury to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts," $163.79.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Is the gentleman going to speak on the bill?
Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Not on this particular feature.
Mr. GOOD. I shall have to object, Mr. Chairman, at this

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to unnecessarily continue the discussion of the Shipping Board matter, but this scrap was started by the Republican side of the Chamber and has been continued by the opposition.

Last Friday the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, in charge of this bill, launched into a very bitter attack on the Shipping Board and President Wilson because of alleged inactivity in regard to Shipping Board matters. During the discussion that followed attention was called to the fact that although President Wilson appointed a full board, yet they were not confirmed by the Senate, with the result that since last December there has been no legally constituted Shipping Board, and that although since March 4 President Harding, of course, has had full authority to appoint a board of his own, yet up to this time he has made no appointments whatever. I called attention to the fact that according to statements given out in the press from time to time the appointment of the Shipping Board was being held up awaiting the pleasure of James A. Farrell, the president of the United States Steel Corporation, to whom had been tendered the chairmanship of this board, and that we have now gone for 2 months and 20 days awaiting the pleasure of Mr. Farrell.

In reply the gentleman from Iowa stated that Mr. Farrell had been picked by the press, but that he did not know what was in the mind of the President as to whom he would select for the chairman of that board. The facts are that many, many weeks ago it was authoritatively given out at the White House that the President had definitely decided to appoint either James A. Farrell, the president of the United States Steel Corporation, or R. A. C. Smith, of the Ward Steamship Line, as chairman of the board, and it was further stated in the same connection, in substance, that the President had even then decided upon all of the other members of the board and that the full board would be announced as soon as the selection of the chairman was definitely determined. Many similar statements have appeared in the press from time to time, and it was recently reported that Mr. Farrell had agreed to accept the appointment. I inquired what impelling necessity there was appointment. I inquired what impering necessity there was to await the pleasure of Mr. Farrell and what there was so peculiar about the situation that justified a continued and persistent delay in the appointment of the board until such a time as it would suit the convenience of Mr. Farrell to assume charge of this important board. The gentleman from Iowa said that it was very unfortunate that there should be any criticism that might embarrass the President at this time. I certainly have no disposition to embarrass the President, but it comes with poor grace from the Republican side to talk about embarrassing the President. It is a strange doctrine that is invoked, to the effect that it is in order for Republican Members to criticize the former President and refuse to recognize the difficult conditions that existed during the war emergency, but that it is all wrong for a Democrat to say anything that might embarrass the present President in time of peace. I said this discussion had been continued by the opposition. What I said discussion had been continued by the opposition. Friday seems to have gotten under the skin of some people, to the extent that the administration court journal, the Washington Post, yesterday had a double-column editorial in which it undertook to defend the appointment of Mr. Farrell.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Walsh). The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. consent that the gentleman may continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. This editorial states:

In the course of debate in the House on the deficiency appropriation bill some Democratic Members took occasion to comment caustically upon the delay in naming the new Shipping Board and to criticize President Harding for his efforts to induce James A. Farrell, president of the United States Steel Corporation, to accept the chairmanship. Sarcastic inquiry was made why it was necessary to hold up the nominations of other members of the board while the President is trying to secure the services of Mr. Farrell, "head of one of the greatest monopolies in the world; and one which would be most vitally concerned in the expansion of shipping operations."

In the case of Mr. Farrell the policy of the administration with respect to appointment to office is well illustrated. He is now the executive head of the greatest business corporation in the United States, and has demonstrated his ability to manage it successfully. The greatest corporation is the Government itself, and the President is understood to be desirous of securing the services of this genius to take charge of an important branch of the people's business.

And here comes the crux of the proposition to which I wish to direct my remarks; the said editorial continues:

If Mr. Farrell can be induced to take command of the Shipping Board, and will bring from his private capacity to his public office an ambition to expand the shipping industry of the United States, he will, indeed, fully justify the President's judgment in selecting him. Captains of industry, finance, and commerce, men who have won success in their individual affairs, and are animated by an ambition to serve, are preferable as public officials to timeservers and politicians whose only wish is to hold the jobs and draw the pay.

No question is made at all about the ability of Mr. Farrell. We all concede that. We know that he has been a very successful business man, but, as is admitted by this editorial, another important requisite is the spirit with which the man would enter into the public service. Will he be patriotic, will he be unselfish, will be devote all of his great talents to the public good? The best way to determine whether a man will do that is to judge him by his course in that respect in the past. What has been the conduct of Mr. Farrell in this respect? As has been already stated, he is president of the United States Steel Corporation, which, if I am given time, I shall show by the highest authorities to be the greatest monopoly and trust in this country, and the one of all others that is doing most to retard readjustment and to hold prices up to an artificial level. Right along that line, the Federal Reserve Board in a review of conditions issued on May 1 gives the high price of steel as one of the reasons that is retarding readjustment and preventing a return to normal prices. On April 30 last the Federal Trade Commission brought a very strong indictment against the United States Steel Corporation, charging that it is unjustly and unlawfully holding up prices of commodities which it manufactures and is doing much to retard readjustment. I wish I had time to read all of that terrific indictment laid against the United States Steel Corporation by the Federal Trade Commission.

However, I shall take time to direct attention to some features of this formal complaint issued by the Federal Trade Commission against the United States Steel Corporation and 11 of its subsidiary companies:

Commission against the United States Steel Corporation and 11 of its subsidiary companies:

The complaint was issued under the Clayton antitrust act and the law establishing the commission, and the commission's announcement said the case was "an outgrowth of conditions complained of by more than 2,700 manufacturers of steel in the Chicago, Duluth, and Birmingham districts, by legislatures of three States, by several municipalities, and by chambers of commerce and many business organizations throughout the United States."

The Pittsburgh plus price is described at length in the commission's announcement, which says that under it "all steel, except rails, wherever made, and whether made in United States Steel Corporation plants or by independents, its soid at the f. c. b. Pittsburgh price, plus an amount equivalent to the freight to point of destination," and as an illustration says that this "means that the Gary steel fabricator who runs his own truck to the Gary, Ind., steel mill and purchases steel manufactured at that plant must pay the price charged in Pittsburgh plus an amount equaling the freight rate from Pittsburgh to Gary."

The complaint is not limited, however, to the alleged use of this device. It charges specifically that the Steel Corporation "owns and controls the ultimate iron ore supply in the United States" and that because of "its power and influence through the last percentage of the steel manufacturing business done by it and supported by it, its consequent potential power to embarrass or destroy its competitors by undely lowering its price schedules is tantamount to the naming by the Steel Corporation of prices that are to be charged by all the steel manufacturers in the United States."

The charge is also made that the Steel Corporation "for at least seven years has issued from time to time price quotations and schedules covering rolled steel manufactured by its subsidiaries and that these quotations are adopted by all of the respondent subsidiaries and their competitors substantially as t

That it likewise owns and controls coal mines and limestone quarries necessary in the manufacture of steel.

That of the total production in the United States of the following items respondents manufacture and sell approximately 47 per cent of billots, blooms, sheet and tin plate bars, rails, plates and sheets, structural fabrics, bars, and the like, and approximately 60 per cent of other steel products.

That the Steel Corporation, through its subsidiaries, controls and utilizes 145 plants, principally in Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Alabama, Kentucky, West Virginia, Illinois, Indiana, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Kansas, California, and Washington.

The complaint also sets out that the Steel Corporation has capital stock outstanding of the par value of $868,583,600 with a book value exceeding $1,500,000,000, and that it has through its respondent subsidiaries gross assets aggregating considerably more than $2,000,000,000, It is claimed that the Steel Corporation does an annual business amounting approximately to $1,500,000,000.

Taking up the "Pittsburgh plus price" in detail, the complaint says that this price is that which Pittsburgh manufacturers must pay respondents for rolled steel at Pittsburgh and that purchasers in other cities, except Birmingham, Ala., must pay this price plus the freight rate to the city of manufacture from Pittsburgh irrespective of where the steel is manufactured.

The price at Birmingham, Ala., the complaint says, is $5 a ton more than the Pittsburgh steel manufactured at Birmingham at much less cost than at Pittsburgh.

It is alleged in the complaint that use of the Pittsburgh plus price enables Pittsburgh steel manufacturers to procure substantially 50 per cent of the steel manufacturing growth of other sections of the country; that the price and that this is arbitrarily arrived at notwithstanding that steel is manufactured at Birmingham at much less cost than at Pittsburgh is seel manufactures to procure substanti

I presume that it is conceded that the Federal Trade Commission is pretty good authority, because in his address to Congress on April 12 President Harding called attention to the fact that he had called upon the Federal Trade Commission for their review of the situation and the reasons therefor. In view of the fact that the Federal Trade Commission specifically points out the United States Steel Corporation as one of the agencies that is preventing readjustment, let us see what President Harding said in that respect:

President Harding said in that respect:

I have asked the Federal Trade Commission for a report of its observations, and it attributes, in the main, the failure to adjust consumers' cost to basic production costs to the exchange of information by "open-price associations," which operate, evidently, within the law, to the very great advantage of their members and equal disadvantage to the consuming public. Without the spirit of hostility or haste in accusation or prediteering, some suitable inquiry by Congress might speed the price readjustment to normal relationship, with helpfulness to both producer and consumer. A measuring rod of fair prices will satisfy the country and give us a business revival to end all depression and unemployment.

That is substantially the same language employed by the Federal Trade Commission with specific reference to the United States Steel Corporation in its recent complaint against that corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has again expired.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object. I dislike very much to do this, but we must get along with this bill and must confine our debate to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

For reimbursement to the International Mercantile Co. for shortage in a shipment of green peas, cargo of the steamship Harrisburg, arriving at Liverpool, England, from New York, July 2, 1918, freight on the full amount of the shipment having been turned over to the Navy and deposited in the Treasury to the credit of "Miscellaneous receipts," $121.52.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee whether the name of the concern mentioned here should not be the International Mercantile Marine Co.?

Mr. GOOD. The name in the bill is just as it was submitted in the estimate. The gentleman may be right about the correct name of the corporation.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am quite sure that is the corporate

Mr. GOOD. I would not want to take the responsibility of changing it, because that is just as it was submitted. It may be the International Mercantile Marine Co. or it may be the name here. I do not know. If it is not correct, it will be corrected in the Senate.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, what I want to say is in regard to an item which we have passed. I did not have all of my data at the time the item was under consideration, and I want to offer an amendment on page 16, at the end of line 4, as a new paragraph, for the purpose of continuing the passport bureaus.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. GOOD. There was an amendment offered and somebody made a point of order on it.

Mr. RAKER. That point of order, I think, was thoughtlessly made and I hope to return to that at this time. I have before me a letter from the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco showing the situation there. I have received a letter from Secretary Hughes yesterday on the subject, which I took up with him in regard to the matter. It shows that the Government will be the gainer, in effect, by maintaining these passport They are for the benefit of the traveling business public, for their convenience, and where there is no extra expense, and where the Government is at no expense it seems as though we ought to benefit the public if we can do it under the circumstances. I therefore ask unanimous consent to return to page 16, line 4, for the purpose of offering the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not hear the gentleman's request.

Mr. RAKER. My request is for unanimous consent to return to page 16, line 4, for the purpose of offering an amendment, which I ask to have read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to return to page 16, line 4, and gives notice that if permission is granted he will offer an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object. Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I am being accused of doing it thoughtlessly, and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. RAKER. May I have the privilege of having the amend-

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the amendment may be reported for information. Is there objection?

Mr. GOOD. Well, it is just the regular estimate for all these

Mr. RAKER. Yes.
Mr. GOOD. That is already in the RECORD.
Mr. RAKER. Then may I have unanimous consent to have printed, because of the importance of the matter, the letter I received from the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, and also the letter from Secretary Hughes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting a letter from the California Chamber of Commerce and also a letter from the Secretary of State with reference to passport control. Is there objection? Mr. BLANTON. As that will he

Mr. BLANTON. As that will help our colleague out very materially, personally I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. May I have a half minute to put the record

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks to proceed for one-half minute to put the record straight. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAKER. The remark of the distinguished gentleman

The letter of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce and the letter of Secretary Hughes are as follows:

SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, May 4, 1921.

Hon. John E. Raker, M. C.,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir: Because Congress failed to include the necessary appropriation in the legislative, executive, and judiciary bill for the continuance of the San Francisco passport agency, the local office will be closed after June 30 unless provision is made in the present deficiency appropriation bill for its maintenance.

Considering the fact that all trans-Pacific travelers leaving from this coast conclude their passport arrangements in San Francisco, and that it is now possible to obtain a passport in three days, whereas under the old arrangement confusion and loss of time resulted, we believe that the future operation of the San Francisco office is absolutely essentiated.

tial to the business interests of our country. Also, we wish to call to your attention the fact that statistics prove the various bureaus to be self-sustaining, the fees derived from applications being equal to and more than the cost of operation.

The loss of time and inconvenience to the public, either traveling for business or pleasure, that will result from the discontinuance of the San Francisco bureau will be keenly felt by the people of the Western States as well as by the country at large.

The foreign trade committee has instructed the writer to request you to carefully consider the matter, and earnestly hope that the recommendations made by the State Department will be incorporated in the present deficiency appropriation bill through your support and that of California's Representatives.

Thanking you in anticipation for your courtesy and cooperation, and with assurances of our highest consideration, we are,

Yours, very truly.

San Francisco Chamber of Commerce,

SAN FRANCISCO CHAMBER OF COMMERCE. D. K. GRADY, Secretary Foreign Trade Department.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 20, 1921.

The Hon. John E. RAKER, House of Representatives.

Sir: In response to your recent oral request for information relative to the desirability of securing appropriations for the continuance of the passport bureaus at New York and San Francisco, with the possible establishment of additional bureaus at other important centers, I am now pleased to inform you that estimates for this purpose have been forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to the Congress.

I am now pleased to inform you that estimates for this purpose have been forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury for transmission to the Congress.

In order that you may properly judge of the relative cost of maintenance as compared with the revenue of these bureaus, your attention is directed to the following tabulation, which shows the estimated number of applications to be taken and the cost of maintenance of each bureau. Perhaps the most striking feature in this connection, as you will observe, is the fact that the fees derived from the taking of passport applications at all of the bureaus would amount to as much as or more than their cost of maintenance. In other words, they may be considered as self-sustaining.

Location of bureau.	Number of applications (at $1 each).	Cost.
New York. San Francisco Chicago. Seattle. New Orleans.	41,094 5,109 5,600 1,200 5,000	$20,820 7,509 17,500 4,500 7,500
Total	58,003	57,820

Were the bureaus abolished, the major portion of those fees would be lost to the Government, as such work as the taking of applications for passports would devolve upon the clerks of Federal and State courts, which latter are allowed to retain these fees.

It may be remarked that no provision has been made for a bureau at Key West, Fla., as the Cuban legation has informed this department that no passports are now required for Americans entering Cuba from the United States.

You are aware of the great convenience to the public afforded by these agencies where timely information regarding the requirements of foreign governments is given out by specialized officials, and where it is possible to assemble all essential documents relating to the proof of nationality and the right of the applicant to possess an American passport. Confusion and loss of time are the inevitable result of intrusting such work to the clerks of courts, who are not specialized on the subject, and from whom applications arrive at the department in incomplete form.

Since the traveling public is subject to many delays, annovances, and complete form.

Since the traveling public is subject to many delays, annoyances, and expenses incidental to the existing passport requirements, I feel that it is desirable to afford such facilities at home as will ameliorate rather than multiply the hardships in this regard. As this can be done at a nominal expense, if not, indeed, without expense to the Government, I deem it very desirable that provision should be made therefor.

I have the honor to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

Charles E. Hughes.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

Capitol buildings: For work at the Capitol and for general repairs thereof, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1921, $12,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman intends to return to the subject on which he was speaking I shall have to object.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Well, I regret very much that the gentleman is unwilling for the House to hear what I have to say.

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will defer to some other time I have no objection to his speaking on the subject, but we must get along with this bill. I think the gentleman can see that. I want to enforce the rule on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Well, the gentleman has not enforced it up to date.

Mr. BLANTON. If the gentleman will move to strike out the words "and so forth," appearing in the paragraph, he can

Mr. GOOD. Possibly after we get through with the bill this afternoon and we have the time I shall not object.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Iowa will please, while this particular paragraph does not deal with this subject, yet the bill does, and the gentleman from Ohio considered it of sufficient importance to devote very considerable time to a discussion of Shipping Board matters under general debate at a time when I could get no time; the gentleman spoke at length upon this matter.

Mr. GOOD. I will say to the gentleman I have no objection to his speaking, but let us finish the bill, and if we get through in time the gentleman can continue his remarks this afternoon so far as I am concerned, but we must get along with this bill. We have had it for two days and are only about halfway through. I have no objection to the gentleman speaking, but I am afraid what the gentleman may say may invite some one to discuss the same question, and I hope the gentleman will withdraw his request.

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee. Do I understand the gentleman to object to my proceeding along that line now?

Mr. GOOD. Out of order, I am obliged to do so.

The Clerk read as follows:

General Land Office: For additional employees during the fiscal year 1922 at annual rates of compensation as follows: Law examiners—2 at $2,000 each, 4 at $1,800 each, 10 at $1,600 each; 4 clerks at $1,400 each; in all, $32,800.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the provision that it is not a deficiency, but is new legislation on a deficiency appropriation bill, not authorized by law. There is no authority of law for these new positions.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, the general law creating this department carries a provision for the employment of all necessary clerks to do the work. Since the last legislative bill was enacted a very great change has taken place with regard to the Land Office. About a year ago, or a little more, we placed on the statute books a law known as the oil leasing act, by which the public domain that contained oil should be leased under certain provisions and conditions.

Now, we discover that the demand for these oil lands has grown so rapidly that the department does not have the clerks and the force to protect its property. It does not have the force to protect the oil interests of the United States. It can not measure the oil. And so the Committee on Appropriations, considering it was a matter for 1922, thought the committee still had jurisdiction over this appropriation for 1922, and any time that it had failed to make proper appropriations for this department it could come in with a request for appropriations to carry on the work. As I stated a while ago-and this is the item to which I referred-when we reported out the legislative bill and came to this item it would have been in order to have inserted the words "to be immediately available." That is the rule of the House. If we had that authority then, when did it happen that the authority was taken from the Committee on Appropriations to report out a provision like this? Here is a force that is absolutely needed. It does not carry as much as was requested, but the Committee on Appropriations in the exercise of its rights under the law has reported out here an amount which is absolutely necessary to protect the property of the United States, the oil interests of the United States, and it is for a service that is authorized by law.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. On account of expediency the gentleman would not ask the expert parliamentarian now in the chair [Mr. Walsh] to overrule decision after decision that the chairman who has been in charge of this bill, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell], has upheld in numerous instances? In other words, every single one of these appropriations for 1922 the gentleman from Kansas has sustained a point of order against.

Mr. GOOD. And was about to submit the question to the House on one that had another feature in it, and when objection was made to that it was thought that the gentleman, of course, would raise the point of order on this provision, no matter whether it was needed or not, whether it would protect the interests of the Government or not, just because he felt that here was a point where he could, perhaps, get credit for saving some money-

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no.

Mr. GOOD (continuing). And, perhaps, might save some. I do not know.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman knows that I have been working right along with him in double harness in trying to save everything I could.

Mr. GOOD. Then the gentleman should stay with me and net get away by making points of order. I do not like to have a man who is with me pulling in the opposite direction. I want the gentleman to help push this thing through. It is a bill has already been passed.

matter that is needed. It is a matter that is authorized, and, having been authorized, the Committee on Appropriations, having jurisdiction of the subject matter, has in reporting the item brought the matter entirely within the broad rules of the House, although there may be some technical decisions against it.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] submit to an inquiry? Mr. GOOD. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there authority of law for employing law examiners and clerks in the General Land Office?

Mr. GOOD. The Chair is familiar with the provision of law which created the General Land Office as a bureau in the Interior Department. The general provision of law, section 169 of the Revised Statutes, says:

Each head of a department is authorized to employ in his department such number of clerks of the several classes recognized by law and such messengers, assistant messengers, copyists, watchmen, laborers, and other employees, and at such rates of compensation, respectively, as may be appropriated by Congress.

It left the matter up to Congress. We are here now with an appropriation fixing the amount of compensation of these em-

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair will note that in this deficiency bill this item provides for these additional employees during the year of 1922, and I call the attention of the Chair to the numerous decisions made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell] as Chairman of this committee on this bill in passing on just such items, where he has sustained the points of order. In behalf of uniformity of decisions I hope the Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, without regard to the merits of the particular paragraph now pending, but merely upon the question of the point of order, I think at this time probably there should be read a ruling that was made by Mr. TILSON, the gentleman from Connecticut, while in the chair in February, 1920-I think it was-on a deficiency bill. He held as follows:

It has been shown that this appropriation sought to be made in this paragraph is authorized by existing law. It is also shown that it was appropriated for in a previous act, now current law. The question now is whether the present paragraph is a deficiency item appropriate to be included in a deficiency bill.

A deficiency, as used in this House, as was so ably explained by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. Dewalt, means a deficiency in an appropriation heretofore made. In the practice of the House deficiency bills have always carried the items for the expense of carrying on the different departments of the Government for the time intervening before the end of the current fiscal year. It has been the practice in the House that each appropriating committee, other than the Committee on Appropriations, shall bring out one appropriation bill each fiscal year. The Appropriation Committee brings out the sundry civil bill, one District appropriation bill, one fortifications bill, one legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, one pension appropriation bill, and such number of deficiency bills as may be necessary to take care of the deficiencies arising from lack of sufficient appropriations in all the other bills for carrying on the various activities of the Government to the end of the fiscal year.

Now, on yesterday, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blan-

Now, on yesterday, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] has stated, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell], the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on this bill, in passing upon a similar question, as will be found on page 1642 of the RECORD, stated:

stated:

The orderly procedure of making appropriations has been that certain bills are brought into the House in which appropriations are made for certain activities of the Government in a systematic way, Toward the close of the Congress it has always been the custom to bring in deficiency appropriation bills to provide for deficiencies. In the consideration of deficiency bills it has been invariably the ruling of the Chair to rule out of order amendments offered from the floor which were not strictly deficiency items, and also to rule that provisions of the bill which were not strictly deficiency items out of order. Such a ruling occurred on the 2d of February, 1920, when the then Chairman held that an item that was not a deficiency items and in order on a deficiency appropriation bill. As the Chair stated in the beginning, if it were an original proposition the Chair would be disposed to consider the matter in the light of the argument made by those who contend that the matter being within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations that committee could appropriate for an activity of the Government in any bill. But the last decision on the question, rendered in February, 1920, in a very well considered opinion after argument, held that an item was not in order on a deficiency appropriation bill that appropriated for the ensuing fiscal year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so for as this item is concerned, I regret

Now, Mr. Chairman, so for as this item is concerned, I regret the point of order has been made, because these employees, as shown in the hearings held by the committee, are necessary in connection with the oil leasing under charge of the Commissioner of Public Lands. But in view of the uniform holdings heretofore with reference to deficiencies, I think we are going very far, and we may get in trouble so far as orderly procedure in the House is concerned, if it should be held now that on a deficiency bill appropriations may be considered and made for an ensuing fiscal year and for which a regular supply

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanron] makes a point of order on the paragraph beginning on line 22, page 35, and ending on line 2, page 36, on the ground that it is not authorized by law and is not a deficiency. The Chair overrules the point of order that it is not authorized by law, because the gentleman from Iowa has pointed out that there is specific authority of law for the employment of this class of lawyers.

As to the point that this is not a deficiency item because it makes provision for the fiscal year 1922, the Chair feels that, in view of the fact that the permanent Chairman of the Committee of the Whole presiding on this bill has already passed on this question, notwithstanding the fact that the present occupant of the chair holds views that are not in accord with that ruling, he should follow the ruling which has heretofore been laid down, and will sustain the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. The Chair yesterday [Mr. Campbell of Kansas] in his ruling made some statement to the effect that if it were an original proposition his decision might be different, and the present occupant of the chair bases his ruling upon the ruling of the former occupant. I would like to address the Chair in regard to the real merits of this proposition, and ask, if it stood out by itself, independent of these old decisions, whether the gentleman would look at it as a proposition of merit?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the present occupant of the chair has already indicated that the decision rendered by the gentleman who occupied the chair in the discussion of the bill here tofore, the gentleman from Kansas, is not in accordance with the present occupant's view. But the present occupant feels that it is incumbent upon him to follow the rulings that have heretofore been made on similar items, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that that opinion does not appear to be in accord with anybody's ruling, respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?
Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is that debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is debatable under the 5-minute rule. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I want to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman. Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee: Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take five minutes, but I simply want to call the attention of the House to what may be the effect if the ruling of the Chair is not sustained.

I am sure you are all familiar, having been here on yesterday, with the arguments that were made in favor of the position now taken by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good]. As I stated at the outset, I am not influenced in what I say now by any opposition to this particular provision, because I think these clerks are necessary. But there is a legal and parliamentary way in which these clerks can be provided, and certainly because it is desired to provide additional clerks for the next fiscal year to the Land Office, however much they may be needed, the Members of the House are not going to overturn all parliamentary precedents in order to provide them. The Committee on Rules is still functioning and this can be brought before the House without overturning all parliamentary precedents.

Now, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell], in a wellconsidered decision, held that a point of order such as is now pending was well taken, and he based that decision on precedents, and no one offered then, and no one has offered now, the ruling of any previous Chairman or Speaker to the contrary.

Complaint has been made that a great deal of power has been conferred on the Committee on Appropriations because of the consolidation of appropriations into one committee. I want to say to you, gentlemen, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, that if you reverse the ruling of the Chair in this respect and make it possible for the Committee on Appropriations to bring in here on any deficiency bill that it may choose appropriations involving not deficiencies but expenditures for an ensuing fiscal year which should have been carried in the regular supply bill for that year, you are adding to that power. This Congress has passed its regular supply bills, and the only way in which appropriations can be made in an orderly and systematic way, the only way whereby Members can know just what is being appropriated for the next ensuing fiscal year is by following the plain and uniform custom of the House and confining appropriations for the ensuing year to the particular bill to which they apply. When you open the doors, as is sought to be done here, and give the committee the right to propose on a deficiency bill appropriations which are not deficiencies for an ensuing fiscal year, you are going very far afield, and, in my judgment, if the House should take that course on this occasion it will regret it in the very near future.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman indicated that there was just one decision on this subject, besides that of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who stated that if it vere a first proposition he might rule another way. tleman from Kansas in deciding that matter in the first instance based his decision upon the well-considered decision rendered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Tulson] no longer ago than February of this year, a very well considered decision, and that was based upon the uniform decisions of this House for years past. I am surprised that the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good], after having taken a position in this House for years, since he has been here—especially since I have been here, for four years—in behalf of orderly procedure, in behalf of following the open, blazed trail and not jumping off here and there into the woods without a road, in behalf of following the distinct rules of the House concerning appropriations, I am surprised that now, through expediency, because he wants a certain item to stay in a certain bill through expediency alone, he seeks and he asks the House to overturn not one decision but decision after decision on this very bill, rendered by the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], who is one of the leading parliamentarians of this House; and he based his decision, I say, upon decisions of other leading parliamentarians, such as the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Kansas said if it were an original proposition he would hesitate a long time before taking view adverse to that presented by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; he was trying to appease the gentleman when ruling against him. I have heard judges on the bench, who were going to decide against me, beat about the bush for about half an hour trying to appease me, and, on the contrary, when they were going to decide in my favor, to appease my opponent, do the same thing. [Laughter.]

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman from Kansas is not that kind of

TILSON ]

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; but it is awfully hard for a Chairman to decide against the distinguished gentleman from Iowa. and it is awfully hard for the House to go against him. If it was not for upholding the orderly processes of the House and for following the rules of the House, I would be almost inclined to vote with the gentleman myself, even though he seeks to overturn these decisions through expediency. But expediency is one thing and following the rules of the House of Representatives is another thing, What are you going to do-act on expediency or are going to uphold the sacred rules of the House of Representatives which form the only safe bulwark that new Members have? They are our only safeguard. If you overturn. the rules, we all might as well quit and go home.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I have just a little embarrassment in discussing this question. Not that I have any desire to have decisions I have heretofore made sustained by the House. On mature reflection, after the decision of yesterday, I am convinced that that decision was absolutely correct, and that to overrule it now would open up a condition in the House of Representatives that would give us chaos in the years that are to come. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. If the House were given the opportunity, it could appeal to the Committee on Rules to give the House an opportunity to change the rules.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; they could do that. And if it is important to put an item in a bill contrary to the general rules of the House, that may be done. It has been done before and it will be done again. But let me show you what this would do if the Chair were not sustained on this decision. A deficiency appropriation bill could be brought in at the close of a session and provide for practically every activity of the Government. It could provide ships for the Navy; it could provide fortifications; it could provide for every activity of the Interior Department; it could provide appropriations for the State Department for the ensuing fiscal year. There would be no distinction whatever between a deficiency appropriation in the deficiency bill and an appropriation for the maintenance of any activity of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year. [ApMr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The deficiency bill would practically be a reconsideration bill, would it not?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. It would be, practically. It would be a bill upon which could be placed any afterthought, any appeal from a former decision of Congress. In the final hours of the session any such matter could be placed upon a deficiency bill.

Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GOOD.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman for a

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman recalls that when the District of Columbia bill was up making appropriations for next year it carried an item which provided that that appropriation, which was intended for next year commencing on July 1, 1921, should be immediately available. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] being Chairman of the Committee of the Whole at the time, held that that was in order, because the Committee on Appropriations which reported the bill had authority to report appropriation bills. That was followed by a decision by my colleague from Iowa, Judge Towner, on the diplomatic bill, holding the same thing. If that is the case, why is not the converse true?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I was just coming to that phase of the situation in which the House of Representatives finds itself. Previously the Committee on Military Affairs brought in the Army appropriation bill. The Committee on Naval Affairs brought in the appropriation for the maintenance of the Navy. The Committee on Indian Affairs brought in its appropriation bill, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs brought in the bill for the Diplomatic and Consular Service. There were nine separate appropriating committees in the House. One committee could not trench upon the jurisdiction of any other committee, and the Committee on Appropriations could not bring in an item on a deficiency bill for the ensuing fiscal year. The rulings to that effect have been uniform throughout the years. A notable ruling was made by former Speaker Carlisle on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. WALSH). The time of the gentleman

has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Now, all power of appropriating committees has been consolidated in the Committee on Appropriations. That committee has jurisdiction over every appropriation, and under the logic of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Good] the Committee on Appropriations, having jurisdiction of appropriations for the ensuing year, may bring in appropriations for an activity of the Government for the ensuing year in a deficiency bill if they see fit. The effect of overruling the decision of the Chair at this time is to enable the Committee on Appropriations in the future to put on a deficiency bill any item they see fit even if it is not a deficiency item. Gentlemen, some of us hope to be here in years to come.

Mr. GOOD. You can not determine that on the floor as a matter of law. You can not make a point of order, because it is not a deficiency if it is for that year. There may be a surplus. As a matter of law the Chairmen have held right along that the Chair can not determine that it is not a deficiency, and if it is reported out by the committee having jurisdiction it is in

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not if it is for the ensuing fiscal

Mr. GOOD. I understand that; but the gentleman was talking about a broader sweep.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No; I was confining myself to that phase of the question.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman permit me further? I do not want to do anything that is going to do an injury to the whole system. The gentleman will admit that on the 1st day of July the Committee on Appropriations could bring in a deficiency for this very item.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; and that being true-

Mr. GOOD. But the gentleman contends that they can not do it on the 30th of June.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That being true, and the Government not in danger of suffering, that should be done in the interest of orderly procedure. We legislate for 110,000,000 peoabsolutely essential to procedure at all. If I were going to leave the House of Representatives immediately I might have but little concern about the rules of the House for its guidance in the future; but I hope to remain here for some years to come, and I am deeply concerned in the orderly procedure of the House of Representatives in the interest of good legislation. Therefore I hope that the decision of the Chair will be sus-

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. McKENZIE. Can the gentleman from Kansas tell us whether or not the appropriation for these particular places was carried in the legislative appropriation bill in former years?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not know, but even if it were that would not justify bringing in an appropriation on a deficiency bill for the ensuing fiscal year.

Mr. McKENZIE. I agree with the gentleman on that. Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, it is conceded on both sides of the House that the public service demands the substance of this appropriation upon which the point of order is made. That is conceded by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Byrns] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Campbell]. I would not vote to overrule the decision of the Chair [Mr. Campbell]. What is the Committee on Rules for? It could report a rule to the House which would make this item in the bill in order, giving what is evidently a majority of the House a chance to make this provision in order. It seems to me that the committee could be called together, as it frequently has been in the past during this Congress and former Congresses, and they could report a rule that I think that side of the House would vote for as well as this side of the House. That is the orderly way to do it, and that is what the Committee on Rules is for. [Ap-

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this proposition close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent that all debate close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the question before us is a parliamentary question. It does not go to the merits of the proposition. It would be an extremely unfortunate thing for the future of the House, no matter which party may be in control, if because of expediency the majority overthrows the parliamentary law. I do not know anything about the merits of this proposition, but I know that this item is subject to a point of order. I know that if the habit is once formed of appealing from the decision of the Chair, throwing the question into the vortex of a great body of 435 men, you never will have orderly procedure again. This question ought to be decided upon its parliamentary merits and not upon the merits of the proposition itself. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asks what is the Committee on Rules for? The Committee on Rules can bring in a resolution that will make this proposition in order. I am ready to meet with the Committee on Rules at any time. Of course, I shall not vote to make this proposition in order, but when you begin to decide points of order in this body on the ground of expediency you are treading a very dangerous road. The gentleman from Kansas, who was in the chair, was right in his ruling, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, now in the chair, was right in his ruling, and as a parliamentary proposition the rulings ought to be sustained.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Chairman, exactly the same question arose yesterday when a point of order was made to the provision with regard to the printing item, and then the occupant of the chair,

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, said this:

As the Chair stated in the beginning, if it were an original proposition the Chair would be disposed to consider the matter in the light of the argument made by those who contend that the matter being within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations that committee could appropriate for an activity of the Government in any bill.

That was the decision of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] when the District bill was up and the question was raised if it was in order to make the appropriation for next year immediately available. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Hicks] held that inasmuch as the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction of the subject matter and could report out that kind of a bill, that it was in order. Take the present provision, when the committee had its hearings last fall we were just commencing to operate under what was known as the oil leasing act, and when this provision was reached the Committee on Appropriations cut it in two; it only gave one-half of what it was thought they might get along with. But as the oil fields opened up and as drillings were made and a flood of applications came in, it became apparent that the Government was losing a great ple in the House of Representatives, and orderly procedure is many hundred thousands of dollars a year because it did not have an adequate force. So they come now and ask that we increase that amount, the same committee that cut the amount having jurisdiction of the appropriation and authority to report out a bill. But, because there are some old decisions along another line that conflict with this more recent decision of Mr. Hicks, the Chair was obliged to rule in the way he did, and is it not strange when the gentleman from Kansas indicated to the House that the old decision was wrong, that the present occupant of the chair-and there is no more active man on the floor of the House than the gentleman from Massachusetts-indicated by his ruling that he did not believe in his ruling and was compelled to make the ruling because the gentleman from Kansas made it yesterday and because a similar ruling had been made before.
